TALMAGE ON WASHINGTON.

ITS MORALS VERY MUCH IMPROVED.

A WANING ATTRACTION—FORMAL SUSPENSION OF DEACON HENRY S. ELMORE FOR GROSS IMMORALITY AND SIN—A PERFECT ADMINISTRATION BUT LOTS OF DRUNKEN CONGRESSMEN.

The public are getting it into their heads that there is a great deal more announcement than performance about Rev. Mr. Talmage, and as a Sunday morning entertainment, he shows signs of losing his power to draw. Notwithstanding the double attraction promised, viz., the formal expulsion of a wicked Deacon, and the exposure of the secret sins of the nation as originally discovered during personal explorations in the dens of vice of the great cities by the Pastor, the Tabernacle was not by any means crowded yesterday morning. The expulsion prelude was a very tame affair. "I am requested by the Sessions," said Mr. Talmage, previous to ordering the collection to be taken up, "to announce to the congregation that Henry S. Elmore, having been found guilty of gross immorality and sin, has been suspended from the membership and communion of this church." That was all. "Next Sabbath," continued the speaker, suddenly changing from deep lugubriousness into a broad grin, "I will preach a sermon in review of my critics, clerical and lay. I have been preaching now 21 years, and I have never before replied to anything that has been said against me. I propose to show what I think the work of a Christian minister ought to be, and how he ought to treat the evils of the day."

After "My country, 'tis of thee" had been sung, Mr. Talmage announced as his text Zachariah viii., 5: "The streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof." The perplexity of the audience was quickly dispelled by means of a description of a Gospelized city, in which children would be able to play ball in the streets without the protection of the Police. "I have laughed," said the speaker, "during the past six weeks to see clergymen going about with court-plaster, trying to conceal the sins which I have been probing. In morals I am an allopathist. I believe in giving a good stout dose first, and then applying the salve of the Gospel that Christ mixed. No man is more exhilarant in his hope of the future prosperity and goodness of our cities than I, but I believe they must be founded on exposure." The moral condition of the country was then discussed from the stand-point of the City of Washington. In the speaker's opinion the capital will be changed to the banks of the Mississippi or Missouri River in less than a century; but Washington is now the heart of the nation, sending out, with good blood, health, or with bad blood, disease, all over the land. It was a fascinating city to the speaker, and had, he thought, reached a higher morality than ever before. There were to be found the grandest achievements of sculpture, architecture, and painting. Mr. Talmage would put the brass doors of the Capitol against those of the Madeleine, of Paris; the Capitol itself against the Tulleries, or the Parliament House of London, and Luetz's paintings and Brumidi's frescoes against the best works of the old masters.

A joke dragged in at this point about back pay and Credit Mobilierism proving too stale for even a Tabernacle audience, the speaker went on to say that he had seen Washington under both phases, and its morals were 50 per cent. better when Congress was away. That "fetched them." The laughter was uproarious. "It is a bad thing," continued the speaker, "that our legislators leave their families at home. Man deprived of elevated female society is naturally a bear. Why, it is even said that ministers on vacation go to the Saratoga horse-races. On the other hand, I have been told of Congressmen who gave up the off-terms to prayer." Having thus reduced the audience to a condition of utter helplessness, the speaker rattled off a long list of criminal statistics, and gravely recorded his opinion that a beat of 10 miles in length was too much for a mounted policeman to cover. He then broke out, rhapsodically: "What an improvement has taken place since the day when rum-shops were in full blast in the National Capitol building and Congressmen went into them, before making a speech, for inspiration, and, after making a speech, for recuperation. Our thanks for removing them are due to Henry Wilson and a few others like him. During the war there were 100 gambling-houses and 500 professional gamblers in Washington. One of them boa-ted of having cleared in one year $1,500,000. A gambler once went to the Door-keeper of the House of Representatives and presented an order for the greater part of the salaries of the members. Now but 20 gambling-houses remain, the poorer class patronized by clerks of departments and employes of the Treasury, and the more expensive by Congressmen and Senators. The reporters of Washington are not so wide awake as ours, or they would show these men up. Dueling has been abolished also. There is no more stabbing of Senators for differences of opinion, no more drawing of knives and pistols, and unseemly brawls on the floor of the House. It is a matter of congratulation that to-day we have more Christian men at the head of departments than ever before, and that the Queen of American society, by her simplicity of attire, has done away with the extravagance in dress that was the shame of former Administrations, and that the wine-cup has been banished from the White House, showing that people may be jolly and yet be sober. [Applause.] Politics aside, there never has been a purer White House, less rum and tobacco, more Methodist hymns, and therefore a higher morality in it than to-day." [Great applause.]

The speaker said he would not have the question of church membership enter politics, but he did demand that good morals should be a qualification in an aspirant for office. A man who blasphemes is a law-breaker, and therefore not fit to make laws. An atheist is incapable of taking the necessary oath. A gambler is a violator of law. A libertine in office is an insult to every virtuous man in the United States. Voters should go through candidates with a lighted candle, and if any moral defect should appear should scratch their names off the ballot with the blackest kind of ink. Years ago men were sent to Congress, and nothing short of a grave-digger's spade was able to rid the world of their corruption. Some died of delirium tremens in a brothel, yet, in order to give some stone-cutter a job, monuments were voted to them. The speaker described the sort of monument they ought to have. On the stone should be cut fac-similes of gambling-chips, bottles and decanters in relief, and the unveiling should take place just at the approach of an August storm. Then, when the families who had been destroyed by the defunct were gathered around, and the appointed liar was delivering the eulogy, the black clouds should open and a bolt should strike into dust the monumental infamy.

Mr. Talmage got an impression in Washington that a national religion is needed—not a religion ruled by the State, but one founded on national morality. There was no use in trying to reform old politicians. The undertakers only were equal to that task. But the voters ought to be "Gospelized." God in the Constitution was not half so necessary as God in the hearts of the people. The day was surely coming when this would come to pass, but not in our time, in that of our children. The Revolution was to the nation the throes of birth; the war of 1812 was its measles; the war of the rebellion was a typhoid fever to clear out its system, and resumption on Thursday last was the settlement of the doctor's bill. [Applause.] Another fact that the speaker learned in Washington was the transitory nature of earthly greatness. Great men in Washington are great only for a short time. Those who were the cynosure of the nation's eyes 10 or 15 years ago, are now either dead and forgotten, or in disgrace. "Call the roll," he said, "of Lincoln's Cabinet. All dead but one, and he as bad as dead. [Applause.] Call the roll of Grant's Cabinet. Several worse than dead. [Renewed applause.] Political honor in this country is the privilege of being away from home amid temptations that have slain the mightiest, and then of being kicked into obscurity. One Senator died in Flatbush of idiocy brought on by dissipation. I saw a Congressman in Philadelphia sitting on the curb stone, and his wife trying to get him home. A Congressman from New-York was fished out of the Potomac drunk—the nearest he ever came to losing his life by cold water. [Laughter.] Delaware and Illinois Senators who died were chiefly celebrated for getting drunk." A third fact that the speaker noticed was that American politics are unfair to the best men. He would never forgive American politics for slaying Horace Greeley, than whom no purer or more self-sacrificing patriot ever existed. The remainder of the sermon consisted of a puff for a lady vocalist.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

This week, according to a custom of long standing among many of the evangelical denominations, will be observed in a majority of the churches of this City and Brooklyn as a week of prayer, with special services every evening. At the Central Methodist Church, in Seventh-avenue, two services will be held daily, at 4 and 8 o'clock P. M.; at the St. James' Methodist Episcopal Church, Madison-avenue, there will be services every evening, and at the Free Tabernacle Methodist Church, in Thirty-fourth-street, gospal temperance services by Francis Murphy and his co-workers. Not to be outdone in zeal by the followers of Wesley and Whitefield, nearly all the Baptist churches in the City announce a special observance of the week. At the Tabernacle Baptist Church, in Second-avenue, the interesting ceremony of baptism will be performed every evening after the sermon, and there will be prayer-meetings continuously throughout the week. The Murray Hill Presbyterian Church, Fortieth-street, will be lighted for special services every evening, as will also be the Central Baptist Church, in Forty-second-street. To these must be added the Union Evangelical services in the Eighteenth-Street Methodist Church, in which a number of prominent clergymen have combined their forces. Last evening Rev. Samuel Colcord preached; to-day, Rev. Joseph Odell; to-morrow, Rev. Dr. Tyng, Jr.; Wednesday, Rev. David Teed; Thursday, Rev. Dr. Bevan; Friday, gospel temperance services, conducted by Mr. C. W. Sawyer. In Brooklyn, the week will be observed even more generally than in New-York. Special services will be held at the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, in Fulton-street, corner of Gallatin-place, every evening, and at the New-York Avenue Methodist, the First-Place Methodist, the Warren-Street Methodist, the Tabernacle Baptist, Strong-Place Baptist, Hanson-Place Baptist, and other churches.

TOPICS OF THE PULPIT.

REV. DR. BELLOWS' FORTY YEARS MINISTRY—PAYING THE DEBT OF M'AULEY'S MISSION—THE GOSPEL OF THE MADISON-AVENUE REFORMED CHURCH.

Forty years ago, when Bond-street was the utmost northern boundary of the City, when Greenwich and Warren and Chambers streets were the abodes of the wealthy, and when the residents in the neighborhood of Canal-street thought their Sabbath-morning walk to church even in Chambers-street was fatiguing, and not to be repeated in the evening, Rev. Henry W. Bellows was ordained minister to the First Unitarian Society, whose church, after several changes of title, is now known as the Church of All Souls. The ceremony of his ordination took place Wednesday, Jan. 2, 1839, in the edifice then occupied by the society in Chambers-street. Although filled with the enthusiasm wroughts in him by the teachings of Channing, and commended by that eminent divine, the venerable Rev. Henry Ware, and Dr. Dewey, the young minister was at first coldly treated by some of the best members of his congregation; and it was not until after he had been with them for several years that they transferred to him the love in which they had held their former Pastor, Dr. Ware. The celebration was had yesterday of the fortieth anniversary of Dr. Bellows' ordination. A large congregation was present at the morning service, and the church wore a festal garb. The front of the lectern was handsomely decorated with smilax, fir, and evergreen wreaths, surrounding two feather ferns forming a cross, while on either side of the pulpit, was a mass of artistically-arranged pampas-grass, ferns, and evergreens. At the middle of the round arch framing the alcove at the rear of the pulpit was a handsome star of evergreen, from which trailed two vines—one to each side of the shell-shaped sounding-board above the lectern, and thence to the grasses and ferns banked in and around large vases. Ropes of evergreen depended in great and graceful festoons from the roof almost to the pews, and were wound gracefully about the front of the choir loft. The gas-fixtures were converted into miniature trees by the use of vines and leaves, amid which shone clusters of scarlet berries.

The address delivered by Mr. Bellows was a long and carefully-written review of the history of the society up to the time when it took possession of its present home, at the corner of Fourth-avenue and Twentieth-street. In its course he spoke feelingly of the ministers who have officiated in his place, and recalled to the minds of his hearers some of the men and women, long since dead, who, acting earnestly as members of the society, contributed to the growth of Unitarianism in this City, and its spread from here to the West. For All Souls has been a propagandist church, and many, if not most, of the Unitarian ministers outside of New-England claim to have received their earliest impulse from it, either through the sermons of its Pastor or his writings. Dr. Bellows referred earnestly to the help given him in the earlier years of his ministry by the deceased members, whose names he reverently uttered. His discourse was discursive in the extreme, and he made long pauses in his recital of the history of his society to comment upon the religious condition of this City at various times and on the character and methods of the Pastors whose names he mentioned. In briefer form, the history of the First Unitarian Society may be thus given: It was founded in May, 1819, and its organization was perfected in the following Summer. It was incorporated in November of the same year. Its place of worship owned by the society was situated in Chambers-street. Rev. Henry Ware became its Pastor in 1821, and occupied its pulpit for 15 years. He was reserved in demeanor, and sensitive, and in 1836, feeling that he was not performing the work he desired to do, and which he considered the society should do, he resigned, and retired, against the wish of the congregation. For two years the pulpit was filled by Dr. Foliey, who was Mr. Bellows' instructor in German and gymnastics at the academy which he attended before going to Harvard. In November, 1838, Dr. Bellows was on a visit to this City, and had lodgings in Greenwich-street, near the Battery, in the same house in which the venerable Dr. Dewey lived with his family. The First Unitarian Society was then in need of a minister, but Dr. Bellows was not a candidate. Dewey got him home. "Sincere," he replied, "of course he's sincere. There's no people on the hill at 25 cents a head, that's $600. He's sincere $600 worth." Two days after making that remark his view of Murphy changed, and he signed the pledge, and has continued to sign it into the temperance field himself. Capt. Cyrus Sturdevant, "Tom" Pitman, Eccles Robinson, Rev. Dr. J. D. Fulton, and Prof. Evans, an ex-tragedian, also delivered addresses. Their pathetic recitations, singing by George S. Weeks, and more addresses, and then the services were brought to a close by pledge signing. Mr. Murphy conducted a meeting in the evening at the Thirty-fourth-Street Methodist Tabernacle, where he will hold meetings every afternoon and evening during the week. The members of the American Temperance Union listened in Clarendon Hall yesterday afternoon to the stories of reformation told by the converts of the Christian Home for Intemperate Men, and to an address by Dr. Remington. The widow Van Cott returned to the pulpit of the Willett-Street Methodist Church yesterday, and entertained the congregation with a "love feast" in the morning, in which the Price Praying Band participated. The temperance question was also discussed in the evening by the Ladies' West Side Temperance Union in the Bleecker Building. Mrs. Marie Antoinette Natalis Pollard presided, and delivered the opening address. Mrs. Nesbitt and others also spoke. C. W. Sawyer, of the Young Men's Christian Association, conducted his usual temperance meeting in the Park Theatre last evening, drawing a fair attendance.

THE MANY CAUSES OF A WOMAN'S DEATH.

Deputy Coroner Cushman yesterday made an autopsy of the remains of Mrs. Catharine Dennedy, who died at Roosevelt Hospital, as was supposed from violence received at the hands of her husband, James Dennedy, a longshoreman, residing at No. 502 West Thirty-second-street. The post-mortem showed that death was due to jaundice, Bright's disease of the kidneys, and scirrhosis of the liver, resulting from excessive intemperance. There were no marks of violence on the body, and the discolorations were from old bruises of a trifling character.

THE FROZEN HUDSON RIVER.

BUSINESS AND PLEASURE ON THE ICE

THE ICE-CUTTERS READY FOR THE HARVEST—THE FIELDS ALL PLANED—THE ICE-FISHERMEN AT WORK—READY FOR RACING WITH THE ICE-YACHTS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Jan. 5.—In the next 30 days, if the cold weather continues, 3,000,000 tons of ice will be cut from the frozen surface of the Hudson River, within a space of 75 or 100 miles, and stacked in the many ice-houses on either bank. All day yesterday hundreds of men and boys and horses were busy at various points planing the crystal surface, and to-morrow, north of Rhinebeck, the harvesting of the ice will begin. Invigorating work it is, and the ice-cutters are cheerful and boisterous fellows. The ice is hard and thick enough, and the northward trains on the Hudson River Railroad are carrying men and boys to the ice-fields. They are getting jobs as soon as they apply for them. There is no prospect of a poorly-supplied ice market next Summer, for the outlook for ice was never better than it is now. The Knickerbocker Ice Company has already begun to cut, near Schodack, and all the other companies will be at work to-morrow, and as the moon will be full for several nights it is more than likely that there will be night and day gangs employed, for no opportunity will be lost to make a quick harvest. Besides ice-cutting another trade is carried on on the frozen surface of the Hudson. Hundreds of ice fisherman have already staked out their fishing grounds, and handsome striped bass, perch, and frost-fish are being sent to the markets. The catch, beginning so early, is much larger than was expected.

But not only business thrives on the frozen river; pleasure has its place there to. The ice-yachtsmen were busy all day Saturday putting their novel crafts in trim, and many of the yachts were placed upon the ice. Here at Poughkeepsie a large amount of money is invested in ice-yachts, big handsome crafts, elegantly constructed, having wire rigging, nickle-plated iron work, and timbers and railings and runner-planks made of the most durable and costly woods. There is not a yacht in the fleet that can not make a mile a minute in a stiff breeze. The Commodore of the Poughkeepsie Ice-Yacht Club is Mr. John A. Roosevelt, who is a thorough-going ice-yachtsman in every respect, and he owns the largest and best appointed ice-yacht in the world, called the Icicle. She carries a cloud of canvas, and glides along over the smooth surface at terrific speed. She was built for racing purposes, and is supplied with costly robes and blankets for the comfort of the voyage. The Vice-Commodore of the club is Theodore V. Johnston, the Treasurer is Dr. Guy C. Bayley, and the Secretary Thomas H. Ransom. The Regatta Committee is composed of Hudson Taylor, Henry S. Frost, and William C. Arnold. The yachts owned by the club are as follows, all sloop rigged:

Yacht.	Owner.
Avalanche	E. Harrison Sanford.
Advance	E. Harrison Sanford.
Cyclone	Henry Bergh, Jr.
Ella	Theodore V. Johnston.
Echo	George Collingwood.
Flying Dutchman	William H. Roe.
Gracie	John A. Roosevelt.
Gypsie	James N. Winslow.
Haze	Aaron Innis.
Hail	Aaron Innis.
Icicle	John A. Roosevelt.
Jessie	William H. Roe.
Ice-Interface	Oliver H. Booth.
Snow Flake	Charles R. Forrest.
Sappho	A. E. Whiting.
Snow Bird	Henry Bergh, Jr.
Norseman	E. Harrison Sanford.
Viking	E. Harrison Sanford.
Viva	E. Harrison Sanford.
Fairy	T. H. Ransom.
Zip	T. H. Ransom.

The Haze is a wonderful yacht, her sailing qualities being the admiration of the whole fleet, and she has already won several prizes. Down at Newburg there is another fleet of ice-yachts, owned by the New-Hamburg Ice-Boat Club, of which Irving Grinnell is Commodore, J. R. Lawson Vice-Commodore, F. A. M. Van Wyck Secretary, P. Le Roy Treasurer, and W. Losee Measurer. The vessels belonging to the club are as handsome as those owned by the Poughkeepsie Association, and are designated as follows:

FIRST CLASS.

Yacht.	Owner.
Zephyr	J. R. Lawson.
Quickstep	W. Leroy.
Zig Zag	J. Le Roy and H. Millard.
Flying Cloud	Irving Grinnell.
Fly Away	Irving Grinnell.
Phantom	P. A. M. Van Wyck.
Scud	J. F. Satterthwaite.
Zero	P. Le Roy.

SECOND CLASS.

Qui Vive	Charles Le Roy.
Dart	M. Hughes.
Whiff	I. Grinnell.
Boreas	I. Grinnell.
Puff	I. Grinnell.
Meteor	J. F. Satterthwaite.
Comet	J. F. Satterthwaite.

The Regatta Committee is composed of Philip Schuyler, of the New-York Yacht Club; John Le Roy and Henry Van Wyck. Positions for the start in the three regular races of the club have already been drawn. No delay will be experienced on the morning of any regular regatta. The first race will be "The Owners' Race," then "The Two Masters' Race," second class, to be followed by the "Non-owners' race," all of which will be called in the above order just as soon as the ice will permit. The club has also repeated the challenge to the Poughkeepsie Club of three years ago to sail for the pennant held by the latter, and New-Hamburg is eager to wrest this prize from her sister club, therefore the next struggle will be exciting. The best of feeling pervades both clubs, and as the prospects are very bright for almost immediate sport, there is visible the greatest activity and anxious preparation. The ice is in excellent condition for racing, much here and at New-Hamburg, and in all probability the races for both clubs will be ordered on early next week. On Fishkill Flats Saturday morning a heavy squall struck an ice-boat under full sail and drove her over the top of an "ice-hummock." The helmsman was hurled out, and rolled over the ice a long distance, but was unhurt. The boat was righted, her sails reefed, and the jolly voyager was soon making a mile a minute once more over the glib surface.

FLUSHING, Long Island, Jan. 5.—A heavy ice crop has already been harvested from the island ponds and streams.

STAPLETON, Staten Island, Jan. 5.—The brewers, who in past Winters have been obliged to get ice from Upper Maine and other remote neighborhoods, are jubilant. Lately they have been cutting good ice 10 and 12 inches thick, and it is expected that a sufficient quantity will be obtained for next Summer's use. The force of ice-cutters is to be largely increased this week.

METHODISM IN NEW-JERSEY.

THE SEVENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE DEDICATION OF A NEWARK CHURCH.

The Halsey-Street Methodist Episcopal Church in Newark commenced yesterday the celebration of the seventieth anniversary of its dedication. The commemoration services will be continued through the week. One of the former Pastors is to preach each evening, precedents being given in the order of their appointment. At the morning service yesterday Rev. Anthony Atwood, who is the oldest living Pastor of the church, preached on "The Mission of Methodism in New-Jersey." Dr. James M. Freeman, of the Methodist Publishing-house in New-York, preached in the afternoon, and Dr. E. H. Stokes, of Ocean Grove, preached in the evening. Both had been Pastors of the church.

The Halsey-Street M. E. Church is the oldest Methodist church in the eastern section of New-Jersey, and the mother of all the Newark Methodist churches. The first step in the direction of a Methodist church organization was taken in 1806, by Rev. David Bartine, the father of Rev. Dr. Bartine, of Orange. At that time the rigors of Calvinism controlled public sentiment throughout East Jersey, as in many other places, and the early struggles of David Bartine's "class" were many and hard. The class grew, however, till, in 1808, it had become so large, numerically, as to justify the election of a Board of Trustees. The persons chosen were Joseph Sandford, John Williams, Aaron Baldwin, Thomas Taylor, Theodore R. McLean, Hobart Little, and Richard Leaycraft. Twelve days later the corner-stone of a church building was laid, Ezekiel Cooper, of the Methodist Book Concern, preaching the sermon. In 1829 the original building was enlarged, and was further improved by the construction, in the basement, of a room for Sunday-school purposes. The Sabbath-school had been started in 1819 by Mrs. Cross. The first classes met in the kitchen of her house, which stood where No. 615 Broad-street now is. The class-meetings were afterward held in the gallery of the church, from which they were, in 1829, transferred to the basement.

In 1851, the old Wesley Chapel, as it was called, was taken down, and the present brick structure erected on its site. Bishop Janes presched the dedicatory sermon on Thanksgiving Day, 1852.

In its early history, the church was a part of the Elizabethtown circuit. In 1819 it became a station. From the congregation thus formed, Methodism grew with the city, until, at present, in the 17 Methodist churches of Newark, there are over 6,000 communicants. The Franklin-street congregation was the first off-shoot of the Halsey-street congregation; and then came the Clinton-Street Church worshipers. Rev. J. H. Dally is the present Pastor of the church.

A THIEF ROBBED OF STOLEN MONEY.

Lawrence Dowling, a burglar, broke the shutters and a pane of glass in a window of the liquor store of William C. Oesting, No. 137 Delancey-street, on New Year's night, and robbed the money-drawer of $96 in silver. Detective Johnson, of the Thirteenth Precinct, arrested Dowling, who acknowledged his guilt, and was committed in default of $1,000 bail on Saturday by Justice Kilbreth, at Essex Market Police Court. After being sent to jail, Dowling told Detective Johnson that he had been robbed of $80 of the stolen money by Patrick Clark, a vagrant. The detective made a search for Clark, and found him on the same evening. Clark had several dollars in silver in his pocket when he was arrested. He was arraigned before Justice Kilbreth yesterday morning, and Mr. Oesting identified one of the coins found in Clark's possession as a "pocket-piece" which he had brought from Germany several years ago. Clark strenuously denied the theft of the money from Dowling, but the identification of the coin by Mr. Oesting was considered sufficient evidence against the prisoner, and he was locked up, in default of $1,000 bail, for trial.

OCEAN STEAMERS IN A GALE.

SAFE ARRIVAL OF THE ABYSSINIA AND THE LABRADOR—INCIDENTS OF THE VOYAGE—RIDING THROUGH A TEMPEST OF RAIN AND SNOW.

The four days over due steam-ship Abyssinia, of the Cunard Line, arrived off Sandy Hook at 8 o'clock yesterday morning, and was made fast to her dock in Jersey City three hours later. The Abyssinia left Liverpool Dec. 21, and Queenstown on the 22d at 4 P.M. She carried less than half a usual cargo of general merchandise, and only a small passenger-list. At the start the weather was bitter cold, but the wind was fair for nearly two days. On Christmas Day the wind blew fiercely from the west, the barometer sank rapidly, and a heavy sea was running. The light loading of the steamer made her much higher out of water than usual, and rendered it more difficult for the engines to force her against the wind. Every precaution was taken by the officers for the safety of the steamer and her passengers and crew. Few of the former ventured upon deck, while, for the use of the latter, life-lines were rigged and the greatest care taken to prevent any of the crew from being swept from the deck. The intense cold, accompanied by snow squalls and piercing winds, made it very difficult for the crew to attend to their duties. The sails being useless, as the wind was dead ahead, were carefully furled and secured with extra fastenings, nor were they unfurled during the entire voyage. The progress of the steamer was so slow that, although a 13-knot boat, she made on the 28th but 50 miles in 24 hours, and on Jan. 3 only 64 miles. The wind continued to blow fiercely from the westward until the steamer was near the Banks of Newfoundland, and then, for 12 hours, a more favorable wind set in from the east. But on Sunday, the 29th, the wind returned from the west with more violence than before, and the worst part of the voyage was encountered. The sea was very high and the steamer plunged and rolled incessantly. Everything exposed became covered with ice and the spray froze far up in the rigging. On Thursday, Jan. 2, the Abyssinia was within 300 miles of Sandy Hook, but her progress was very slow. Some idea of the slowness may be learned when it is stated that it took the Abyssinia eight days to come from the Banks of Newfoundland, a voyage she usually accomplishes in three days. On nearing this coast the weather somewhat moderated, but the wind still blew strongly ahead, and the sea was very high. During her trip up the Bay the crew of the Abyssinia removed the ice from the rigging, decks, and bow of the steamer, so that she presented a good appearance on coming to her dock, and showed few signs of the rough handling she had experienced. Owing to the care taken by her officers, not a single accident occurred, nor was the steamer at all damaged. The thermometer registered 19° above zero on several days of the voyage, but on nearing the coast it rose to 30°. During the gale of the 28th a German steerage passenger gave birth to a female child, and the officers and passengers took up a subscription for them amounting to $50. This unexpected addition to their finances greatly pleased the parents, who were poor immigrants on their way to the West. An attempt was made to persuade the mother to call her infant Abyssinia, but she had never heard such a name before for a girl, and considered it too outlandish. Rev. J. C. Craven, Rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity at Philadelphia, was a passenger on the Abyssinia, and describes the voyage as being exceedingly long and tedious. Having confidence in the stanchness of their steamer and the seamanship of the Captain and his officers, they were not afraid; but the motion of the vessel made every place except their berths very uncomfortable. On New Year's Eve, however, they managed to congregate in the main saloon, and welcomed in the New Year with singing and addresses.

The steam-ship Labrador, of the French Line, arrived off Sandy Hook late on Saturday night, and anchored there until yesterday morning. She reached her dock in this City at 9 A. M., but was not tied up until 12, as the ice between the piers made it very difficult to bring her in. The Labrador left Havre on Dec. 22, and was favored for the first three days of her voyage with fair winds from the eastward. On Christmas Day, however, the barometer fell, the wind veered round to the westward, and on the next day the steamer was experiencing a terrible westerly gale. The Labrador is one of the finest sea-boats sailing from this port, and is well officered. She stood the gale splendidly, and, being steady, but, of course, slow, progress during the three days it lasted. On New Year's Day the sea was comparatively calm, and there was little wind, but on the next day the gale returned with more violence than before, the wind blowing from the west-north-west a perfect hurricane. Snow-squalls were of frequent occurrence, and a dense fog compelled the steamer to be hove to constantly. Last Friday the Labrador was only 90 miles from Fire Island, and all on board looked to a speedy termination of the voyage, but the wind, which was then favorable, veered instantly to the west, and it was impossible to make headway against it. The steamer was therefore kept off, and thus was only able to sight Sandy Hook on Saturday night. The officers speak of the curious appearance of the sea several times during the voyage, it being covered with a light fog which exactly resembled rising steam. On Christmas Day, when about 1,200 miles from the Scilly Islands, a large number of land-birds flew on board the steamer. They appeared to be small ones, and circled over the ice a long distance, but was unhurt. The boat was righted, her sails reefed, and the jolly voyager was soon making a mile a minute once more over the glib surface.

RESIGNING HIS PASTORATE.

Rev. Thomas D. Anderson has resigned the Pastorate of the First Baptist Church, at Park-avenue and Thirty-ninth-street, and will preach his farewell sermon next Sunday. The reason for severing his connection with the congregation is his desire for a period of rest, which he cannot very well obtain and continue his ministry at the church. Mr. Anderson has had a continuous Pastorate for 37 years. He began his ministerial career as Pastor of the First Baptist Church, at Salem, Mass., in 1842, and remained there for seven years. Owing to ill health he resigned, and accepted a call from the First Baptist Church of Roxbury, now Boston Highlands, Mass. He remained there for 13 years, and assisted in the erection of a new church edifice during his Pastorate. He next accepted a call from the First Baptist Church in this City, over which he has presided for 17 years. When he took the Pastorate of the church it was located at the corner of Broome and Elizabeth streets, and when it moved up town he was a member of the Building Committee which erected the church now occupied by his congregation. Mr. Anderson is President of the Rutgers Female College, and has held the position for four years. He is also a member of the Board of Managers of the American Baptist Home Missionary Society, and one of the Trustees of the American Tract Society, and was a member of the Executive Committee of the Evangelical Alliance, which held its meetings in this City in 1873.

MR. HILTON'S DONATION NOT DISCUSSED.

The Board of Directors of the Home for Aged and Infirm Hebrews held a meeting yesterday afternoon. It had been stated that final action was to be taken in regard to the acceptance or rejection of Judge Hilton's recent offer of $250 to the institution. The meeting was held with closed doors in one of the parlors of the Home, but word was given out that only regular routine business was transacted, and that all action on Judge Hilton's donation had been postponed indefinitely. Several of the members of the board who were questioned by a TIMES reporter denied positively that the subject was under consideration. It is known, however, that a number of the leaders in the management of the Home will be found strongly opposed to accepting the donation whenever the question does come up for discussion.

MARRIED ON HIS WAY TO JAIL.

John Rogers, Bernard Heeney, William Lindenfelzer, William Botterbee, Charles Keaney, and Frederick Louter, six members of the notorious "Shorty Lent" gang of burglars, were arraigned for trial on Saturday before Justice Gertum, at East New-York, on charges of burglary committed at various times and places in the outskirts of Brooklyn. All were committed for trial except Louter, who was discharged. Before being sent to jail, Rogers sent a note to Justice Gertum, asking him to marry him to Miss Frances L. Siegal, to whom he said he was to have been married on the night of his arrest. The Justice complied with his request, the two were made one, and the newly-married bride followed her husband to Raymond-Street Jail.

JUDGE COWING'S APPOINTMENTS.

City Judge Cowing has appointed the following persons as court officers in the General Sessions, where he presides: Elbert Miller, Peter Seaman, I. A. Cozzy, Thomas H. Riley, William Nethercott, John E. Brady, Andrew McCabe, Harry C. Patterson, William J. Mahedl, John K. Phillips, D. B. Scofield, Henry Welch, and William Mannak.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

Mr. D. Willis James conducted the exercises at the meeting of the street boys held in the Boys' Lodging-house at No. 709 East Eleventh-street last evening.

Thomas Dowdy, who is 35 years old, and who lives in Newark, N. J., tumbled from Pier No. 39 into the East River at 5 A. M. yesterday. Charles Springer, the watchman on the wharf, rescued him from drowning.

The compositors recently discharged from the World office submitted a statement concerning their removal at a special meeting of Typographical Union No. 6, held yesterday afternoon, and a committee was appointed to devise means for their relief and to submit a report with regard to the matter at the regular meeting of the Union to-day.

The second annual Winter games of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club will be had at Gilmore's Garden on this and to-morrow evenings. There are over 400 entries of contestants, including among their number many of the best amateur athletes. The programme for this evening includes running, walking, and jumping matches, and some fine sport is promised.

The remains of the man found frozen to death in a snow-drift in the vacant lot at Eighty-eighth-street and First-avenue on Saturday morning, were yesterday identified as those of James McArthur, of No. 317 East Seventy-eighth-street, who had been missing from his home since New Year's Day. McArthur, who is 64 years old, left home on the 1st inst. to visit some friends in the neighborhood. Coroner Croker will hold an inquest in the case.

BROOKLYN.

Elizabeth Kennedy, 43 years old, residing at No. 513 Court-street, was severely burned about the neck and face yesterday by falling on a red-hot stove.

The walking match which was begun in Stella Hall, on Bedford-avenue, on New Year's night, between Robert Campbell and John W. Goodwin, two amateur pedestrians, for $500, was concluded between 11 and 12 o'clock Saturday night, when Goodwin had completed his task of walking 235 miles in 75 hours. Campbell had only walked 216 miles.

Patrolman Keenan, of the Eleventh Precinct, found Margaret Gannon drunk and freezing to death in her miserable apartments in the tenement-house No. 400 Hamilton-avenue, at 12 o'clock Saturday night. The woman was unconscious when found, and would probably have died soon had not the officer found her. She was removed to the Van Brunt-Street Station, and yesterday Justice Ferry sent her to jail for 10 days for intoxication.

Mr. L. Riemenschneider, of No. 31 Park-row, New-York, while standing on the corner of Myrtle and Central avenues, between 12 and 1 o'clock yesterday morning, was assaulted by two men, who knocked him down and robbed him of his pocket-book, containing $50. Hugh Roy, of No. 84 Stockholm-street, was shortly afterward arrested by Detectives Mullen and Zundt, and was fully identified by Mr. Riemschneider as one of the men who assaulted him.

THE BURIAL PERMIT TROUBLES.

RESIDENTS OF NEW-JERSEY TOWNSHIPS GETTING EXCITED ABOUT THE MATTER—LITTLE CHANCE OF RELIEF FOR THE PRESENT.

The recent article in THE TIMES pointing out the inconvenience and annoyance experienced in the rural districts of New-Jersey from the operation of the law of last Winter prohibiting interments of the dead without burial permits, has attracted much attention throughout the State, and has disclosed the fact that the instances of hardship cited in the article referred to have had their parallels in scores of the more sparsely settled townships. The Senators and Assemblymen from such counties as Bergen, Sussex, Morris, Warren, Hunterdon, Ocean, and Atlantic, where the population is almost entirely rural, are already hearing much complaint from their constituents on the subject, and several of them have pledged themselves to favor a modification or repeal of the law. It is safe to assume that the law would not have passed the last Legislature in its present shape had its full scope been fully understood. The country people, as a rule, do not see the necessity of requiring a permit for burying a dead man. They take it as a matter of course that he must be buried, and ask, Why should his friends have to get a permit? To them it seems a useless bit of red tape, working often needless hardship and expense. The undertakers, as a general rule, have acquiesced readily in the new plan. Many of the old-fashioned country medical practitioners, however, are outspoken in their contempt of "these modern, new-fangled regulations," and disregard the law as far as they can do so with safety. There is no doubt that these physicians, if so disposed, could explain the objects of the law so as to reconcile their clients to its provisions, and by the exercise of a little foresight could obviate many of the inconveniences now experienced in getting the necessary certificates of death. What can be done by the co-operation of intelligent physicians in such a case was shown in Paterson in 1877, when a Bureau of Vital Statistics was established, and the then City Physician, Dr. E. J. Marsh, by proper effort secured the co-operation of all the physicians of the city, and the establishment on a permanent basis of the most efficient bureau of the kind in the State. Dr. Marsh was principally concerned in drafting the new State law, which was largely modeled upon that of Paterson, but he has been assisted by the City Physicians of the State in carrying it into effect. He readily recognizes the objections to the present law, and as a member of the State Board of Health declares his belief that that board will cheerfully consider any modification of the law that will remove its bad features without impairing its effectiveness. Among amendments suggested are these: To exempt all townships from the provisions of the present law; to exempt townships having a very small population in proportion to their area; to exempt townships not immediately adjacent to incorporated cities; and to provide that the Clerk of the township, or the Clerk of School District Clerk, or the Township Collector, or Chairman of the Township Committee, or all of them, shall have authority, in addition to the Assessor, Justice of the Peace, Judge, or Coroner, to issue a burial permit. It is also suggested that the Assessors should be allowed a larger fee than now for making their returns, and that a more liberal provision should be made for tabulating the data of vital statistics that are rapidly accumulating at Trenton under the new law. All this agitation and suggestion of amendments innumerable is likely to accomplish nothing for the present, as it will be met by the plea on the part of the State Board of Health that the new system should be given a full year's trial before changed.

NEITHER CLUBBED NOR INTOXICATED.

While a careful verification of the facts relative to the death of Mr. James L. Petrie, gathered from the statements of the Police, his medical attendant at Bellevue Hospital, and the friends of the deceased, furnish no corroboration of the theory that he was clubbed, as reported in some of the newspapers, they conclusively evince the necessity for a more thorough medical inspection of persons taken to the station-house in a supposed condition of intoxication. It appears from the statements of ex-Mayor Wickham, Mr. Jonathan Petrie, Mr. Low, and others that Mr. Petrie had been confined to his room for some weeks with a sprained ankle. A few evenings before his death he called upon a medical friend and complained of symptoms of paralysis—the results of malarial disease. The facts show that he had not been drinking to excess last Sunday evening, but complained of feeling ill, and had taken a walk with a friend, with whom he drank two glasses of sherry. He returned to his room about 9:30, lighted the gas, and went out. Three hours later he was taken up unconscious two doors from his residence, and carried to the station-house in Thirty-fifth-street. On Monday morning he was committed for examination by Justice Bixby. The next morning his actual condition was discov

THE STRUGGLE AT ALBANY.

ASPECTS OF THE CONTEST FOR THE SPEAKERSHIP.

MUCH EXCITED DISCUSSION BUT NO POSITIVE INDICATIONS OF THE RESULT—BOTH PARTIES VEHEMENTLY CLAIMING A MAJORITY—THE ASSEMBLY TO BE CALLED TO ORDER BY THE CLERK—A DISMAL DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 6.—There has been no lack here to-day of excited discussion concerning the Speakership contest, and, while both sides have persisted in expressing the utmost confidence, neither can satisfactorily show that it is certain to succeed. From an early hour in the morning the Delavan House has been crowded with men who talked as if their hopes of a happy hereafter depended upon the earnestness and volubility with which they pressed their claims. The outlook, as given by the Alvord men, is only a general one. They refuse to say which members will vote for Alvord, except in the cases of those who are openly urging his cause. In the head-quarters of Sloan, the list of members who are said to be bound by their own assurances to vote for Sloan, is shown to all who ask where that candidate's support is to be found. The report sent on Saturday, which was made with care, does not appear to need changing. To-night there can be counted 42 votes for Sloan, and the men who are so counted have either given themselves out in public as for Sloan, or else have assured him by message of the course they intend to pursue. There are now here about 100 members. There remain to arrive of the Republicans a member from each of the Counties of Chenango, Ontario, Genesee, Livingston, Cayuga, Oswego, Columbia, and Chautauqua; two each from the Counties of Niagara, Monroe, and Wayne, and four from Erie.

In going over the list of members to-night with a very warm canal man and a friend of Alvord, 60 votes were claimed for Alvord, and 10 of these votes were those of men who had declared in my hearing that they would vote for Sloan. Two or three of the number are very active workers for Alvord's opponents, and will certainly disappoint somebody. On the Sloan side, the leader of the canvass is still Hon. Warner Miller, and his tactics still remain the same as they were, unchanged in any particular by the increased excitement of everybody. Associated with him are Messrs. Skinner, of Jefferson; Chickering, of Lewis; Sheard, of Herkimer; Varnum, of New-York, and others, whose names have been mentioned. Mr. George H. Forster is here talking in his persuasive way for Sloan, and most of the members whose names are included in the list claimed for Sloan are resisting very positively the invitations and arguments of the Alvord side. For Alvord, the most active man on the floor of the Delavan is Senator Rockwell. He is assisted by a host of supporters, who came flocking into Albany last night and to-day as if the country were in imminent danger. Gen. Husted keeps his room closely, and receives and encourages the Alvord men who call upon him. The Sloan men, who call upon him as the ex-Speaker, are as well received, and are urged, in a good-humored way, to look upon the error of their judgment, and reconsider it. In the Delavan hall to-day, there were no more enthusiastic advocates of Alvord's candidacy than the members from New-York, and a score or more of well-known politicians who accompanied them. Among the latter were Jacob M. Patterson, Jr., Sheridan Shook, John J. O'Brien, Victor Steinberger, and R. G. McCord. I also found Bernard Biglin and Michael Cregan circulating about and doing their best to assist Alvord. Sheriff Daggett, of Brooklyn, is one of the most sanguine of the confident Alvord men. Among the men who argue for the Syracuse candidate with much persuasiveness are J. J. Belden, E. D. Barber, and E. R. Phelps, all of whom are frequent visitors to Old Salt's apartments. Of course, the presence of these gentlemen excites comment from the other side, and the assertion is made that they were here in the interest of corporations that have ulterior motives. Gov. Alvord laughs at these allegations and says that if these men choose to come to Albany and help him, he cannot help it. He emphatically ridicules the assertion that the corporations supposed to be banded in his interest have any special favors to expect in the event of his election.

The noise of the canvass has been great all day. If talk from outsiders, from men who cannot vote on the question, can be taken as an indication of what the result will be, then Alvord will surely be elected. He has certainly the weight of talk here to-night, with only 19 or 20 members to come in. It is deemed probable by ex-Gov. Alvord that a caucus can be held to-morrow afternoon, as the delayed members are expected before noon. The delay undoubtedly causes anxiety among the Sloan men, who feel that they would have had a better chance of success if the caucus had been held to-night and the matter determined before the number of talkers for Alvord could be increased. At one time this evening the excitement was wrought up to a high pitch, and some of the louder and less discreet friends of Alvord went about offering bets of $1,000 to $1,500 that Alvord would be elected. No money was put up, however, and Sloan's most prominent supporter deprecated betting on the result.

Clerk Johnson is prepared to comply with the requirements of the Constitution, and pending the caucus and the selection of a candidate for Speaker, he will call the Assembly to order to-morrow at 10:30 o'clock. The members of both houses will assemble informally, the Senate meeting in the old Senate Chamber and the Assembly in the old and now dismantled Assembly Chamber. The Senate will, at 11 o'clock, proceed to the Assembly Chamber, and, escorting the Assembly, will march to the new Capitol. Entering by the Washington-avenue side, the two bodies will pass to the Assembly Chamber. The Senate will then retire to the room prepared for it on the floor below in the Court of Appeals Chamber, and Edward M. Johnson, the Clerk of the Assembly, will call the new Assembly to order. The Secretary of State will then administer the oath to all members present, after which a recess will be taken.

As trains from the west are expected by noon, it is hoped by both sides that a caucus can be held to-morrow afternoon. In case it cannot it will probably be deferred until Wednesday afternoon. The Democrats were to have held their caucus to-night in the lobby of the old Senate Chamber. Mr. Seebacher, Chairman of the caucus, called the meeting for 7:30 o'clock. At that time there were only four or five Democratic members present. The room was without a fire, and would have been exceedingly cheerless but for the concerts had between 7 and 8 o'clock. At 8 o'clock the number present had increased to 15, those in attendance being Messrs. Madigan, Holahan, Dugro, Seebacher, McDonough, Grady, Patterson, and Dougherty, of New-York; Flynn, Clancy, and Douglass, of Kings; Duryea, of Suffolk; Morrison, of Sullivan, and Davis, of Ulster. After some delay, in expectation that a few more of the minority would appear, Mr. Grady suggested that the caucus should adjourn. On motion of Mr. Holahan, the caucus was adjourned until to-morrow at 10 o'clock. It was suggested by Mr. Grady, who wore an unusually happy smile upon his countenance, that the adjournment was made necessary in consequence of the fact that many of the members had been "snowed up" out west. Mr. Duryea, of Suffolk, who is a somewhat corpulent man, and a wag, added: "Yes, snowed up in an early snow-storm. The snow that blocked the Democrats fell some time during November." The whole party then marched sadly out of the cold room, and a part of it, under the leadership of Grady, went off to mingle their tears with "Marie Stuart," at the Leland Opera-house.

At midnight the boastful tone of the Alvord men had abated somewhat, but a careful canvass of the chances for each of the candidates showed the contest to be very close. It is not yet certain either way. The Monroe delegation, claimed to-day by Alvord, is divided. Bradley, of Westchester, has called on Sloan and declared that he will vote for him. Warner, of Montgomery, claimed for Alvord, has told me that he will vote for Sloan. From a prominent Republican, not a member, the warning was given out to-night that several men who have been conspicuous for their advocacy of one side will surprise everybody by coming out on the opposite side from that they have occupied for a day or two. My informant declined to say which side would be injured by this change.

PREPARING FOR FESTIVITIES.

PRESENT APPEARANCE OF THE CAPITOL—ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE RECEPTION—THE BALL OF THE BURGESSES CORPS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 6.—There remains to-day very little to be done on the Capitol, either to make it ready for the Legislature or for the great reception that is to take place to-morrow night. As has been intimated, the reception was designed on a very large scale. Four thousand invitations were issued. As each invitation entitles the gentleman who receives it to bring ladies with him, there is every probability that there will be a crush. I walked this morning through the building, or the part of it that will be thrown open at the reception. In the arched corridor on Washington-avenue, and in the avenues leading right and left from it, men were on their knees scrubbing the richly-tiled floors. The arches above, colored and gilded, were only seen dimly, the light not being strong. The halls were comfortably warm, the heat being agreeably distributed, and the degree of warmth testifying to the adequacy of the heating apparatus to make the building a comfortable one in very cold weather. Opposite the Washington-avenue door a passage leads into the court in the centre of the building. Through this passage I could see a tent, covering about one-fourth of the space of the court, and three tables had been placed there extending the entire width of the court. Here the guests, 600 of them at a time, are to be given lunch by the Lelands. Unless the weather is mild it will be a cool lunch-room.

The grand staircase, with its succession of noble arches, rising one above the other to the roof of the Capitol, is cleared, and the passage on the main floor leading by the Governor's rooms, the Senate Chamber, the Senate Library, and the committee-rooms, 26 in number, is free from the furniture, desks, flower-stands, and other articles that incumbered it a day or two ago. The corridor facing the court, a broad, arched passage, gorgeous with vermilion, diapered with gold, is also cleared, and the florist has begun to fill the handsome flower-stands of copper and brass with potted plants. Up one flight higher, on the floor with the Assembly Chamber, the last touches were being given. The desks of the members are all in place. They are of mahogany, unstained, and the heavy chairs, with red leather upholstery, correspond in style with the Speaker's stand and the Clerk's desk, also of mahogany, sound and honest in build. Lieut.-Gov. Dorsheimer, who has spent much time in the building of late, and who has undoubtedly had much to do with securing the most perfectly artistic arrangement possible, was on hand this morning, and expressed himself satisfied that the interior would strike the Assembly agreeably. The judgment was probably a correct one. All the members who have visited it have been delighted. The desks were, unfortunately, not prepared for sunken inkstands, and Edward M. Johnson, the Clerk, was obliged to supply iron inkstands, with fragile-looking, antler-like pen-rests, at very short notice. They are not exactly in keeping with their surroundings. Tables of oak have been placed in the angles of the chamber for the reporters of 12 newspapers, the intention of putting them all in the gallery over the Speaker having been abandoned. There is plainly a notion among the Commissioners that the reporters ought to be excluded from the floor. The members are averse to excluding them, and will probably direct that places shall be provided for them which will give them easy access to the Clerk's desk and to members.

The interior of the great room looks superb. The warm red carpet, with its gay border, is very attractive and pleasing to the eye. Before the large windows, that reach from the floor half way up the side of the chamber, curtains of brocaded stuff, in gold and green, with rich borders, have been hung on brass bars. They will serve to exclude the light when the sun shines too brightly, and will add richness to the general effect. The rooms of the Speaker and the Speaker's clerk will be in good order to-morrow, as the workmen were to-day arranging the desks and furniture, and little remained to be done to make the rooms ready for visitors. In one of the galleries of the chamber Gilmore's Band is to be stationed, and Austin's Band will play in the gorgeous red corridor on the floor, near the Senate Chamber. Through all these apartments the great concourse of guests will have plenty of room to pass, for there is space to accommodate 5,000 persons who do not mind a little crowding while in motion. The Assembly Chamber will probably be lighted by four electric lights, and the members will then have an opportunity to say which they will have in the electric light or gas as a permanent illuminator. There will be music for dancing late in the evening, but it is not deemed probable that much dancing will be done. There is no reason why there should not be an abundance of it, and room, too, after 10 o'clock. For two hours the reception will consist of a march of the visitors up the stairways through the Governor's rooms, where the Governor is to receive, and then out again, up the stairway to the Assembly Chamber, and then out again by another way than that by which they entered.

There is to be a supplemental ball, about which there has been much talk. This is the ball and concert of the Albany Burgesses Corps, to be given in Martin Opera House. Opera-house was this morning given up to the committee of the Burgesses Corps. At 10:30 to-morrow night the corps will form a line in the hall to receive the special guests who have been invited to grace the occasion. The body will appear in full uniform, and the Old Guard of this city will also take part in the reception. The guests are to be received in an office and escorted by the Burgesses Corps and the Old Guard to the floor. Among those who have been invited and who have signified their intention to be present are Gov. Robinson and staff, Major-Gen. Barry and staff, Brig.-Gen. Gov. Dornheimer, Brig.-Gen. Frederick Townsend, the officers of the Old Guard of New-York, the officers of the Troy Citizens' Corps, the Saratoga Citizens' Corps, the Utica Citizens' Corps, the Buffalo City Guard—if it can get here—and many old members of the Albany Burgesses Corps, among whom are Hon. Thurlow Weed, ex-Gov. Morgan, Hon. Hamilton Fish, Gen. J. H. Habart Ward, Hon. Eli Perry, Hon. Robert E. Prurn, Hon. A. Bleecker Banks, Hon. John H. Starin, Thomas W. Olcott, Clarence H. Seward, Capt. H. W. Foote, Capt. H. B. Beecher, and others. This ball promises to be one of the most attractive ever given in the capital.

HOW THE MURDERERS WERE CAPTURED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

OMAHA, Neb., Jan. 6.—Later particulars have been received to-day from Plum Creek in regard to the arrest of Olive and his five confederates for burning Mitchell and Ketchum. Olive and his herders had threatened that they would never be taken alive, and, whenever they came to town from their cattle-ranch, were fully armed. A man named Nicholls volunteered to arrest them. He was assisted by Ketchum's three brothers, Mitchell's son, and others. These men secreted themselves in the Post Office, and as the herders came in, one by one, after their mail, they were disarmed and taken into custody. Olive came in last, and his arrest was made without resistance. The men were taken to Kearney and lodged in jail. Three more of Olive's herders have been arrested since.

A post-mortem examination showed that the bodies of Mitchell and Ketchum were horribly cut with knives before they were burned to death, large pieces of flesh being cut from their limbs. Sheriff Gillen, who arrested the two murdered men, was arrested to-day. It is believed that Olive paid him $1,000 reward for the arrest. It is believed that these men will be tried at a special term of court next week.

JUSTICE ANTICIPATED BY LYNCH LAW.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

OMAHA, Neb., Jan. 6.—"Dutch Charlie," one of the Black Hills stage robbers recently arrested in Wyoming Territory, while being conveyed yesterday from Laramie to Rawlins, for trial, was taken from a Union Pacific train at Carbon Station last night, by a party of masked men, who hanged him to a telegraph pole. Before he was hanged he confessed to the double murder for which he was about to be tried.

A BANK PRESIDENT ARRESTED.

ALLENTOWN, Penn., Jan. 6.—William Blumer, formerly President of the First National Bank of this city, which went into liquidation about a year ago, was arrested to-day, charged with embezzlement. He was released on $57,000 bail.

NATIONAL CAPITAL TOPICS.

THE WORK BEFORE CONGRESS.

THE LARGEST OF THE APPROPRIATION BILLS READY TO BE REPORTED TO THE HOUSE—OPPOSITION TO THE BURNSIDE ARMY BILL—THE SPECIAL ORDERS FOR TO-DAY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Before Congress adjourned for the holidays, it was announced that several of the leading committees of both branches would sit during the recess and prepare for presentation to their respective houses some of the important measures committed to them. The House Committee on Appropriations is the only committee which has attempted any work during the recess. A sub-committee of that committee has prepared the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Appropriation bill, which is the largest of all the regular appropriation bills, and it will probably be reported to the House on Wednesday. The Committee on Ways and Means has done nothing during the recess. Mr. Wood has called a meeting of the committee for to-morrow, at which he will make an effort to have the committee act upon his bill to make legal-tender notes receivable for Customs duties. The hearing of importers and refiners of sugar touching the proposed change in the rate of duties will take place on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday.

It is not likely that much business will be transacted to-morrow in either house. In the Senate the bill to amend the Patent laws is a special order, and the consideration of the Geneva award will be resumed in the House. An effort will be made in the Senate to dispose of the Patent bill to-morrow, and with proper management a vote can be reached in the House on the Geneva Award bill on Wednesday. The vote will be first taken on Mr. Frye's amendment, which excludes the insurance companies from participation in any further distribution of the award, unless they shall show to the satisfaction of the Court of Claims that the sum of losses in respect to war risks exceeded the sum of premiums or other gains in respect to such risks. On Wednesday the bill to reorganize the Army will be taken up in the Senate as a special order, and on Thursday the same bill will come up in the House by special assignment. A very decided opposition to this bill has developed since the holiday adjournment, and unless important modifications are made in some of its provisions it is likely to fail.

HAMBURG BUTLER'S CASE.

THE CONTEST FOR SOUTH CAROLINA'S SEAT IN THE SENATE TO BE RENEWED, WITH FAIR CHANCES OF OUSTING THE SHOTGUN LEADER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Senator Sharon, of Nevada, arrived here to-night and will be in his seat to-morrow for the first time in 12 months. It is understood that his appearance on the floor will be the signal for the revival of the contest for the seat of South Carolina, now illegally held by Gen. M. C. Butler. Mr. Corbin, the legally-elected Senator, was deprived of his seat by the action of Messrs. Patterson and Conover, who supported his opponent. The vote on the resolution admitting Butler stood, counting the two unfaithful Republicans named, 29 to 28, or a majority of one in his favor. At the time in question Senator Davis, of Illinois, did not vote, and Senator Sharon was not in his seat. During the present session, if Senator Davis still refrains from voting, as he is expected to do, and Senator Sharon votes for Mr. Corbin, as he certainly will, the result, omitting the vote of Butler, who, of course, could have no voice in his own case, would be a tie. This will be understood when it is remembered that the full Senate, as at present constituted, consists of 36 Democrats, 39 Republicans, and Senator Davis, Independent. With Butler and Davis not voting, and Conover and Patterson added to the Democratic column, the vote would be 37 to 37. In such an event, if the Vice-President exercised his right against Butler, it is of course obvious that Mr. Corbin would be seated. This, at least, is the calculation of his friends. On the other hand, it is held by the Democratic side that Senators Davis did not vote when the case was up before simply because his vote was not needed, but that now, if compelled to do so, he would support Butler. In case he should still remain Independent, however, the Democrats will probably claim that the Vice-President has no right to pass upon the qualifications of members of the Senate. Whatever may be the outcome of the contest, there is at least no doubt that it will occasion an extended political debate.

TOPICS IN AND OUT OF CONGRESS.

DEMOCRATIC GREED FOR OFFICE—THE BERLIN MISSION—ABSENT NEW-YORK CONGRESSMEN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—The love of office among the Democrats of Virginia is strikingly illustrated by the fact that the Governor of that State, in consequence of the immense pressure brought to bear by Virginians who are ambitious to serve out the unexpired term of the late Representative Douglass, has issued a proclamation for a special election to be held on Jan. 23, to choose a successor to Mr. Douglass. There are 17 counties in the district, and it will require at least two weeks to gather in the returns of the election and certify the result to the House of Representatives. The State will thus be put to the expense of a special election in order that some ambitious Democrat may draw one-half month's pay as a member of Congress.

At the New-England dinner, recently given at New-York, Rev. Dr. Storrs mentioned Dr. Thompson as a man eminently qualified for the Berlin mission. This mention of Dr. Thompson's name seems to have been acted upon by a number of clerical and other friends of that gentleman, and numerous letters have been received by the President and Secretary Evarts urging Dr. Thompson's appointment. It is understood that the appointment of a successor to Minister Taylor will be determined upon at the Cabinet meeting of to-morrow or that of Friday, and that the name will be sent to the Senate this week.

There is a very small attendance of New-York members here to-night. Messrs. McCook, Chittenden, Willis, and one or two others were here, but the majority of the delegation will be absent to-morrow in attendance upon the ceremonies accompanying the opening of the new Capitol at Albany. Postmaster-General Key, Gen. Knapp, Chief Clerk of the Post Office Department, and other officials will also attend.

United States District Attorney Woodford, of New-York, arrived here to-night, to consult with the Attorney-General in relation to a number of Government cases now pending in his district.

THE PROGRESS OF REFUNDING.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—The call issued to-day for $10,000,000 of 5-20 bonds for redemption, makes $30,000,000 that have been called within the past week, of what are known in the market as the "consols of '67." Of these bonds there are now outstanding $310,600,000, and of the consols of '68 there are outstanding $37,400,000. These two series of bonds aggregating less than $350,000,000, include all the bonds known as 5-20s, the refunding of which is provided for by the Refunding act. The subscriptions to-day for the 4 per cent. bonds, aggregated over $11,000,000, and at the rate subscriptions have been lately received for these bonds the entire work of refunding the 5-20 bonds will be completed before the close of the present calendar year.

The call issued to-day is for $10,000,000, of which $6,000,000 are coupon and $4,000,000 registered bonds. The principal and interest will be paid at the Treasury on and after the 6th day of April next, and the interest will cease on that day. The following are the descriptions of the bonds:

Coupon bonds dated July 1, 1867, namely: $50, No. 11,001 to No. 18,000, both inclusive; $100, No. 11,001 to No. 18,000, both inclusive; $500, No. 11,001 to No. 16,000, both inclusive; $1,000, No. 13,001 to No. 20,000, both inclusive; total coupon, $6,000,000.

Registered bonds, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of July, 1872, as follows: $50, No. 401 to No. 550, both inclusive; $100, No. 2,801 to No. 4,400, both inclusive; $500, No. 2,001 to No. 2,850, both inclusive; $1,000, No. 7,491 to No. 11,000, both inclusive; $5,000, No. 2,501 to No. 3,550, both inclusive; $10,000, No. 2,001 to No. 2,800, both inclusive; total registered, $4,000,000; aggregate, $10,000,000.

JUSTICE HUNT SERIOUSLY ILL.

STRICKEN WITH PARALYSIS—FEARS THAT HE CANNOT RECOVER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Justice Hunt, of the United States Supreme Court, was stricken with paralysis, at his residence in this city, last Saturday, and is now in such a condition that his recovery is despaired of. One side is entirely paralyzed, and he is to-night unable to talk. It is feared that he cannot live more than a few days longer, and apprehensions are expressed by one of his intimate friends who saw him to-day, that a fatal change in his condition may occur within a comparatively few hours. The fact of his very serious illness has been kept very quiet, and was not known even to his associates on the Bench until this afternoon. The stroke of paralysis is attributed to a long-continued enfeeblement of his system in the matter of assimilating nutriment, from which he has suffered for more than a year, and which seems to have defied medical skill in its treatment.

NOTES FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6, 1879.

The receipts from internal revenue to-day were $616,254 76, and from Customs, $213,757 05.

A letter received by Treasurer Gilfillan to-day from the Cashier of the First National Bank of Nashville, Tenn., says: "It may be a matter of interest to know that we have taken in more coin than we have paid out. Thus, I believe, it has been all over the State."

Senator Thurman this afternoon prepared a letter, addressed to the Columbus (Ohio) Banquet Committee, saying that it will not be in his power to attend the Democratic celebration on the 8th inst., as he is beginning to recover from a severe cold, and cannot but recognize the fact that it would be imprudent for him in such extremely cold weather to make a trip requiring 800 miles of travel. He offers a few reflections upon the toast, "The Jackson Democracy," the theme upon which he was appointed to speak, and confines himself solely to that subject.

Representative Wilson, of West Virginia, is engaged in the preparation of a report, which he will make to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which he is a member, and which he thinks will be agreed to by that committee, in favor of returning to the Chinese Government $400,000 of the $500,000. Mr. Wilson says that several years ago China appropriated an amount in gross to indemnify American merchants for losses occasioned in Chinese waters, with the understanding that no more money was to be demanded by the United States. As all the claims except one, now pending in the Court of Claims, have been satisfied, the above-mentioned sum remains in the Treasury unexpended.

ARMY AND NAVY ORDERS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Lieut. John L. Clem, Twenty-fourth Infantry, is placed on duty in charge of the recruiting rendezvous for the general service in this city during the absence of Capt. Corbin.

Passed Assistant Surgeon John C. Boyd has been ordered from the New-Hampshire at Port Royal, S. C., and Passed Assistant Surgeon W. A. McClurg has been detached from the New-Hampshire and ordered to duty at the Naval Hospital at Washington.

GOV. BISHOP'S CHANCES.

JOHN G. THOMPSON'S VIEWS—A SLIGHT BY A DEMOCRATIC CLUB.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Jan. 6.—John G. Thompson, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, left here for Washington this afternoon. He expressed the opinion that the Democrats would now give resumption a fair trial, and would do nothing to prevent its being successfully carried out. In referring to the nomination of a candidate for the Governorship, he said that he thought that the friends of Gov. Bishop would make a grave error should they canvass and fight for his renomination; that if the people desired Mr. Bishop as their standard-bearer, they would make their wishes known in convention. Should there be a fight for the nomination the nominee would not receive the full support of the party. Mr. Thompson received an invitation from the Young Men's Democratic Club to attend their banquet on Wednesday evening. He was very much surprised to learn that the invited guests were charged $3 each to go toward their own entertainment. He believed there would be "smoke in the air" when some of the rural Democratic editors arrived and were charged for admittance. As an illustration of the manner in which the Young Democrats assume to rule the party and place in a humiliating position those whom they cannot control, they have placed Gov. Bishop as the last on the list of speakers, when it would seem that common courtesy would assign him as first or second. A number of the young members of the club proposed to ignore him altogether, but those possessed of more political wisdom overruled the motion and the Governor will respond to the toast "Our Governor."

DECIDING BETWEEN THREE

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Jan. 6.—In the Municipal Court to-day, upon a petition for the appointment of an Administrator on the estate of the late Thomas S. Carpenter, the horse-trainer, claims were set up in behalf of three wives. The court decided in favor of Mrs. Irene D. Carpenter, now living in Woodstock, Conn., who had a certificate of marriage. She was married at Concord, N. H., in 1866. Another woman, Mary E. Carpenter, who lived with Carpenter as housekeeper, claims to have been married in New-York, but says the clergyman retained the certificate. A claim was set up of a still earlier marriage, the fruit of which was a son, whose residence is unknown. It is not known whether the matter will be further contested.

STRIKES IN THE COAL MINES.

POTTSVILLE, Penn., Jan. 6.—The employes of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company at the Beechwood Colliery, who struck last week for back wages, were paid to-day. It is understood here that orders have been received to close the colliery. This will throw 300 men and boys out of work. The men at the Brookside mines, who struck on Thursday last for back wages, have reconsidered the matter and returned to work. The strike at Lake Fiddler Colliery still continues.

LOUISIANA LEGISLATURE'S WORK.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 6.—The Legislature convened to-day. J. C. Moncure, of Caddo, was elected Speaker of the lower house; C. M. Pegues, of Natchitoches, was elected its Clerk. The Senate re-elected its old officers. A bill was introduced authorizing the Governor to issue $1,500,000 new 5-20 bonds to restore the credit of the State, the bonds to be sold at par for cash or coupons due upon the present State consols. A bill will be introduced tomorrow calling a Constitutional Convention.

THE FRAUDS IN WARREN COUNTY.

BELVIDERE, N. J., Jan. 6.—Charles S. Strader, ex-Director of the Board of Freeholders, was found guilty to-day of forgery, in raising a county order from $27 to $127, and drawing the money thereon. The next case called was that of ex-Freeholder Henry M. Cox, ex-Director Charles S. Strader, and John H. Silker, a contractor, charged with conspiring and drawing money on two fraudulent bills—one of $150, and another of $199, for building a county bridge. The case is still on.

DEATH SENTENCE CONFIRMED.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 6.—In the case of H. Schaffer, which came up on error from the Oyer and Terminer of Franklin County, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, to-day affirmed the judgment of the lower court. Schaffer is now under sentence of death for the murder of his wife near Chambersburg some time ago.

GEN. PORTER'S COUNSEL HEARD.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Jan. 6.—The session of the Board of Inquiry in the case of Gen. Fitz John Porter was resumed this morning at 10 o'clock John G. Baillie, of Philadelphia, Gen. Porter's senior counsel, addressed the argument, and the court adjourned until Wednesday.

AFGHAN AND TURKISH PROBLEMS.

SHERE ALI ACCOMPANIED IN HIS FLIGHT BY A RUSSIAN GENERAL—YAKOOB KHAN'S ORDERS DISOBEYED—THE PROPOSED SURRENDER OF PODGORITZA TO MONTENEGRO.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The Viceroy of India telegraphs that Sijad Mahommed, Chief of the Kunar Valley, who sent a friendly letter to Major Cavagnari, recently, is expected at Jalalabad early this week. Wali Mahomed has refused to obey Yakoob Khan's call to Kabul. Some of Shere Ali's body-guard, that accompanied him to Turkestan, have deserted and returned home.

The Times' Vienna dispatch says: "The difficulties which had arisen regarding the Russian evacuation of the Dobrudscha are said to have been smoothed away, and Gen. Todleben has ordered the evacuation to begin on Jan. 12.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 6.—Gen. Todleben and staff are expected to arrive here on Saturday next.

The departure of the Commissioners charged with the surrender of Podgoritza to Montenegro has been postponed.

PARIS, Jan. 6.—The Russian cruiser Asia, one of the two vessels purchased for the Russian Government, which sailed from Philadelphia on Dec. 21, arrived at Cherbourg on Saturday, and will resume her voyage in a day or two.

CALCUTTA, Jan. 6.—A band of Mahsua Mazris recently made an incursion into British territory. They plundered the inhabitants and burned a tank, and then retreated to the hills. They were pursued by cavalry, and a part of the band was cut off. Reinforcements are being sent to prevent a repetition of the raid.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 6.—Nothing is known here of the Ameer's alleged intention to seek Russian protection.

LONDON, Jan. 7.—The New-York Herald communicates to the London press an account of an interview at Tashkend between Gen. Kaufmann and Mr. James Gordon Bennett. The former stated that he had received a letter from the Russian General Rasgonoff, announcing that he accompanied Shere Ali in his flight for the Russian frontier. Gen. Kaufmann said he had applied to Prince Gortschakoff for instructions concerning the reception of the Ameer, but had received no answer up to Jan 5.

The Times' Vienna correspondent speaks very hopefully of the negotiations which were recommenced on the 1st of January for a definitive Turco-Russian convention. The Russians appear to be making bona fide preparation for embarkation from Bourgas.

A Berlin dispatch to the Standard reports that it is said the Sultan has ordered the withdrawal of Prince Hohenlohe, objectionable to Russia, if the latter consents to reduce the indemnity. It is also said that Russia is inclined to acquiesce in this. It is semi-officially reported in Vienna that Russia has promised to evacuate Bulgaria and Roumelia on the 1st of April.

ENGLAND'S ERA OF HARD TIMES.

THE DISTRESS IN THE MANUFACTURING CENTRES INCREASING DAILY—CORNISH BANK NOTES AT A DISCOUNT—THE RAILWAY AND COLLIERY LABOR TROUBLES EXTENDING.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The weather is again cold and frosty. There has been a daily increase of the general distress in every quarter during the past week. On Friday, at Manchester, there were 3,000 applications from heads of families, representing 13,500 persons, to the Relief Committee, and on Saturday 4,000 fresh applications. During the week 1,200 families have been relieved in Wolverhampton. A considerable increase of distress is also reported from Sheffield.

The notes of the Cornish Bank are changing hands to-day at a considerable discount, and the depositors and creditors are not so sanguine of receiving full payment.

BARNSLEY, Jan. 6.—The South Yorkshire Colliery Operatives' Association has decided to submit to no reduction of wages. A largely-attended meeting of the Council of the North Derbyshire and South Yorkshire Association also decided last night not to make concession to the owners, and that the owners be required to withdraw their notice of a reduction of wages.

It is calculated that more than 1,000 men employed as railroad freight train guards on the Midland Railway are on strike. The guards in the Leeds district decided to-day to remain on duty. The signal-men, whose wages are to be reduced on the 10th of January, resolved at a meeting this morning to turn out, if necessary. The railway Directors report that the goods traffic is not interrupted, except as regards coal and heavy materials. Accidents on the road, of a more or less serious character, have occurred in consequence of the strike.

LONDON, Jan. 7.—At a meeting of the Midland Railway strikers in London yesterday, the Chairman said the drivers at Manchester, Birmingham, Totton, and Derby, had expressed a strong determination not to work with incompetent guards. The drivers at Wellingboro have already refused to work. Telegrams were read from all stations declaring the determination of the strikers to persist. The strikers have issued an appeal to all railway employes and trade societies, declaring that the present action of the Midland Railway Company is only part of a movement to enforce a general reduction of railway wages. It is believed there are now 1,500 men concerned in the strike. The leaders of the Midland Railway strike had an interview with the Directors of that road at Derby, but the result was a dead-lock, the Directors refusing to withdraw any of the obnoxious new rules. At a meeting of the employes at all the London freight depots of the London and North-western Railway resolutions were unanimously adopted to do their utmost to resist the attempt to extend their hours and decrease their wages.

Five hundred coach-builders have struck in Liverpool against the increase of their hours from 53 to 56½ per week. Simultaneously with this movement similar strikes have occurred in many large towns in Lancashire and Yorkshire. Five hundred ship-wrights employed in a Middlesboro ship-yard struck against a reduction of wages. The men were paid off and the yard closed. The Britannia Iron Works, at Middlesboro, have been closed, throwing 200 men out of employment.

The Midland Railway employes at Carlisle have yielded.

AUSTRIA'S DEMANDS FOR SILVER—THE DEFEAT OF THE BONAPARTISTS IN FRANCE—SOCIALIST SUCCESSES IN GERMANY—SPREAD OF THE PLAGUE IN ASTRAKHAN.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The Times, in its financial article this morning, says: "Sixty thousand pounds sterling worth of bar silver arrived on Saturday by the Plata-Chili packet. The whole of it was secured at 49⅝ pence for Austria, for which quarter there is a slight revival of inquiry, which, on Friday, appeared to be growing less, but which, more or less, has for some time past buoyed up the market, failing support from any other country."

It is stated that the reports regarding the condition of the wounded by the explosion of the gun on board the turret-ship Thunderer, representing that several have died and many others have become blind, are exaggerated. Admiral Horsby telegraphs that the wounded are doing well, and that the life of only one seaman is endangered.

PARIS, Jan. 6.—The morning papers, commenting on the Senatorial elections yesterday, agree that the result is a crushing blow for the Bonapartists. The majority in the Senate now consists of moderate Republicans, and it is considered probable that the Dufaure Cabinet will remain in office. The Senators of the Left met to-night to discuss the situation created by the elections.

Two detachments of the gendarmerie of Versailles have been sent to the Departments of the Herault and Eastern Pyrenees, to put a stop to the attacks made by armed brigands from Spain, which have alarmingly increased of late.

BERLIN, Jan. 6.—The Socialist Democrats have lately elected most of their municipal candidates in the districts around Leipsic. A Socialist will stand for Breslau at the forthcoming election for the Reichstag.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 6.—Official confirmation is given to the report that the plague has broken out in Astrakhan. It is said to have been introduced by Cossacks returning from Turkey.

A supplement of the Official Gazette announces that the plague in Astrakhan, which was abating, has revived with great virulence since a recent thaw. The authorities of Saratow are taking every precaution to prevent the spread of the epidemic. A conference of medical officials and other functionaries will be held to-morrow, under the Presidency of the Minister of the Interior, to consider measures for stamping out the disease.

LONDONDERRY, Jan. 6.—Ex-President Grant arrived here to-day, and was formally presented with the freedom of the city. A grand banquet was given in his honor to-night.

LONDON, Jan. 7.—The Times says the Irish Executive is seriously considering the question of the release of O'Kelly, the only remaining Fenian prisoner.

A dispatch to the Times from Paris says additional returns make the number of Republicans elected to the Senate 66.

The Times' Paris dispatch says the French Government has given one year's notice of the termination of all treaties of commerce. This is simply a measure of precaution, to leave the hands of France free, in view of Prince Bismarck's new economic policy, and the difficulty of concluding a new treaty with Austria.

A dispatch from Berlin says that Prince Bismarck, replying to a memorial from members of the German leather trade in favor of protection, writes that he is ready to support their views as far as personal interest can avail.

On the occasion of Gen. Grant's reception at Londonderry yesterday, the Town Hall, where the ceremonies took place, was decorated with flags. Gen. Grant, in his speech returning thanks for the freedom of the city, said he could not quit Europe without visiting Ireland. At the banquet given in his honor in the evening, Gen. Grant said there was still room for many more millions in America.

GRATZ, Jan. 6.—The Tagespost of this city says it learns on good authority that the Pope is consulting as to the advisability of calling a new Ecumenical Council.

FUNERAL OF CALEB CUSHING.

A SIMPLE CEREMONY—DISTINGUISHED PERSONS PRESENT — NEWBURYPORT IN MOURNING.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEWBURYPORT, Mass., Jan. 6.—The funeral of the late Caleb Cushing to-day was largely attended, though the number of persons from out of town was comparatively small, the impression having gone abroad that the ceremony was to be strictly private. Among those present besides the leading citizens of this place and representatives of the city Government, present and past, were Gen. B. F. Butler, Gen. J. A. Kinsman, of Washington; William E. Chandler, of Concord, N. H.; B. H. Cheever, of Wrentham, who married a daughter of President Tyler, and at whose wedding Mr. Cushing was groomsman; Col. Isa

THE TAMMANY SOCIETY ENJOINED.

AN INJUNCTION GRANTED TO PREVENT THE INITIATION OF MEMBERS ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN ELECTED.

The meetings of the secret Tammany Society are usually quiet and almost devoid of interest to the general public, and, indeed, they have been of little interest to a large number of its old members since its transformation, in the days of the Tammany Ring, from a patriotic and benevolent organization, to which men of every party might belong, to a mere tender of the Tammany political machine. There was an exception to the general rule last night. A minority of the society have frequently rebelled against the control of Kelly, but have in most instances been rendered powerless by their opponents. At times they have, under the constitution and by-laws of the society, prevented for a long period the election of new members, the majority of whom they knew would, if elected, simply act to perpetuate the power of the men whose sole desire was to use the organization for base political purposes. Its membership is now about 800, and the value of its property is estimated at $600,000. Under the rules of the society, it is required that notices of meetings shall be published in at least two papers, and the publication of the notice required is usually made in one daily morning and one daily evening paper. The controlling powers of the society, with the very evident design of keeping away their opponents, who might, if they had been present, been able, although in the minority, to defeat their objects, published a notice recently in a weekly mercantile journal not much read by the general public, and the meeting called for by that advertisement, Dec. 31, elected 147 members in their interests. The fact of the meeting, where this large addition to the roll of membership was made, was not known to many of the members until after it was over, and many of them were naturally and justly indignant. Some of the aggrieved persons took counsel and concluded to take legal measures to assert their rights and maintain, if possible, the purity of the organization.

A meeting of the society was held last evening at the Wigwam, in Fourteenth-street, to initiate the recently-elected members. There was a large attendance, among those present being Comptroller John Kelly and ex-District Attorney Nelson J. Waterbury. Grand Sachem Augustus Schell presided, and John D. Newman, officially known as "Wishinkie," and variously called "Jolly Pikin" and "Old Solid Sheet per Shent," (the latter title being given to him opprobriously by Tammany Hall politicians on account of his being intrusted with the work of collecting political assessments from them and paying the commission for the same,) watched the door and let none but the initiated enter. When the Grand Sachem and the officers of the society, with regalia prepared for use, were about to proceed with the mystic ceremonies attending the initiation of candidates, they were all astounded by Mr. John R. Fellows, who served Mr. Schell with an injunction, granted by Judge Barrett, of the Supreme Court, restraining the society from going on with the ceremonies proposed. The injunction had to be respected, of course, and after the appointment of a committee, of which Messrs. George W. Wingate and E. Donnelly are members, an adjournment took place.

The injunction was granted on the application of Deputy Commissioner of Public Works Hubert O. Thompson and Mr. Edward H. Gurk, and a hearing in the case will be had on the 13th inst.

Mr. Thompson, in his affidavit presented to Judge Barrett, says that at the meeting held Dec. 31, 1878, "he has seen a large number of persons who are members of the Tammany Society who say that they did not know of said meeting being about to be held, had no notice thereof, and did not attend the same, and that the only person who deponent has seen who attended that meeting is John D. Newman, one of the officers of said corporation, and from whom this deponent could not fairly or reasonably expect to get any definite or reliable information in the premises other than the fact which deponent did learn from him, that such a meeting was held, and that 147 persons are pretended to have been elected members of the said corporation. From the very nature of the act complained of it has been difficult to obtain as yet any more detailed and direct proof therein than is herewith furnished. Among others from whom deponent has obtained information is Douglas Taylor, who has long been a prominent member of said corporation, and who believes that he will be able to secure additional affidavits which will be beneficial on this motion on or before Jan. 11, 1879."

Mr. Thompson says that he did not see the advertisement calling for the meeting, and he "verily believes that the publication of said call in said paper, and not in the ones habitually used for that purpose, was a part of the scheme of the officers of said corporation to conceal notice of said meeting being about to be held, and to give a color of due notice thereof, and not with a bona fide intent to have the fact known to the members of said corporation that such meeting was to be held."

Mr. Edward H. Gurk in his affidavit states that he had examined all the daily and evening papers printed in this City in the English, German, and French languages, printed from Dec. 2 to Dec. 31, and had failed to find a notice of the meeting in any of them.

THE NEW CUSTOM-HOUSE BILL.

Copies of Collector Merritt's new bill for facilitating the transaction of Customs business were yesterday sent to merchants and others interested, for their inspection, with a request that they express their views and suggestions of modifications in writing. In addition to the clauses permitting payment of duties in certified checks under certain restrictions, and providing for the appointment of Customs Notaries authorized to administer oaths of entries, both of which have already been described in THE TIMES, there are two other sections, not heretofore alluded to. One provides for the use of adhesive stamps, to be affixed to official documents, and to be evidence of the payment of Custom-house fees. The other provides for the licensing of Custom-house brokers. Every such broker is fined $25 per annum, and the penalty for acting as a Custom-house broker without a license at not exceeding $1,000 fine and one year in the penitentiary. Books of licensed brokers are to be at all times open to the inspection of the properly authorized officer of the Treasury. The notarial fees are fixed at 20 cents each, and the Notary's term of office at three years. All except the first section of the bill are made applicable only to cities having a population of over 100,000 inhabitants.

ST. BARNABAS' HOUSE.

The new building of the institution known as St. Barnabas' House, at No. 306 Mulberry-street, was formally dedicated yesterday afternoon. Bishop Potter conducted the dedicatory services, and there was a large number of Episcopal clergymen present, wearing surplices, in addition to the members of the Protestant Episcopal City Mission Society, under whose care St. Barnabas' House is placed. After the reading of the Epiphany, the hymn "Onward, Christian Soldiers," was sung, and Bishop Potter prayed for a blessing upon the institution. Rev. Dr. Gallaudet read the lesson, Rev. Dr. Peters the psalter, and Rev. Dr. Warner prayed. Another hymn was sung, and then Bishop Potter delivered an address, commending the institution as one of the noblest character, and pointing out the rewards of charity. The corner-stone of St. Barnabas' House was laid by Bishop Potter, June 12, 1878. The cost of its construction, $17,000, has been paid by Mr. John Jacob Astor.

WHAT EXCITED WALL-STREET.

One of the old-time Wall-street mobs was gathered by the bursting into flames of William McClouden's news-stand, at the western corner of the Sub-Treasury building, shortly before 2 o'clock yesterday. The stand was one of the oldest in the City, having been established by McClouden's mother over 25 years ago. McClouden stepped upon a match lying on the floor in the vicinity of a can of kerosene-oil, and in an instant a sheet of flame sprang up nearly to the top of the Treasury steps. McClouden made his escape with the left side of his face badly singed. In a few minutes after the fire had appeared itself, a dozen engines and hook and ladder companies, a squad of Police from the New-Street Station, a swarm of Head-quarters detectives, a body of insurance surveyors, and two district engines dashed up. Each in turn was greeted with derisive cheers by the crowd, which numbered several thousand persons. The damage was trifling. It is understood that Mrs. Millionne will refuse McClouden a permit to rebuild the stand.

MRS. ZUGNER REGAINS HER BOND.

The General Term of the Superior Court rendered a decision on appeal, yesterday, affirming the judgment obtained by Mrs. Anna Zugner against the Receiver of the German Savings Bank, of the Town of Morrisania. Mrs. Zugner sued to recover a $1,000 bond of the Morrisania Steam-boat Company which was left at the bank for safe keeping. Her husband, however, by whom it was delivered to the bank, seems to have deposited it in some way as an aid in bolstering up the failing fortunes of the institution; but it was shown that he always spoke of it to the Trustees as his wife's bond, and the indorsement made on it by the Cashier when receiving it was in her name.

UNCLE SAM'S BUSINESS IMPROVING.

The report of Superintendent Lake, of the Weigher's Department of the Custom-house for the 10 months ending Dec. 31, 1878, during which the improved system has been in practice, shows that 2,387,015,435 pounds of merchandise were weighed, at a total expense, including salaries, of $155,-969 88. The quantity weighed during the corresponding period in 1877 was 2,451,808,502 pounds, and the expense $238,347 91. Since April 15, when the new order went into effect, the Government has gained a difference of duties by taking legal instead of schedule tare on 4,454,-[illegible] pounds, with a proportionate saving on other articles. This saving has been more than sufficient to pay the entire expense of the Weigher's Department for the period named.

Last year there were collected in duties on passengers' baggage $142,530 23, against $82,261 75 in 1877, $54,451 20 in 1876, and $8,582 54 in 1864, the first complete year after the system of making declarations went into effect. The great increase is ascribed to the close inspection of baggage that was enforced in August last. During the previous seven months of the year the total amount collected was only $23,582 97. In August the collections jumped to $20,670 32, against $6,893 90 in 1877; in September to $42,454 58, against $19,973 42 in 1877, and in October to $37,840 69, against $16,796 85 in 1877. In November they were $11,967 13, against $10,765 70 in 1877, and in December, $6,044 54, against $3,140 30. The collections since August, 1863, aggregated a little over $800,000.

THE RECENT PARIS EXPOSITION.

ARRIVAL OF COMMISSIONER M'CORMICK IN THIS CITY—HIS VIEWS ON THE GREAT EXHIBITION.

Ex-Gov. McCormick, United States Commissioner-General to the Paris Exposition, arrived in this City last night by the steamer Germanic, and is at the Fifth-Avenue Hotel, where he will remain a few days before proceeding to Washington. Gov. McCormick describes the voyage as exceedingly tempestuous, and speaks of the Germanic as an excellent sea-boat. He left his head-quarters at Paris on Dec. 17, and remained a few days in England before sailing. With the exception of a very few articles, all the unsold American exhibits had previously been sent to Havre, and there shipped on the United States vessels Supply and Constitution. The former sailed from Havre Saturday last, and will come direct to New-York, while the latter will follow her immediately and go to Philadelphia. Their cargoes are small, as barely one-third of all the American exhibits remained unsold. The American machinery was eagerly sought after, and brought good prices. The only locomotive in our exhibit went to Italy, while the large Wheelock engine, made at Worcester, Mass., was not only purchased to remain in France, but the makers sold the royalty for its manufacture in that country for a very large sum. Extensive orders were taken by a Philadelphia firm for cold-pressed nuts and bolts, and these came from nearly every country in Europe. In almost every case the exhibitors of machinery are highly pleased with their success in introducing their goods, and the orders which they have received. In many other branches of American industry the exhibitors were well repaid for their trouble, and Commissioner McCormick states that the French officials assured him of their great satisfaction with the American exhibit, and their belief that it would have an extensive political and commercial effect in France. Of the 137 paintings sent over 12 only were sold, but the Governor, in alluding to this subject could not repress a hearty laugh over the statement gravely broadcast that those pictures which were returned would have to pay a heavy duty at the Custom-house on this side. "Who started that story," said the Governor, "or what his aim or idea was in so doing, I cannot imagine. I have brought one or two hints of pricking the bubble by writing to Collector Merritt and asking him to explain the facts of the case, but I looked each day to see that the absurdity was exposed, and so put it off. In the first place, the pictures unless they were by American artists, nor, of course, could any other be shown in our exhibit. Consequently, the returned pictures will come back to the United States free of all duty, as also do the works of American artists painted abroad. I had supposed that this would have been explained long before, but am glad to be able, through THE TIMES, to assure those Americans who sent over their pictures that they will be under no expense in receiving them back again."

When asked as to his opinion of the Paris Exposition as compared with our own Centennial, he replied that in the general arrangement of the buildings and grounds he considered the American Centennial much the better. In the display of costly fabrics and rich artistic works, however, he believed the Paris Exposition to be the greatest the world has yet seen. While the American Department was not as large as it would have been had Congress taken earlier action, yet it was a good exhibit, and attracted much attention. It was the largest and best American exhibit ever seen in Europe, and especially was he glad that the entire number of exhibitors at the Exhibition of 1867. Then our American exhibitors received 18 gold medals, as against 135 received now, and the distribution of silver and bronze medals was even in greater proportion. The number of diplomas will be sent to the State Department at Washington in a couple of months, and will be forwarded from there to the fortunate winners of them. "In regard to our educational exhibit," he said, "it received very close attention from all classes, and the French people were particularly interested in our system of popular education." Gov. McCormick has left two of his staff in Paris, Messrs. Peterson and Hutchinson, to settle the affairs of the Commission and to forward such articles as may not have been sent on the vessels named, while he will meet the Supply and Constitution at this side and attend to the delivery of their cargoes and the return of the goods here. The Governor considers the year of work he has almost completed one of the most laborious and active of his life, but he is well pleased with the result, and considers that the credit of the country has been fully sustained. He is accompanied by Mrs. McCormick.

THE REPEAL OF ARTICLE XIV.

THE SEVENTH DISTRICT ASSOCIATION EMPHATICALLY OPPOSED TO THE PROPOSITION—THE NINTH DISTRICT SEEKING LIGHT.

The Seventh Assembly District Republican Association met at No. 37 Clinton-place last evening, Mr. Cornelius Van Cott presiding. There was a very full attendance, owing to a previous announcement that action would be taken upon Article XIV. of the Constitution, which prevents any office-holder under Democratic authority from holding an office in a Republican association or a place in the General Committee. After some routine business had been disposed of, a communication on that subject from the General Committee was read. In order to place on record the position of the association of that district, Hon. John D. Lawson offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Whereas, A communication from the Central Committee of the Republican Party of the City of New-York has been received by this association, submitting to it the repeal of Article XIV. of the Constitution of the district associations of the party in this City, and

Whereas, Said article was originally made a part of the constitution of said district associations for good and sufficient reasons, and which, in the judgment of this association, still remain, and therefore such repeal would be not only inexpedient, but injurious to the Republican Party; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this association is opposed to the repeal of said Article XIV. of the constitution of the district associations of this City, and hereby refuses to assent to such repeal.

At a meeting of the Ninth Assembly District Association, Mr. Gilbert J. Hunter presiding, a similar communication from the General Committee was laid before the association for its action. On motion, the President was directed to appoint a committee of seven, which is to meet once a week for the purpose of listening to the opinions of the members of the association on the proposed repeal of Article XIV., and to report the result to the association at its next regular meeting. The President appointed as such committee Messrs. William H. Neary, E. T. Tinsman, Pangborn, George B. Deane, Jr., William E. Keys, J. D. Ackerman, and J. W. Jacobus.

THE FIFTH-AVENUE THEATRE LITIGATION

The heirs of the Gilsey estate applied yesterday to Judge Barrett for leave to institute and prosecute summary civil proceedings for the dispossession of Stephen Fiske and Daniel Harkins from the Fifth-Avenue Theatre. This application was rendered necessary by reason of the court having interposed itself as virtual lessee of the property of the theatre by the appointment of Gunning S. Bedford as Receiver in the suit brought by Harkins against Fiske. The petition sets out that the lessees, Fiske and Harkins, leased the theatre of late Mr. Gilsey for Sept. 2, 1878, at $30,000 a year; that on Jan. 2 the sum of $1,500 became due for rent, but still remains unpaid; that the lessees are insolvent, and that great loss will ensue to the petitioners unless they are allowed to resume possession. The court granted the order as applied for.

CHARLES BELLOWS & CO.'S FAILURE.

The schedule in the matter of the assignment of Charles Bellows & Co. was filed yesterday in the Court of Common Pleas. The firm was composed of Charles Bellows and Richard R. Hunt, and was engaged in the wholesale liquor trade. The liabilities are stated at $43,699 40; nominal assets, $48,-000 [illegible] and actual assets, $6,371 47. Among the principal creditors are S. Wintringham for $2,566, money loaned; C. Delano, $3,612, money loaned; Mary F. Hunt and Ella B. Hunt, $5,655, money loaned; James G. King's Sons, $4,447, on bills of exchange, and John Osborn, Son & Co., $7,342.

FAILURE OF A WESTERN CLOTHING-HOUSE

The failures among Western clothing-houses still continue, and yesterday the announcement was made that Morris & Goldschmidt, of Chicago, had made an assignment to William Marks. The firm have two large stores in Chicago, one in Dubuque, and one in La Crosse. They had several branches, but discontinued them a year ago. The liabilities are about $100,000, mainly due in the City. Philadelphia, and Boston. The assets are nominally about $80,-000. Among the New-York creditors are Henry Newman, Schloss Brothers, and Brigs, Entz & Co.

MME. ANDERSON'S WALK.

At 3:45 o'clock yesterday afternoon Mme. Anderson, at Mozart Garden, Brooklyn, had completed 2,000 quarter miles in her attempt to walk 2,700 quarter miles in as many consecutive quarter hours. The pedestrian has now been on the track three weeks, and last evening entered on the fourth and last week of her wonderful walk. The two thousandth quarter mile was finished before a large and very enthusiastic audience in 3:25, a remarkably good time considering the [illegible] upon which the plucky pedestrian has been subjected for the past three weeks. Mme. Anderson complains somewhat of her feet, which are painfully blistered, but her gait is as elastic and her [illegible] as firm as on the day when she commenced her task. That Mme. Anderson will complete the 2,700 quarter miles in the specified time is regarded as certain.

MISMANAGED GAMES.

THE DISPLAY MADE BY THE KNICKERBOCKER ATHLETIC CLUB AT GILMORE'S GARDEN.

The second annual Winter games of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club were begun in Gilmore's Garden last evening, and were so thoroughly mismanaged as to prove decided failures as tests of skill, strength, or endurance. The entrance-fee being only 25 cents, nearly 400 competitors entered for the several contests, and their general appearance was that of such extreme youth that it seemed as though every boy in the City who was desirous of displaying his callow figure in particolored tights had become an aspirant for athletic honors. A thousand spectators witnessed the performance of these children and appeared highly amused at their antics. The programme of events was so long and the entries for each event were so numerous that midnight found the games still unfinished. They were opened with a 75-yard race, in which 65 competitors were started in 13 heats. At the late hour when most of the spectators felt compelled to go home, the honors of this race remained between J. S. Voorhees, of the Adelphi Athletic Club, and Joseph King. For the one-mile walk there were 51 starters, who ranged in age from 10 years upward, and who presented a most curious spectacle, as in an endless, irregular procession they marched around the sawdust track. The whole affair appeared to be a deep mystery to the judges and scorers, as to the uninitiated spectators, and the manner in which they solved the problem and arrived at the conclusion that J. Fisher had won in 10:05¾, will probably remain a secret forever. The one-mile run was won by J. H. Dobbs, of the Fairwood Athletic Club, in 4:43¾. The running broad jump, was contested by men of more advanced age than any that had hitherto appeared, and proved interesting. It was won by W. T. Livingstone, of the Harlem Athletic Club, who cleared 18 feet 3 inches. The first heat of the 220-yard hurdle-race was won by M. J. Gilligan, of the Clinton Athletic Club, and the second by H. Mooyer, of the Argonauts Rowing Association. The half-mile run brought out 29 starters, and was won by H. C. Romel, of the Triton Club, in 2:25¾. In the three-mile walk were 55 starters, of whom the scratch man was handicapped by four minutes, and withdrew after walking one lap. The winner was declared to be J. S. Clark, of the Independent Athletic Club, in 26:56. The running high jump proved the most interesting event of the evening, and was won by J. H. Oakes, of the American Athletic Club, who cleared 5 feet 2 inches, Elliot Marshall, of the Elizabeth Athletic Club, being second, with 5 feet 2 inches.

Under the auspices of the same club a 25-mile walk for the amateur championship of America will be contested on the same track this evening. For this event there are 47 entries, and as many there are some of the best amateur walkers in the country, including Harry Armstrong, the present champion, the event cannot fail to be one of great interest.

SUFFOCATED BY COAL-GAS.

A PITIABLE RESULT OF LACK OF VENTILATION—ONE GIRL SMOTHERED AND ANOTHER LIKELY TO DIE.

Jennie Schroeder, aged 6 years, a daughter of Mrs. Van Dusen, of the Hess Opera Troupe, was found dead in her bed yesterday morning. Her sister Lizzie, aged 20, was found lying insensible across her body. Mrs. Van Dusen, who is now in Chicago, confided her daughters to the care of Mrs. McCaffrey, of No. 331 East Fifteenth-street. Lizzie, who is a singer by profession, returned on Sunday morning from Washington with the Strakosch opera troupe, of which she is a member. On Sunday night she took Jennie to bed with her. Before retiring she requested Mrs. McCaffrey's daughter to awaken her at 10 o'clock the following morning, and Miss McCaffrey went up at the hour appointed yesterday and found Lizzie lying in a stupor across the body of Jennie, who was dead. She called a gentleman into the room, and he lifted Lizzie, but could not arouse her. Dr. McMasters, of No. 322 East Fifteenth-street, was called in to treat the unconscious girl and examine the body of her dead sister. He found that the child Jennie had been suffocated during the night by the inhalation of coal-gas, and that Lizzie had narrowly escaped the same fate. The girls had gone to sleep, leaving a large coal fire in their room.

Coroner Woltman and Deputy Coroner Gold, accompanied by Dr. Schirmer, went to the house and made an examination. Dr. Goldschmidt confirmed the opinion previously expressed by Dr. McMasters. Lizzie Schroeder is in a precarious condition. Up to a late hour last night she had not regained consciousness. A telegram was sent yesterday morning to Mrs. Van Dusen, and later in the day she answered that her husband would come to New-York from Philadelphia and take charge of the body of their child and care for Lizzie. Dr. Goldschmidt will make an examination of the deceased this morning.

A BRIDEGROOM'S OUTFIT STOLEN.

TWO COOL THIEVES TAKE A PARCEL FROM AN EXPRESS WAGON.

James Ryan, of East Forty-fifth-street, driver of wagon No. 106 of the United States Express Company, was robbed of a valuable package yesterday afternoon while turning into East Fourteenth-street from Broadway. He was given the package—which contained a gentleman's wedding outfit valued at $250—at the clothing-house, No. 944 Broadway, and was to have taken it to the residence of Mr. B. D. Silliman, in Pierrepont-street, Brooklyn. After getting the package Ryan drove down Broadway, and turned into East Fourteenth-street. After going a short distance down that street he looked around into the wagon and noticed that the package was gone. His companion, whose duty it was to watch the packages, could not explain its disappearance. A fruit-vendor at the corner of Broadway and Fourteenth-street told Ryan that he saw two men follow the express wagon and, when the guard within was gazing about, reach in, drag a package from behind the latter's legs, and walk away with it. The thieves took their time, and acted with such deliberation and coolness that the vendor supposed they were merely doing what they had a right to do. They carried their booty toward Fifth-avenue, and disappeared down that thoroughfare. Ryan went to Police Head-quarters, and reported the theft to Inspector Thorne, who sent out a general alarm, describing the stolen parcel.

ARRIVALS AT THE HOTELS.

Francis B. Hayes, of Boston, is at the Gilsey House.

Judge Hiram Gray, of Elmira, is at the Astor House.

Capt. Kennedy, of the steam-ship Germanic, is at the New-York Hotel.

State Treasurer J. M. Renfroe, of Georgia, is at the Grand Central Hotel.

Congressman J. W. Covert, of Flushing, N. Y., is at the Metropolitan Hotel.

Count Lewenhaupt, Swedish Minister at Washington, is at the Clarendon Hotel.

Judge C. R. Ingalls, of the New-York Supreme Court, is at the Rossmore Hotel.

Judge Joseph Potter, of the New-York Supreme Court, is at the Park-Avenue Hotel.

Judge George F. Comstock, of Syracuse, and Gen. S. E. Marvin, of Albany, are at the Windsor Hotel.

Congressman Llewellyn Powers, of Maine, and Rev. A. Bradley, of Liverpool, are at the St. Nicholas Hotel.

R. C. McCormick, United States Commissioner-General to the Paris Exposition; Senator George F. Hoar, ex-Secretary George Boutwell, of Massachusetts; ex-Gov. A. G. Curtin, of Pennsylvania; David A. Wells, of Connecticut; ex-Mayor Henry L. Pierce and T. Bailey Aldrich, of Boston, and Hon. M. Weed, of Plattsburg, N. Y., are at the Fifth-Avenue Hotel.

ST. GEORGE'S CRICKET CLUB.

The annual meeting of the St. George's Cricket Club was held at Delmonico's last evening. The report of the committee for 1878 showed the club to be in a good condition financially, and to have a constantly-increasing membership. It also showed that during the past season the club had played five matches, of which it had won five, lost five, and of which three were drawn. The officers elected for the ensuing year are J. T. Soutter, President; H. H. Green, Vice-President; Berkley Mostyn, Treasurer; J. R. Moore, Secretary, and E. J. Cross, E. R. Morgan, D. B. Gilbert, J. F. Connover, and T. C. Richardson, members of the committee.

A NEW PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

A new Presbyterian church, in Willis-avenue, near One Hundred and Thirty-seventh-street, was opened for service on Sunday last. The edifice is of brick, but is in the Gothic style, and contains seats for 250 persons. It is built on land donated by the late Mr. J. G. Brown, of the New-York Presbytery. The dedication ceremonies will take place Jan. 21. Rev. Mr. Birch is the Pastor. He succeeded the late Rev. Gordon B. Mitchell in June, 1878.

A PANIC IN A CHURCH.

A panic occurred Sunday night in the Cross-Street Methodist Church of Paterson. A prayer service for the opening of the Week of Prayer was held in the church. A young lady entered the church and paid her mother their house rent in five-cent pieces overheard the excited girl, and a number of great excitement followed, many believing the church was on fire. The members of the congregation rushed for the doors, but were assured by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Craig, that "we can not fidget and other nonsense."

VIEWS FROM THE ROSTRUM

LEGISLATION AND ITS DEFECTS.

A LECTURE BEFORE THE MUNICIPAL SOCIETY BY MR. SIMON STERNE.

A large number of members of the New-York Municipal Society gathered at their Madison-avenue hall last evening to listen to a paper read by Mr. Simon Sterne on "Our Methods of Legislation and their Defects." After the recently-elected President of the society, Mr. Theodore M. Adams, had thanked the members for his election and taken his seat, Mr. Sterne began his paper. He took as the key-note of what he had to say the opinion of the court of last resort in the State, pleased on record three years ago, in which it was stated that the mass of State laws relating to public improvements was in such hopeless confusion that it was impossible for the court to give proper interpretations of them in many cases. Mr. Sterne first compared the few legislative wants of the State in its infancy with the great mass of local and private legislation now demanded of the Legislature. The framers of the Constitution adopted all the safeguards for future prosperity they thought to be needed, but they could not foresee the power which great corporations were to acquire, and failed to close the doors against the baleful influences of such institutions. Our present methods of legislation Mr. Sterne thinks, are far behind the demands of modern civilization, not having been improved since colonial days. No safeguards are provided against an enormous pressure for bills relating to private and corporation interests, to the great delay and frequent exclusion of matters of great public importance. Members of the Legislature have come to expect that private citizens must draft all their bills, and they have more pass. The bills framed they get through. Under the present method nobody whatever is responsible for the masses of incongruous laws that are passed. The only remedy, Mr. Sterne's opinion, is found in the distinction rigidly between local and private bills and those of a public character; second, require each local and private bill to be filed with some State officer 60 days before the legislative session opens; third, advertise the bill and its scope in the State papers, and in those published in the locality affected by the bill, as the expense of the parties interested; fourth, allow objections against the bill to be filed during the first 10 days of the session; fifth, allow no private or local bill to be introduced during a session except in extraordinary cases; sixth, require a careful consideration of each bill by a special committee appointed for the purpose. Under such a system as this, said Mr. Sterne, the outrageous violations of the rights of property by the various rapid transit bills could not have been perpetrated. Concerning measures of public and general importance, which are now legislated upon with criminal carelessness, Mr. Sterne thinks that some public body should be organized to revise and draft such laws, and examine all such measures as are proposed for legislation. This would not be a "Council of Revision" would result in polishing all lobbies, for no lobbyist would give up drinking champagne and playing poker with the legislators for the hard work of arguing before some a commission. Mr. Sterne also urged forcibly in favor of giving the heads of governmental departments seats in Congress, where they could render great assistance to the legislators by making suggestions, giving needed information, &c. At the close of the paper a vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Sterne, and the essay ordered to be printed. A motion was adopted providing for a committee of three, with Mr. Sterne as Chairman, to look into the questions suggested by the paper, and report what, if any, action can be taken by the Municipal Society to further the reforms needed in the present methods of legislation. Messrs. George B. Butler and Jackson S. Schultz made short speeches on the subject of the paper, and the meeting was then adjourned.

REVEALING THE INFINITESIMAL.

THE MOST POWERFUL LENS KNOWN TO SCIENCE—DR. EPHRAIM CUTTER BEFORE THE ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

Dr. Ephraim Cutter, of Boston, whose name is familiar in scientific literature as that of a microscope enthusiast, exhibited last night at the meeting of the New-York Academy of Sciences, the first one-seventy-fifth objective ever produced, preceding the exhibition by a lecture in which he gave the history, construction, and uses of this most remarkable lens—the same one, by the way, mentioned by Joseph Cook in one of his Monday lectures. Until within the last 10 years the one-sixteenth inch objective has been regarded as the highest possible result of optical science, and it was only a few years ago that a distinguished microscopist in this country had to defend the one-sixteenth against the zealous partisans of the old-fashioned quarter and fifth, with the narrow angular aperture. The first man who ever obtained an angular aperture of 180 degrees was Spencer, of this City, who probably succeeded in obtaining that result, but was unable to demonstrate it, although it was conceded by competent judges that his register of 178 was not too high. Most experts will recall an article in the American Journal of Science and Art, published in New-Haven, in which this result was set forth as a remarkable one. Spencer had produced a tenth at this early date, and it was supposed by many that with this, and an angular aperture of 178, the capacity of the microscope was exhausted. Robert A. Tolles, to whose ingenuity the lens under description is due, was graduated as a pupil with Spencer and migrated to Boston some years ago. One of his first important lenses was that manufactured for Prof. Clarke, of Harvard College, the author of Mind in Nature, and devout follower of Agassiz. This was the famous one-thirty-second, registering a power of 3,500 diameters, (or 12,250,000 times,) with which Prof. Wyman and Prof. Clarke conducted their once classic inquiries concerning the question of spontaneous generation. In his Mind in Nature, although credit has never been given for the discovery, Prof. Clarke was the first to point out and figure the great diversity of structure which exists among the vibrios and bacteria appearing in infusions. The next remarkable advance in lenses was a fortieth manufactured by Tolles for Dr. A. G. Harriman, of Boston, the discoverer of the nerve fibres in the soft-solid matter of the Oriental Sovereign and of the fibrous or tubular structure of dentine. His papers on these discoveries are familiar to students of dental literature. The one-fiftieth did not, however, prove equal to all the emergencies arising in the progress of dental histology, and two years later Dr. Harriman commissioned Tolles to make the seventy-fifth, laying no limitation upon his respecting expense. The real cost of this powerful objective, which has a working distance of only one two hundred and fiftieth of an inch—that is to say, is that distance from the object when properly adjusted—has been $400. That of the one-fiftieth was $250. The former (both were on exhibition last night) has as compound three systems of lenses, the posterior being adjustable to cover. At first Dr. Harriman could not find any films of glass thin enough to cover objects and admit of adjusting the objective, and had to overcome the difficulty by using lamina of mica instead of glass. This defect has been obviated, however, and he is now using glass covers of the almost incredible thinness of one two hundred and fiftieth of an inch. The lens is available for photographing, and has, when properly illuminated, a moderately clear definition, but will not bear eye-piecing higher than B.

Perhaps an idea of the almost incredible power of such a lens may be obtained from an illustration. The colored corpuscles in human blood were used for the exhibition. These bodies are so minute that it would require about 3,500,000 to cover the surface of a circle half an inch in diameter. The apparent size of such a body under this lens is about that of a 10-cent piece, and the power of this Lilliputian amplifier, not far from 7,500,000 or 56,250,000 times. Dr. Cutter exhibited the microscopic growths in the white blood corpuscle in consumption and other minute objects with success.

GEN. GRANT'S EASTERN JOURNEY.

From the Philadelphia Ledger, Jan. 6.

There ought to be no necessity for explanation about such a matter as the possible addition of some petty expense to the United States steamer Richmond, because of the presence of ex-President Grant on board, while on her cruise in the Indian Ocean and other Eastern seas. But it may be best to make some points clearer than they appear to be to the critics. These folks seem to think that the Government pays the table expenses of the officers on board men-of-war ships. That is a mistake. The officers supply their own tables, paying the bills out of their own pockets. The commanding officer of the ship has his "mess," as it is called; and the other officers have their respective "messes," clubbing together, and each individual officer pays his share. Gen. Grant and ex-Secretary Borie will pay their pro rata the same as if they were officers, and neither the Government nor the "mess" expense of the officers need be at all of extra cost. It is possible that the military and naval officers, at the foreign ports the Richmond will visit, may take a broader view of the presence of an ex-President of the United States on a national ship than the home critics do, and may salute him by firing their great guns, and by other military and naval ceremonial, and this may require the Richmond to expend some blank cartridges in return, according to the custom on such occasions. But this expenditure of powder and all other incidental cost cannot amount to more than a few hundred dollars. Such a return salute for the latter's legs, and will salute the ex-President when he may be at home, for our officers have, from the beginning of the Government down to date, been in the habit of firing just such salutes when their ships, or navy-yards, or forts, or other stations have been visited by distinguished foreigners and official dignitaries, according to the official rank of the visitors. Had Gen. Grant been in the service of the United States and having that time, they have always had authority to enter into such relations on board their ships, charging the expense to the Government. But as above explained the presence of Gen. Grant and Mr. Borie on the Richmond will cost the Government nothing beyond the service of the ship, the salaries of the officers, who pay their own expenses; and as to the powder, perhaps a memorandum might be kept as to the cost of that, to be paid by the ex-President on presentation, or else, as he would most willingly do, discharge with the salutes firing altogether.

CANNING ESTABLISHMENT BURNED.

LOSS OF ABOUT $100,000 TO A ST. LOUIS COMPANY.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 6.—The extensive establishment of the St. Louis Beef Canning Company, at Fourteenth and Poplar streets, caught fire at 10:45 o'clock last night. In the rear of this building is an alley, on the opposite side of which is another large building used by the company, which the firemen succeeded in saving. The front part of the establishment was entirely destroyed. The fire originated in the process room, but how nobody knows, as no one had been there since 12 o'clock on Saturday night. The loss is estimated at from $75,000 to $100,000 on the stock. The building, owned by Charles E. Peck, was insured for $20,000. The following are the figures on the stock of the canning company, as follows: Home, New-York; Phœnix, Brooklyn; North British and Mercantile, Springfield Fire and Marine, Commercial Union, of London; Rhode Island Association, and the Hardware Manufacturers, $5,000 each; London, Liverpool, and Globe, $7,500; Guardian, of London; Shoe and Leather, of Boston; Mechanics' and Traders', of New-York; Connecticut Insurance Company, Hamburg and Bremen, and the St. Joseph Fire and Marine, $2,500 each; and on the fixtures, tools, &c., American, of Philadelphia, and the Manhattan, of New-York, $5,000; Continental, of New-York, and American, of Newark, N. J., $2,500 each. Each building was covered by insurance.

OTHER LOSSES BY FIRE.

A fire at Ashtabula, Ohio, yesterday morning, destroyed the stock of Hall & Co., to the extent of $5,000. The block is owned by R. C. Warmington, J. R. Starrett, the lessee, loses about $5,000 on furniture. The lower floors of the block were occupied as stores, as follows: J. Topky, hardware; A. R. Thurber, drugs; George Dickinson, jewelry, and the Ashtabula National Bank. The following insurance companies are interested: The Hibernian, $2,000; the Phœnix Mutual, Brooklyn, $2,000; Girard Fire, $2,000; Aetna, $1,000; Hartford, $1,000; North British, $1,000; Lycoming, $3,000; London and Liverpool and Globe, $2,200; Western companies, $11,000. The total loss about $10,000.

A fire at Saginaw City, Mich., on Sunday night, destroyed the residence of Mrs. E. E. Thompson. The loss is $5,000; insurance, $3,000.

MARINE DISASTERS.

LIVERPOOL, Jan. 6.—The steam-ship Imbros, from Boston, which arrived here to-day, had four of her boats and her bridge damaged in storms. She brought the crew of the British bark James H. Myrick, Capt. McRae, abandoned at sea.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The Allan Line steamer Nova Scotian, on her passage from Baltimore to Glasgow, lost her surgeon's and purser's rooms and had six of her crew injured in gales, one of whom died.

The Norwegian ship Adolph Tideman, Capt. Pettersen, from Philadelphia Dec. 11, for Dunkirk, is stranded near the latter port, and lies in a bad position.

HAVRE, Jan. 6.—The Hamburg-American Line steamer Herder, which went ashore while leaving this harbor on Saturday for New-York, got off and proceeded for her destination yesterday morning.

YAPHANK, Long Island, Jan. 6.—The steamer Vindicator now lies 300 yards from the beach. There is about the same quantity of water in her hold as there was yesterday, it rising and falling with the tide. No pumps have been able to work owing to there being no place to set them, in consequence of the height below in the way. Four schooners have arrived to receive her cargo, one being already alongside preparing to receive her deck load, which consists of heavy machinery. The crew, with the exception of the Captain and engineer, have started for New-York. The mate, who at the time of the ship's stranding was seriously indisposed, has so far recovered as to be able to walk around.

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. 6.—The schooner Snow Flake, bound to New-York, with a cargo of wood, struck on the outer reef at Chincoteague on Friday last and filled with water. The crew, consisting of six men, lived on top of the cabin for two days without fire, food, or water. The United States steamer Tallapoosa went to their assistance yesterday, and towed the schooner to this port, arriving here at 12 o'clock to-day. The rescued men were nearly exhausted, and it is thought none are seriously injured. They are being well cared for here.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Jan. 6.—The schooner W. A. Levering, of Philadelphia, Smith, from Nevassa, for Wilmington, N. C., with guano, which had been leaking for the past week, was entirely disabled, was picked up at sea and towed to Fernandina Sunday by the tug Oyster Boy.

NATURE OF THE ELEMENTS.

MR. LOCKYER'S EXPERIMENTS WITH THE SPECTROSCOPE.

INDICATIONS THAT SUBSTANCES HERETOFORE REGARDED AS SIMPLE ARE COMPOUND—ANALYSIS OF STARS AND SUNS—POSSIBLE REVELATIONS OF THE SPECTRUM.

At a recent meeting of the Royal Society in London, Mr. J. Norman Lockyer, F. R. S., read a long paper, in which he discussed the evidence derived from spectroscopic observation of the sun and stars and from laboratory experiments, which has led him to the conclusion that the so-called elements of the chemist are in reality compound bodies. In order that the line of argument followed by Mr. Lockyer may be understood, it will be necessary briefly to refer to the results of previous researches. As a rule, in observing spectra, the substance to be examined is volatilized in a gas flame or by means of sparks from an induction coil, and the light is allowed to fall on the slit of the spectroscope; the spectrum is then generally one in which the lines run across the entire field, but by interposing a lens between the spark apparatus and the slit of the spectroscope, Mr. Lockyer was enabled to study the various regions of the heated vapor, and thus to establish the fact, already noted by some previous observers, but to which little attention had been paid, that all the lines in the spectrum of the substance volatilized did not extend to equal distances from the poles. He then showed by the aid of this method that in the case of alloys containing different proportions of two metals, if the one constituent were present in very small quantity, its spectrum was reduced to its simplest form, the line or lines longest in the spectrum of the pure substance alone appearing, but that on increasing the amount of this constituent its other lines gradually appeared in the order of their lengths in the spectrum of the pure substance. Similar observations were made with compound bodies. It was also noticed that the lines furnished by a particular substance varied not only in length and number, but also in brightness and thickness, according to the relative amount present. Armed with these facts, and with the object of ultimately ascertaining more definitely than has hitherto been possible which of the elements are present in the sun, Mr. Lockyer, about four years ago, commenced the preparation of a map of a particular region of the spectrum of iron vapor. This map consisted simply of the map of the same region of the solar spectrum. For this purpose about 2,000 photographs of spectra of all the various metallic elements have been taken, and in addition, more than 100,000 observations have been made. As it is almost impossible to obtain pure substances, the photographs have been carefully compared in order to eliminate the lines due to impurities; the absence of a particular element as an impurity being regarded as proved if its longest and strongest line was absent from the photograph of the element under examination. The result of all this labor, Mr. Lockyer states, is to show that hypothesis that identical lines in different spectra are due to vibrations of the same molecule is not sufficient, for he finds short line coincidences between the spectra of many metals in which the freedom from mutual impurity has been demonstrated by the absence of similar lines, but merely coincident when they are unable to decompose or which they have no special reason to regard as compound bodies. The remarkable relations, both in atomic weight and properties, existing between many of the elements tend, indeed, to show that they are related in the manner Mr. Lockyer supposes.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

THE DECISION IN THE CASE OF SONNEBORN AGAINST A. T. STEWART & CO. REVERSED—DISMISSAL OF THE CREDIT MOBILIER SUIT—THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE ANTI-POLYGAMY LAWS AFFIRMED.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—A decision was rendered to-day in the United States Supreme Court in the case of A. T. Stewart & Co., appellants, against Meyer Sonneborn. Sonneborn instituted a civil suit for damages in the United States Circuit Court for the District of Alabama, on the ground that Stewart & Co. had maliciously forced him into bankruptcy without probable cause. A judgment was rendered in his favor for $20,000. It is held by the Supreme Court that the lower court erred in positively instructing the jury to return a verdict for Sonneborn, independently of considerations of malice in the institution of the bankruptcy proceedings or want of probable cause therefor; that it is abundantly settled that no suit can be maintained against an unsuccessful plaintiff or prosecutor unless it be shown affirmatively that he was actuated by malice or some sinister motive; that the conduct of Stewart & Co. should have been weighed, in view of what appeared to them when they filed their petition in the bankrupt court, and not in the light of subsequently appearing facts; that if they then believed and had reasonable cause to believe that Sonneborn was indebted to them for goods sold to Leipziger & Co., and that he had committed an act of bankruptcy there was probable cause for their action, and Sonneborn was not entitled to recover. The facts stated, if believed by the jury, were a perfect defense, and the jury should have been so instructed. The judgment of the Circuit Court is, therefore, reversed, with costs, and a new trial ordered. Justice Strong delivered the opinion, Justic Bradley dissenting.

A decision was also rendered in the case of the United States, appellants, vs. the Union Pacific Railroad Company et al., appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Connecticut. This is the suit commonly known as the Credit Mobilier case, and was originally brought by the Attorney-General in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Connecticut, in obedience to the requirements of the fourth section of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1873. Its main purpose was to protect the mortgage security and other interests of the United States arising out of the latter's relations with the railroad corporation. The defendants interposed a demurrer, which was sustained by the Circuit Court, and the bill of the complainants was dismissed upon that decree, and the case brought to this court. It is here held that a court of justice is not called on for the nicety in the balance of benefits and favors between the parties to such a controversy as this, but into their respective rights, as established by law, found in their contracts and recognized by the established principles of equity. Governed by this rule, and by the decision of Congress in passing the law under which this suit was brought, this court holds that no case for relief is made out by the bill of complaint, and the decree of the Circuit Court dismissing the bill is accordingly affirmed. Justice Miller delivered the opinion, Justices Swayne and Harlan dissenting.

The case of George Reynolds, plaintiff in error vs. The United States, was also decided. This was a writ of error brought by the Supreme Court of the Territory of Utah, to test the constitutionality of the acts of Congress prohibiting polygamy. Reynolds, plaintiff in error, was tried in the Third Judicial District Court of Utah, found guilty, and the Supreme Court of the Territory affirmed the judgment. The case comes here upon a writ of error, the plaintiff pleading the unconstitutionality of the law prohibiting bigamous marriages, the institution of impaneling a jury for trial and various unimportant legal technicalities. This court, in a long and carefully prepared opinion delivered by the Chief-Justice, holds that polygamy is not one of the rights of which the clause of the Federal Constitution which prohibits interference with religious belief; that the pleas of religious conviction is not a valid defense; that Congress did not step outside the limits of its constitutional powers by passing laws for the suppression of polygamy in Utah, and that the judgment of the Superior Court of that Territory must be affirmed. Justice Field dissented as far as related to the admissibility of certain challenges to the panel of the lower court, but upon the main question, the constitutionality of the act of Congress prohibiting polygamous marriages, there was perfect unanimity.

JUDGE COWING TAKES HIS SEAT.

THE NEW CITY JUDGE CONGRATULATED—HIS FIRST SENTENCE—APPOINTMENT OF COURT ATTENDANTS.

City Judge Cowing took his seat on the bench of the General Sessions Court, Part II., yesterday. His accession had the effect of attracting an immense crowd, among whom were nearly all the lawyers practicing in the criminal courts. The new Judge opened court at 11 o'clock, and proceeded at once with the transaction of business. Having heard the excuses of a large number of petit jur ors, he arranged with District Attorney Rollins and counsel for the defense, days of trial in six murder cases to be disposed of during the pres ent term. While so engaged, Recorder Hackett, who had come down to pass sentence on Walker, and Judge Gildersleeve, whose calendar in Part I. had run out, entered, and the three Judges occupied seats on the bench. Judge Cowing was the recipient of the warmest congratulations from Recorder Hackett, Judge Gildersleeve, the District Attorney and his assistants, and the lawyers of every political stripe in attendance. He seemed perfectly at home in his new position, and transacted the business of the court with commendable dispatch. He displayed a thorough familiarity with the duties of his office, and created a very favorable impression on the members of the legal profession.

The first case to come before the new Judge was that of William Henry Howard, alias "Jim, the Kid," an ex-convict, who was arrested for stealing $40 from the till of the store No. 709 Broadway. Howard pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to the mitigated penalty of two years in State Prison. His Honor then proceeded with the ordinary business of the court.

The court attendants appointed by Judge Cowing presented themselves to Capt. McCloskey, and were assigned to duty. Officer William Wardell, Judge Sutherland's special attendant, who was reappointed by Judge Cowing, at the request of the outgoing Judge, will be the new Judge's special officer. The order for Part II. has not yet been selected, but the choice will probably fall on Henry C. Patterson, brother of Jacob M. Patterson, Jr. The crier receives no more salary than the other officers. Lawrence A. Curry, an ex-City Marshal, has been assigned to duty in the Grand Jury room. Peter Seaman, another of the new attendants, was Cashier at French's Hotel up to the time of his appointment.

MARRIED A LITTLE TOO LATE.

The First National Bank of Auburn, N. Y., recovered judgment against Henry W. Beardslee, a clerk in the Water Purveyor's office in this City, and applied to the court for an order directing that his salary due from the City for the month of September, 1878, be applied in satisfaction of the judgment. The judgment was obtained on Sept. 23, and the salary was due Beardslee two days later. In opposing the plaintiff's motion Beardslee made affidavits that he was a married man, and that his salary was necessary for the support of himself and family. The bank showed, however, that he was married on Oct. 5, and that at the time the salary was earned he was not a married man. Judge Bassett, before whom the motion was argued, at Chambers, held that Beardslee's subsequent marriage could not affect the plaintiff's vested right as against the salary due him at the time the judgment was obtained, and granted the plaintiff's motion. From this order Beardslee appealed, and the case was argued yesterday before the General Term, which reversed its decision.

A DISCHARGED FIREMAN'S CASE.

Gilbert R. Merritt was appointed a fireman and attached to Hook and Ladder Company No. 3, in 1866. A year later he was detailed to the Storekeeper's Bureau, and remained there till 1872. He was then receiving $1,200 a year salary. In 1872, however, he was reduced to the rank of messenger, at $1,000 a year salary, and he held that position until 1874, when he was discharged from the Fire Department service. He lately applied to the Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari to review the proceedings of the Board of Fire Commissioners dismissing him. Judge Barrett yesterday denied the motion because of the tardiness of the application invoking the aid of the court, and because of the petitioner's acquiescence in all previous transfers and removals made in respect to himself by the board.

M'GLORY INDICTED.

The Grand Jury yesterday found an indictment against the notorious Billy McGlory for maintaining a disorderly house at his establishment known as "the Windsor Palace," No. 103 Bowery, where Marie was received upon trial recently. The accused has been notified to plead to the indictment before Judge Cowing in General Sessions to-day.

WHIRLED ABOUT BY A SHAFT.

Mary A. Eyan was employed as an ironer in a steam laundry contained in a building owned by Peter M. Wilson. A shaft connecting with a steam-engine, and revolving at a high rate of speed, ran through the room in which she worked. One day, while she was on her way to the range used for heating the irons, her dress was caught by the shaft, and she was whirled about violently. One of her legs was so badly fractured that it had to be amputated, and she was severely burned, besides receiving other injuries. She sued Wilson, in the Superior Court, for $25,000 damages, insisting that the accident was due to his negligence in not fairing the shafting properly covered or guarded. The case is now on trial before Judge Freedman and a jury. Wilson's defense is that the accident was owing to the plaintiff's own negligence.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

A PLEA IN EXTENUATION FOR THE EAST SIDE ROAD.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

While every one using the East Side elevated road has some special grievance, and very many have the same one, perhaps it is as well to consider that very many of the grievances will apply to any steam-road, anywhere, whether it be the manners of employes or the general management of the road. Consider what has been said of horse-car conductors; then what have been and are their grievances too. Every one insists upon getting on the car, and finds fault that seats are not provided for 40 to 60—every one expects the conductor to stop at their respective streets, without taking the trouble to attend to their own business; so, likewise every one insists upon riding in the elevated cars without regard to their number, and if perchance a train, by reason of being full, passes a station, they insist on getting on or blaming the company for not furnishing trains enough. Do they consider how near together trains are when running on one and a half or two minutes headway; that then (and it is so) a train is at the station as soon as the one ahead has hauled out; or that any delay or accident to one train is delay to all? Do they consider that building this road to Harlem was no small undertaking, absorbing every one's work to accomplish it? It being accomplished, can they not allow a reasonable time to get the working details laid out.

By what has been done and not done, it is easy to be seen that a single track or single tracks on two avenues can never accomplish the end we expect. No train can run faster than the slowest way train; but what Harlem passenger considers this? The proper remedy for delay can only be accomplished by having four tracks south of Sixtieth-street, one for way, and one for through travel, the latter making fast time and no stops south of Sixty-fifth-street. It has been proposed that the first train out shall stop at the second, fourth, and all even stations; second train stopping at all odd stations; but what endless confusion that would breed to the passengers. Regarding the present complaints against employes, what man, after answering the same question 50 times, after striving in vain to keep back passengers, to prevent children and dogs from being run over in already over-crowded, taking the "talk" and complaints of a hundred, will not lose his temper? They certainly show as good sense as the public, who berate a station-man for limits of the company.

I am not an employé of the company. I am of the opinion that the public, whether striving to get the first seat on a train or at a matinée at the Academy of Music, are a pack of nervous wrecks. I vote to any one that stands in their course; but regarding present management, consider that the travel presented to this company is far in excess of expectations, that the road is just opened, just commenced running its trains, and that in the course of a day, nor in six days of 24 hours each, and this company cannot build and equip their road by wishing. I fancy they are running it to make money, and will supply necessary rolling-stock and equipment as rapidly as possible. Give us four tracks, fast through trains, five-cent fare, and they can make money and accommodate us too. In the meantime, overhaul their employes. Keep them as quiet and civil and faithful as we may expect under the trials they may expect from such a fault-finding public.

FISH-HATCHING.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The New-York Fishery Commissioners report that their operations with speckled trout, lake trout, and California trout promise well this year. The trout of Caledonia Brook were two weeks later than usual in commencing to spawn, and the salmon trout in the lakes were 10 days later than their ordinary time. This must have been due to the weather and the temperature of the water. They think very highly of the California trout in every respect, as regards its natural vigor, its game and table qualities, its rapidity of growth, its ruggedness of nature, and the hardiness of its young. They have obtained 300 mature California brook trout at the State hatchery. From these 300 were obtained 60,000 eggs in good condition. The eggs hatched well and are growing rapidly, and the Commissioners think the yield this year will be something astonishing. These trout spawn several months later than the brook trout of Eastern waters.

In one respect are the California trout inferior, and that is in the matter of appearance. They are not by any means so handsome, and have not the carmine specks on their sides which are the peculiar characteristic and ornament of the true Salmo fontinalis. The Commissioners have also obtained eggs of California salmon from the United States Commission, but have no call for them, and desire to give notice to all persons interested that if these salmon, which are now hatched, are not taken off their hands by them by April 1 they will turn over to New-York there has never been much demand for the eggs of salmon, and so far as that State is concerned the importation might as well be stopped. California salmon are very handsome fish, and good, as they will attain a good size when restricted from visiting the sea, and they might be used for that purpose in ponds that have spring water, or which were once inhabited by trout. They will grow with trout, and under the same conditions, and will grow much more rapidly, but they must not be allowed to escape down stream, for go they will, if they can, toward the sea, as they already gone over the Genesee Falls with that object. These last certainly will never come back. If any one wants California salmon he has only to send word to Caledonia to Mr. Seth Green, the State Superintendent, to be accommodated.

ROBERT B. ROOSEVELT, Commissioner.

A NEEDFUL CAUTION.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I noticed among the congregation in Dr. Hall's church, this morning, two gentlemen, in the families of each of whom are severe cases of scarlet fever. In the pew with one of these gentlemen were two young children, strangers to him. If the theory adopted by most physicians be true, that this disease can be carried in clothes, the conduct of these gentlemen is inexcusable. Perhaps on Sunday are usually hung up in the vestibules during the week, and when the house is infected with fever poison, those clothes are certain to absorb the spores and to communicate the infection to any one susceptible of this disease. Timely word from you might instruct the ignorant or remind the thoughtless of the necessity of avoiding public assemblies with infected garments. MEDICUS.

NEW-YORK, Sunday, Jan. 5, 1878.

A REQUEST FOR REFORM.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Please reduce the pay of the Police and increase the number of ash carts, and you will confer a favor upon the NINTH WARD.

DECISIONS IN THE COURTS.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

By Chief-Judge Davis.

Morgan vs. Merrill.—Judgment ordered with reference to William Pierce Scott to sell the mortgaged premises, and with judgment for deficiency against Edward M. Merrill, and not against Hannah Merrill, allowance of $150, counsel fee and $10 costs. Mutual Life Insurance Company vs. Glover 14 Hun, 154. There is no allegation in the complaint that distinguishes this case from that. The action fails to show that the mortgaged property was the wife's separate estate, or that the debt was incurred for her benefit; on the contrary, the allegation is that it was conveyed to the mortgaged property, and not one owned or common.

In the Matter of Foster.—It will be necessary to file a bond. The estate of the deceased surety is not holden, and the remaining sureties have not justified in the amount required by the order. The Trustee may file his bond within 20 days, the condition to be as directed in the former order. No costs of this motion to either party.

In the Matter of Schenck.—There should be a reference to ascertain the present condition of the trust fund, and the truth of the affidavit and statement of the Trustee in relation to the alleged agreement under which he has disposed of portions of the fund. It is ordered that those purposes to — Harrison, Esq., and the further hearing of the motion to remove the Trustee is reserved till the coming in of the report.

The Signal Service Bureau reports for to-day, in this region, colder north-west backing to warmer south-west winds, clear or partly cloudy weather, rising barometer.

It is not impossible that the quiet of the Senate, which was only briefly disturbed by the debate on the Blaine resolutions, may be more seriously interrupted by a political struggle over the seat of Mr. CORBIN, of South Carolina, from which he is now barred by Gen. M. C. BUTLER. Our dispatches explain how the question stands, and what are the prospects of success for a movement to dispossess the sitting claimant. The incident hinges on the return of Senator SHARON, of Nevada, who has finally been able to arrange his private affairs so as to find time for attention to the less important duties of his position in the Senate. Should the case be called up, it may give rise to debate upon a somewhat novel question, viz., the right of the Vice-President, as President of the Senate, to give a casting vote upon the question of a member's title to his seat. "Each house," says the Constitution, "shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members," and, on the other hand, "the Vice-President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no vote unless they be equally divided." It would seem from this language that the Vice-President becomes ex officio, in case of a tie, a part of the Senate, as much when an election is under consideration as at any other time.

Among the subjects which will claim the prompt attention of Congress upon its reassembling is the distribution of the remainder of the Geneva award, which is made a special order in the House for to-morrow. That we should have in the Treasury, six years after the award was made, nearly two-thirds of the amount received from Great Britain, is a most difficult thing to explain on any reasonable hypothesis of fair dealing. But that this fact should be due to the persistent refusal of Congress to admit a large class of claimants, whose losses were presented with great earnestness at Geneva, to even a hearing as to their right to the money, is not only difficult but impossible to reconcile with fair dealing. The duty of Congress is perfectly simple. Let it refer all claims to a tribunal empowered and fitted to decide them equitably and in accordance with the principles laid down in the laws and in the decision of the Commissioners, and, if we then have a balance remaining, let it be placed unreservedly at the disposition of the Government from whom it was erroneously collected. Such an act would do more to advance the interests of peace by showing the capacity of a great Government to live up to the spirit of a friendly arbitration than anything that has been done in international congresses in a half century.

Mr. Corporation Counsel WHITNEY has given an opinion on the power of the Common Council over the streets, which appears to dispose conclusively of such jobs as those in which Mr. WEBB and Mr. SPINOLA have been engaged. His points are very clearly and logically stated. He denies the power of the Council to grant franchises such as were conveyed to WEBB without special authority from the Legislature; if such power existed, it could not be exercised, as has been attempted, without reservation of the right of repeal, as the Council cannot convey franchises in perpetuity; legislative powers in restraint of the franchises, if these could be granted, cannot be delegated to the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, and the resolution so delegating them is invalid. These are points of such obvious force that the merest tyro in Municipal matters ought to be familiar with them.

Silver still drags in the neighborhood of 49½ pence per ounce in London, now and then bouncing or drooping an eighth, but exhibiting very little activity at any price. According to the report of the London Times, the only demand which has kept up even the low market rate now prevailing is that from Austria, which, on Saturday, took $300,000 at 49⅝. At this price the bullion value of the 412½-grain dollar is less than 84 cents. It is greatly to be desired that Congress should take advantage of the present situation to rectify the mistaken legislation regarding silver. It is now evident that the hopes of those honest men who were persuaded that the Silver bill would bring the old dollar to par must be dismissed. The belief of those who thought that the remonetization of silver was necessary to the successful operation of the Resumption act has proved equally illusory. Both these opinions were sincerely held by well-meaning members of Congress, who would perhaps be willing, now that the truth is established beyond all dispute, to remove the most serious danger in the way of permanent success of resumption by repealing the Silver act.

The annual Message of Gov. BISHOP, of Ohio, is a modest and sensible document, containing numerous practical suggestions concerning State affairs, but wholly free from any allusion to national matters—an exemption which Democratic Governors are not in the habit of practicing. The Governor reports the State debt of Ohio at the moderate sum of $6,476,805, all but a few thousand dollars of which is payable in 1881 and 1886, and bears 6 per cent. interest. The local indebtedness of the State is, however, heavy, that of the counties being over $3,000,000, and that of the cities being nearly $36,000,000, and the total debt, local and general, being nearly $52,000,000. Among the recommendations of the Governor are the following: That the required number of Militia be reduced to 10,000, (instead of 20,000,) and that their pay be increased and their equipment and discipline be made as perfect as possible; that provision be made for courts of arbitration between workmen and their employers; that payment of wages otherwise than in money be more strictly prohibited; that district schools be improved in organization; that provision be made for the more effectual prevention of grave-robbery, and for furnishing bodies for dissection; that the fees of county officers be reduced to a reasonable maximum, the surplus to be paid into the Treasury.

THE MUNICIPAL PROBLEMS OF TWO CITIES.

As outlined in the brief but pregnant Message of Mayor COOPER, and as set forth in the very able and comprehensive review of city affairs given by Mayor HOWELL, there is a striking identity between the questions with which those responsible for the administration of New-York and Brooklyn have to deal. The relative financial condition of the two cities is pretty nearly as follows: With an assessed valuation five times as great as that of Brooklyn, New-York has a net bonded debt less than three times as great, and a tax levy bearing the proportion of four and a half to one. Or, to put the matter in a different shape, the net permanent debt of New-York represents a lien of 93¼ per cent. on its taxable property, while that of Brooklyn represents a lien of 17 per cent.; the tax levy of New-York is but little over 2½ per cent. on its assessed valuation; that of Brooklyn is about 3 per cent. Both cities have suffered, in proportions not so unequal as is generally supposed, from official peculation and political jobbery, only in the case of Brooklyn the stealing has been more carefully disguised under the forms of law. The tax-payers of both are paying the penalty for the exorbitant cost of public works, in many cases premature and in most cases unproductive. It is the imperative necessity of both to set about a resolute reduction of debt and a vigorous retrenchment in the salaries paid to their employes.

Mayor COOPER makes some general recommendations on the latter point; Mayor HOWELL takes advantage of his administrative experience, and comes down to specific details. Brooklyn has reduced the pay of its patrolmen to $1,000 a year, and of its firemen to $900. Mayor HOWELL thinks that these rates can be still further reduced to $800 and $700, respectively. New-York pays its patrolmen and firemen $1,200, and the combined salary list of the Police and Fire Departments amounts to $4,500,000. Assuming that we can follow the example of Brooklyn to the extent of enforcing a reduction of 20 per cent. on the salaries of the Police and Fire Departments, we should at once secure a saving of $900,000 a year, and our Police and firemen would still be better off than their brethren in Brooklyn. On the remaining $5,000,000 paid in New-York for salaries there is unquestionably room for a similar reduction, so that by the aid of the Legislature a saving of about $2,000,000 a year can be at once effected on the salary list of this City without the slightest detriment to the efficiency of local administration. Applied to the reduction of the debt and the prosecution of needful public improvements, such a saving would be a very substantial boon to New-York tax-payers.

The resources of New-York are, obviously, more elastic than those of Brooklyn, and the margin for retrenchment is at the same time greater. Both cities might, with great advantage, simplify their departmental system, and concentrate responsibility by making all departments, with the possible exception of the Police, single-headed. It is very poor policy for Republicans to continue to maintain the cumbrous machinery of administrative boards in Brooklyn merely on the ground that their friends are in possession of most of the offices, and, we trust, the time has gone by when a Republican majority in the Legislature will allow itself to be used for the purpose of keeping up three-headed departments in this City for the benefit of Tammany Hall. The party that most promptly recognizes and acts on the necessity for reducing all classes of public expenditures is the party which will attract the support of the people. The "burning questions" in State and municipal politics are, year by year, becoming fewer; the question of economy is the most vital one at present before the people. Leading men of both parties have been loud in their professions of devotion to the cause of retrenchment. The Republican Party is too powerful in the Legislature of 1879 to permit it to shirk the responsibility for action in this matter. The able and ambitious man in both houses will find the field of economy the one which offers the best promise of immediate reward and lasting distinction.

Both Mayor COOPER and the President of the new Board of Aldermen pointedly allude to the fact that the results of the last election were an outcome of public dissatisfaction with the existing management of City affairs. The new Administration will not be true either to its pledges or to the mandate of the people if it travels in the grooves of its predecessor. How much the Kelly régime dreads the operation of the new broom may be inferred from the piteous appeal made by the Controller's evening organ for harmony between the Mayor and the head of the Finance Department. As the vote of November was an energetic protest against both the methods and the men favored by Mr. KELLY, the absurdity of expecting the Mayor to co-operate with the Controller is sufficiently apparent. Mr. COOPER is not the sort of man to be fooled by any overtures from Tammany Hall, and if the Anti-Tammany Democrats in the Board of Aldermen share the principles and purposes of their able and upright colleague who has been elected President of the board, there is but little danger of the vantage ground gained by the combination in November being abandoned.

SELF-INTEREST AS A MOTIVE TO GOOD FAITH.

A Nashville newspaper, referring to the growing tendency toward a virtual repudiation of the Tennessee debt, protests against the policy on the ground that it will react unfavorably to the people themselves. The rights and interests of the creditors are dismissed as unworthy of consideration. "Will a failure to meet outstanding obligations ultimately prove profitable to the people of the State?" is in effect the query propounded by the editor. He answers it negatively. There is no affectation of morality in the argument, no remonstrance against bad faith as one form of dishonesty, no advocacy of an honorable settlement as a matter of duty. Expediency is the only consideration deemed worthy of thought, or which is likely to affect the conduct of Tennesseeans. Perhaps we should be thankful even for the admission that repudiation is undesirable because it would be unprofitable. When dealing with a community like that which makes laws in Tennessee, a scrutiny of motives is unnecessary. The appeal of our Nashville contemporary is decisive as to the preponderance of sordid motives over upright ones, at least in that part of the State.

Nor is the appeal applicable only to Tennessee. With quite as much force, it may be addressed to the readjusters of Virginia and the repudiators of Minnesota, to the municipal rulers of Charleston and New-Orleans, to the impatient tax-payers of bonded towns in New-York and Vermont, to the citizens of Rahway and Elizabeth in New-Jersey, and to the uncounted list of defaulting municipalities in Illinois, Missouri, and other Western States. The arguments and phrases current among honorable men are wasted when applied to people who insist that as between their creditors and themselves their own convenience shall alone be consulted. A State, a county, or a town which employs lawyers to pick holes in a contract under which the money wanted was obtained, is beyond the reach of right or of the reason which dictates justice. In business matters the man who avails himself of a technicality to rid himself of liability for the payment of goods which he bought and has sold, earns the reputation of a very mean scoundrel. The judgment passed upon the State or municipality in the case supposed will not be more flattering.

The case is not materially changed if the community forces upon its creditors a readjustment amounting to a repudiation of more or less of the debt, with no better excuse than an alleged oppressiveness of taxation. Debtors cannot be allowed to plead inconvenience of payment as an answer to their creditors' demands. If unable to pay, the insolvency laws open a way of escape, but the stigma of insolvency remains. Municipalities have neither so good an excuse nor so easy a method of deliverance. The property is there, and if the owners refuse to bear the burdens which they helped to put upon it, we cannot form a favorable opinion of their integrity. A municipality that would keep its name untainted will make any sacrifice rather than rob the creditors who furnished money for its improvement. The list we have partially enumerated proves that scruples of this sort are not allowed to stand in the way of the relief afforded by default and arbitrary readjustment. Churches abound in all these places, and preachers never tire of talking of righteousness and judgment. What then? The talk does not touch a defaulting and readjusting community, State or municipal. Right and wrong are terms ignored. The tax-payers avail themselves of the virtual helplessness of the creditors to rob them with impunity. The citizen who should get up among them and emphasize the injunctions of morality would be laughed at.

Here, then, the Nashville lesson comes in with a chance of being listened to. "Never mind morality; do not trouble yourselves about justice or other abstractions; consider only that in the long run bad faith does not pay." Potent as this consideration may be, its efficacy when applied to States and municipalities is derived from the fact that the damage inflicted upon their credit in reality falls upon their citizens. It is of little moment, probably, that Minnesota or Tennessee could not now obtain a loan on any terms; but it is of great importance that their towns and people, who have need of all the capital that can be got, have their credit injured by the bad faith of their State. Still more directly is injury done to the credit of citizens of defaulting and repudiating municipalities. Naturally, they are regarded with more or less distrust. They cannot obtain credit as freely as before. The slur cast upon the integrity of the citizens as a body attaches in some degree to each of them. From a selfish point of view, therefore, indifference to State or Municipal obligations is unwise. Relief obtained at the cost of creditors is delusive. It is soon exhausted, while the indirect losses consequent upon dishonor or dishonesty last a lifetime.

If more specific evidence be needed of the manner in which tampering with public faith reacts injuriously to individuals, it may be found in the futile endeavors of Western mortgageors to obtain substantial concessions from the mortgagees. With the controversy in regard to Western farm mortgages our readers are familiar. Recently, however, it has developed a new feature. Parties who have contended that these mortgages afford complete security to Eastern lenders now call upon the latter to acquiesce in a reduction of the interest from 10 to 8 or 7 per cent. as a means of averting wide-spread ruin. It is alleged that the borrowers cannot pay the high rate, and that the lenders should accept a lower rate, even on outstanding mortgages, to avert worse consequences. Unfortunately for the Western people, any such proposition is prejudiced by their assaults upon the public credit in relation to the silver law, and by the dishonest motives avowed during the agitation in support of that measure. Had the West acted differently—had it evinced a decent regard for the public faith and the stipulated rights of Eastern creditors generally—its people would have been able to obtain money on mortgage on better terms. Of course, this opinion presupposes more trustworthy machinery in connection with mortgage loans than that at present in operation. But, apart from this reservation, no one can doubt that the position of Western mortgageors would now have been more hopeful, had not distrust been engendered by the tone and objects of the movement which led to the enactment of the Silver law. Before better terms can be possible, the Western people must give some pledge of their respect for plighted faith, and of their readiness to undo some of the mischief for which the silver agitators are responsible.

NATIONAL REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The bill now pending in Congress for the national regulation of immigration should receive the early and careful consideration of that body. The subject is one of too much importance to the nation to be put off until the closing days of the session, and then left just where it was in the beginning. The increase in the national wealth due to the never-ceasing tide of immigration can hardly be overestimated. The total number of aliens added to the population of the United States has been about 10,000,000, and every year increases the aggregate by from 150,000 to 400,000. Most of these are able-bodied men and women, and a large percentage of them are skilled laborers. The mass of them are rapidly absorbed into the productive classes of the country. The remarkable development of the agricultural resources of the North-west and the West is chiefly due to immigration, while the industrial forces of the East are yearly strengthened by the arrival of skillful workmen from foreign shores. It has been estimated that the average amount of money which each alien brings with him to this country is $80, and that the average capital value of each male, which has been put as high as $1,500, is not less than $800. Multiply these figures by the number of those who have arrived and are yearly landing, and the result, representing the ever-increasing addition to the national wealth, becomes immense. Hence it is not surprising that every State encourages immigrants to settle within its borders and that many have made earnest efforts to secure such additions to their population.

But the great advantages of immigration can be secured to the country and its evils avoided only by a careful and systematic regulation of the matter. If the 300,000 aliens yearly arriving were left on landing to shift for themselves, without friendly advice, assistance, or protection, and to become the easy victims of want, imposition, and fraud, the tide of immigration would speedily be reduced to its minimum. Moreover, experience has shown that, without the proper checks interposed on this side of the Atlantic, emigration may be made the convenient means of shifting the burden of immense numbers of convicts, paupers, lunatics, and other dependents from European Governments to this country. For thirty years the United States has been protected from this evil and the advantages of immigration have been secured to the nation by the Emigration Commission of the State of New-York, whose port has been the great gateway through which three-fourths of the immigrants have entered the country. Here an organized system, for the protection of aliens on the one hand and of the Government on the other, has been in force with the best results. To provide funds for this purpose, the owners or consignees of emigrant vessels have been required by a law of the State to give a penal bond in the sum of $300, for each alien, to indemnify the State against any charge on account of the person named in the bond during five years after landing. Instead of giving the bond, however, the parties interested in the vessel have had the option of paying for each alien passenger carried a named sum which has varied at different times from $2 50 to $1 50. The payment of this tax has been considered a much lighter burden than giving bonds, and it is the mode which has been generally practiced to meet the requirements of the law. It has been paid to the Commissioners of Emigration and used to defray the expenses of the commission. As the ship companies have included this amount in the passenger rates, the tax has fallen on the immigrants themselves, who have thus been made to support the system which is primarily for their own benefit.

But the law from which the country at large has profited for thirty years has been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States on the ground of State interference with foreign commerce. Hence vessels no longer pay the tax or give the bonds on which the continuance of the work done by the New-York commission depended, and the vital interests of immigration must be left without any organized system unless national legislation is provided. Of course, similar statutes of other States fall with that of New-York, and, as it is now settled that no State has the power to pass a satisfactory law on this subject, there can be no efficient regulation of immigration until the want is met by Congress. There will be no systematic protection at any place of landing for desirable immigrants, and every port will be thrown open to the tide of foreign dependents, which is sure to set in unless checked. Moreover, as most of the able-bodied and industrious aliens seek inland homes, while the vicious and the helpless remain near the port of arrival, it is obvious that the interior States will reap most of the advantages of immigration and those on the sea-board will be left to bear the burdens. Even when dependents have found their way to distant States, they have often been returned to become a public charge in the State of arrival. Hitherto the commutation money has given New-York the means of assuming this charge, but now this source of income has failed.

The bill before Congress is intended to give needed legislation in place of that swept away by the decision of the Supreme Court declaring the State laws unconstitutional. Its main object is to put immigration under the control of the general Government, where it properly belongs. It looks to the systematic care and protection of aliens on their arrival in this country, and provides a check on the influx of foreign criminals, paupers, and other dependents. In short, it is designed to make a national law which shall serve the same general purposes which have heretofore been reached by State legislation. It contains no provision for levying a tax on ship-owners or on immigrants, but Congress is asked to appropriate annually a sufficient sum for the discharge of all liabilities that may be incurred by the United States under the act. The bill contemplates an organized system, under State supervision, for the reception of immigrants in the port of arrival. Hence, if it shall become a law, there is nothing to prevent the continuance of the work in this State with the same methods and the same machinery which thirty years of experience have brought into their present state of efficiency. Whatever objections may be raised to the particular provisions of the present bill—and they should be carefully considered—there is no doubt that the general purposes which it has in view are of the highest importance to the country. Experience has demonstrated the necessity of such a law, and Congress alone has the power to make it. If this duty shall be soon done and well done, immigration may be better regulated than ever before. There will be one system for all ports and all vessels, and whatever burdens may be imposed by the arrival of dependent aliens can be put where they properly belong.

THE EARTH'S WABBLE.

The attention of Congressman GLOVER, of Missouri, is respectfully directed toward a surreptitious attempt to secure a doubtful appropriation from the United States Treasury. Mr. GLOVER has not long to stay in Congress. Events over which he had no control will prevent him from going back to the House. Between now and March 4, 1879, he must endeavor to defeat the conspiracy designed to compel the United States Government to pay for discovering the bulge and wabble of the earth. Scientific men, it is alleged, have reasons to suspect that the earth has a bulge on its equatorial belt, and that it necessarily wabbles on its axis. The non-scientific reader remembers that, when he went to school, the figure of the earth was described as "an oblate spheroid." And when he was asked to describe this figure, he promptly replied, "an orange flattened at the poles." This happy simile, first invented in Peter Parley's Geography, has sufficed for generations of schoolboys and men therefrom developed. But one of those geniuses who are forever destroying the myths of our guileless childhood has discovered that the earth bulges out at a point which may be described as half-way between the stem and the blossom-scar of the orange. It is as if the earth had a swelled ague-cheek somewhere on the equator. If one takes a thick knitting-needle and runs it through an orange, the axis of the earth is thus represented. The revolution of the orange on the knitting-needle is the counter-part of the diurnal revolution of the earth. If, now, the revolving orange is fatter on one side than on any other, it may be said to have a bulge on that disk. Its revolutions will be irregular, for when the bulge is gravitating toward a point below the plane of its ecliptic, the motion of the orange will be accelerated, and when the bulge ascends to a point above that plane, the irregularity will be yet more perceptible. This, in the language of the worldly, is called wabbling.

In other words, the earth's equator is not a circle. If our solid globe could be cut in two parts at the equator, the halves would not present a perfect circle, but a swelling would appear somewhere on its circumference. This swelling, or bulge, would give to the earth a geometrical figure, which is known to scientific men as an ellipsoid. Not to put too fine a point on it, it would be an ellipsoid of three axes. We respectfully submit that an ellipsoid of three axes is a much more disrespectful figure to apply to the planet upon which we live than "oblate spheroid" could possibly be. We have been acquainted with the oblate spheroid from infancy. We have become, as it were, hardened to it, and, like original sin in the human family, we have come to regard it a necessary evil of which we are rather proud than otherwise. It is like a mortgage on a house—lawful if not ornamental. But when we are asked to swallow an ellipsoid, and especially an ellipsoid with three or more axes, human forbearance is pushed to extremities, and we demand an investigation. This, it will be perceived, is Mr. GLOVER'S opportunity.

The American Academy of Sciences has reason to suspect that the globe has a bulge on the equator. The Academy knows that if the bulge exists, the earth wabbles on its axis. Whether the bulge was predicated of the wabbling, or the wabbling of the bulge, we are not yet informed. We are inclined to believe that the Academy, having observed the wabbling, or "perturbations of the earth's motions," evolved the bulge from its inner consciousness. Any man who has dined late and has had a great deal of burgundy to carry home must have noticed these perturbations or wabblings. It will be a relief to many of our intelligent readers to know that this heretofore inexplicable phenomenon is due to the fact that the plane of the earth's equator is an ellipsoid of three axes, instead of a perfect circle, as we were taught in our misguided youth.

It will be seen that the discovery of the exact location of this supposititious bulge on the equatorial belt is a matter which might engage the attention of the curious. Is this abnormal swelling of the earth's surface within the limits of our beloved country? Was the distinguished Senator from Maine, (who was not born in Maine,) who is sometimes described as "bumptious," a native of this bump, so to speak? Or is the bulge situated in California—a country which confessedly has the finest climate and the most wonderful resources of any land beneath this or any other sky? Have the mountains of Equatorial Africa humped themselves, as it were, in such a fashion as to form the ellipsoid of three axes, which it is now suspected defines the limits of the plane of the equator? Or, have the waters of the sea been gathered in a heap somewhere between the Galapagos Islands and New-Guinea? These are questions which suggest grave possibilities, and which should be answered. Then, again, it is necessary to the welfare of the human race that we should know why the earth wabbles. That it does wabble, all scientific observers admit; merely convivial observers being left out of the calculation. If, then, it wabbles, how much does it wabble, and how often? Are the velocity, extent, and mean motion of the wabble to be accurately determined upon the differentiation of the bulge? And, lastly, does the wabble, or, what is the same thing, the bulge, account for the extreme coldness of our Winters and the excessive heat of our Summers? Or, finally, do either of these irregularities of surface and motion affect American politics to any appreciable extent?

The Congress of the United States, as we learn from the Washington correspondence of the Cincinnati Gazette, is to be asked to appropriate a large sum of money to prosecute a geodesic survey of the earth's surface. This survey, it is expected, will discover the bulge, if there be a bulge, and ascertain the extent of the wabble, if there be a wabble, and thus forever satisfy the curiosity of mankind. The expedition is to be purely scientific and no reporters will be permitted to accompany it. The survey will occupy twenty-five or thirty years, and the infant children of those who read THE TIMES to-day will, unless Congressman GLOVER objects, eventually learn whether the earth is a perfect oblate spheroid, or merely an ellipsoid of three axes.

The numbering of private residences in this City is, for the most part, as ill done in respect to designation as in any city we can recall. They are numbered generally on the street doors in small metallic figures, which may be determined without much trouble by daylight, but which can not be seen after dark save by close inspection. In all modern houses, the outer doors of the vestibule, on which the figures are placed, stand open until the houses are closed for the night; so that the number can not be detected by day without examination, and in the evening are not only invisible, but cannot be discovered except by the assistance of a ladder and lantern, with which most persons neglect to provide themselves in making calls, either for business or pleasure. Numbers are not infrequently put over the street or other door; but they are usually too small and indistinct to meet the purpose for which they are intended. The only proper place for numbers on dwellings is on the transom over the outer or inner door—only old houses have transoms over outer doors—where, in dark or in gilt figures they can be descried from the street after nightfall. Persons who make visits after dark—and evening is ordinarily the time for visiting—are always complaining, and very justly, of the inconvenience to which they are subjected by trying to find the number they want. It looks very queer to see men, particularly New Year's evening, crawling up flights of steps in pursuit of numbers, stealing down again and up another flight, scanning the region of the entrance and vestibule as if bent on plucking out the mystery of the interior from external symbols, or of divining domestic secrets by brown-stone physiognomy. It is not pleasant for a man, merely aiming at the quiet performance of social obligations, to feel that he might be mistaken for a burglar, and that, if properly equipped for ascertaining numbers, he would need to be provided with so much of a burglar's tools as are comprised in a rope-ladder and dark lantern. Many residences here have numbers on the transoms of inner doors; but these are few compared with the whole. It is very easy to substitute those for the metallic numbers and the painted numbers on outer doors; and persons who regard the convenience and respect the temper of their acquaintances—and not to do so is the reverse of polite—should make the much-desired change at once.

English marine underwriters think that they have reason to find fault at the frequency with which vessels that put into foreign ports in distress are condemned as unseaworthy. While direct charges of fraud are not made, the unmistakable inference to be drawn from the statements of these insurers is, that this result, so fortunate to the shipowner in the present depressed condition of maritime affairs, is repeated too often to be legitimately accounted for. It is claimed that there are certain ports in the southern part of this country, in Cuba, and in South America, which, as far as underwriters are concerned, might have placarded at their harbor entrances the Dantean motto, "All hope abandon, ye who enter here," for the vessel once forced by stress of weather to seek shelter there rarely sails out again. It is probably known to most of our readers that when a vessel puts into a port of refuge after meeting with some serious mishap, it is considered the duty of her Captain to summon a board of survey composed of experts, usually in a foreign port selected by the Consul of the country under whose flag the vessel sails. These make a careful examination of the hull, masts, and rigging, and either suggest what repairs are needed to put them in a serviceable condition, or, if the damage has been excessive, they condemn the vessel as unseaworthy, and she is forthwith sold to be broken up, and her cargo is forwarded to its destination by some other ship. In this latter event the insurance companies that have agreed to protect the owners of the vessel are called upon to pay a total loss for the salvage, obtained by the sale of the hull and old materials, ordinarily does not amount to enough to be taken into consideration. When maritime business is in a flourishing condition, the Captain of a ship thinks that its owners' interests can be best served by doing all in his power to prevent a condemnation, and either underestimates his losses or presents his case in such a light that the experts are influenced in their judgment. But at present, when profitable charters are not to be had, the money for which a vessel is insured is usually of far more service to the owners than the vessel itself, and this consideration must have weight in shaping the conduct of even the most honest commander. As a rule, it may be said that it is for the interest of the surveyors to condemn the vessel, for in this case in a small port she is apt to be sold to some of their friends. The underwriters, while they profited by the former condition of affairs, find their present burdens exceedingly onerous, and it is said an attempt may be made to revise the system, placing upon it more restraints than now exist.

Young ladies in Boston are, of course, nothing if not intellectual, and the latest demonstration of this is the device of a maiden of that city who is still in her "teens." Her plan, which is already thoroughly under way, was to form a female society of companions of about her own age, and with this backing she has induced Mr. RALPH WALDO EMERSON, Mr. ALCOTT, and other distinguished sages of Concord and Cambridge to agree to enlighten the association by familiar discourses on religion, science, and philosophy. Mr. EMERSON is down for four engagements, and others, of perhaps lesser note, for a smaller number. It is understood that the subject to be taken up at each meeting is to be at the discretion of the teacher for the time being. He is to talk upon it and then throw the field open to general discussion, or, if he prefers it, he may adopt the Socratic method of imparting knowledge by asking rather than answering questions; the young ladies, in either case, holding themselves bound to further his purpose to the best of their ability. The benefit to be derived by the several participants in these mental encounters is a problem which we do not care to grapple with in the absence of more detailed information; but if the young women of Boston of 20 years of age or thereabouts, to be found in a mixed gathering, are not wholly different from their sisters in other American cities, it would be interesting to know what Mr. EMERSON'S opinion was, at the end of his fourth philosophic dialogue, of their collective intelligence.

Some of the friends of the late BAYARD TAYLOR think of getting up memoirs of the dead author with a view both to doing full justice to his memory and to benefiting his widow and daughter, who are, it is feared, left in rather straitened circumstances. Nearly all of them—and they were many—have had long and very interesting private letters from him, while at home and abroad, on literature, art, society, national traits, and prominent men and women. These are said to be much superior to any of his published correspondence, because they have a greater freedom, freshness, and fervor. He had been in the habit of corresponding for years with the most noted litterateurs in Great Britain, France, Italy, and Germany, and had in his collection any number of delightful letters from such men as TENNYSON, BROWNING, LEWES, SWINBURNE, CHARLES READE, WILKIE COLLINS, DICKENS, RENAN, TAINE, CHERBULIEZ, HUGO, ACKERMANN, SPIELHAGEN, HAECKLANDER, HUMBOLDT, MANZONI, TURGENIEFF and many others. These are on a great variety of topics, and would be an invaluable addition to the proposed memoirs, which, with innumerable particulars of TAYLOR'S strictly private life, ought certainly to make a very interesting work. BAYARD TAYLOR'S intimates say that he showed with and to them a degree of geniality and winningness, and a certain charm of disposition and manner not to be found in any of his books.

Literary composition, in trunk composition of any kind, very frequently exercises a most depressing influence on the mind of the writer, independent of any effect it may have on the reader. Writing is, as everybody knows, unnatural, purely artificial; and it is not strange, therefore, that it should, in many cases, produce melancholy even by anticipation. A few days since, a girl of 12 or 13, attending school in a town of Northern Illinois, became so distressed because she had to write a composition that she attempted to drown herself in a cistern, and nearly succeeded. A medical student of Baltimore, having a thesis to prepare not long since, grew so morbid that he swallowed an ounce of laudanum, declaring he would rather die than do the hateful work. A book-binder of Rouen, who was sent to the Paris Exposition, his expenses having been paid out of a lottery fund, found on his return home that he was expected to draw up a report of what he had seen. This rendered him wretched, and though his friends tried to comfort him, and offered to do the writing for him, the thing so weighed upon his mind that he waxed gloomy and morose, disappeared from his home, and his body was soon discovered in the Seine. Authors are often discontented, irritable, sullen, saturnine when engaged in composition, and many of them have doubtless come to grief in consequence of their calling. The mere process of composition brings the nerves to the surface, unduly excites the sensibilities, and, habitually followed, has a tendency to cause morbidity and certain mental disorder. To be perfectly healthy in body and mind, a man should turn his thoughts outward, be much out of doors, and feed on the sunshine.

Socialism, which has assumed such formidable proportions in Germany, virtually began with LASALLE hardly 10 years ago, and was more a dream of philosophers, a theory of thinkers, until after the Franco-German war. The trades-unions and labor associations in industrial centres had gone no further than combination for strikes and mutual aid in time of distress until the end of that struggle, when the character of the movement underwent total change, becoming at once practical and revolutionary. The German Socialists now number 500,000, one-twenty-fifth of all the grown Germans, 60,000 of them living in Berlin alone. Forty-one newspapers devoted to their principles are published in the Empire, and taken probably by 300,000 persons. Of the Socialists in that country, 95 per cent. are working men, the remainder being students and Professors, rather speculative than otherwise. Although they all believe themselves oppressed, and all seek for remedy and redress, a great many are earnestly opposed to transgression of law or any violent measures. The more moderate aim to procure radical change in the laws by legitimate methods of agitation and legislation; but the extremists have recently been dominant. The late action of BISMARCK and the German authorities, though designed to be repressive, if not destructive, has helped, and will continue to help, the cause by strengthening it in force and numbers, and enlisting the sympathy of thousands of people who, while they may be averse to Socialism, are still more averse to oppression and despotism of any and every kind.

GENERAL NOTES.

Jefferson Davis is the last survivor of Franklin Pierce's Cabinet. The good die young.

The Alabama Democratic State Committee is to hold a meeting in Montgomery on the 22d inst.

A man in Vincennes, Ind., who pleaded guilty on Friday to the charge of shooting another with intent to kill, was fined $1 and costs.

President Bartlett is sending a circular to the Alumni of Dartmouth College appealing for funds without restrictions to better its financial condition.

A cooking range exploded in a St. Louis kitchen on Friday and fatally injured a servant. The same day a range exploded in a Baltimore dwelling. In both cases the pipes had frozen up.

A Philadelphia paper asserts that the Deputy Sheriff who was anxious to regain possession of Miss Fanny Louise Buckingham's "fiery, untamed steed" employed in his search a hack drawn by the identical beast.

A lady died in Adams, Jefferson County, one night last week, and the Watertown Dispatch says that the storm was so severe at the time that the only way the information of her death could be given the neighbors was by blowing a horn, and it was with the utmost difficulty that any neighbor was able to get to the house.

Henrietta Bergh, the mother of a young girl found hanging to a beam in a shed at Fribourg, Switzerland, has confessed that she strangled her with a shoe-string and then hung her up, in the hope that it would be supposed that she had committed suicide. Her sole motive, she says, was to get rid of the expense of supporting the girl. She was an illegitimate child and the woman was about to marry.

The Cincinnati Enquirer of Sunday says: "We are informed that the Edison Electric Light Company of New-York City recently made a proposition to the Cincinnati Gas-light and Coke Company, offering to sell them the exclusive use of the 'light' for Hamilton County or $40,000. Gen. Hickenlooper, President of the Gas Company, promptly refused the offer. He has more faith in coal than in electricity."

The Trenton (N. J.) Gazette of Monday has this pleasant remark: "One of the coziest rooms in the State-house is that occupied by Gov. McClellan as a private office. The beautiful red Wilton on the floor and the cheery anthracite fire in the grate make it comfortable at 55° when the other rooms are chilly at 70°. This may seem paradoxical, but the Governor understands the effect of warm tints on the imagination, and the sense of pleasure."

In commenting upon the Hill and Colquitt wrangling in Georgia, the Columbus Enquirer-Sun of Saturday says: "There need be no fear of a division of the Democratic Party until after the next Presidential election is passed. Georgia will vote for any Democrat for that position, and give him an overwhelming majority, only excepting Tilden. Any one but him. He cannot carry the delegation of a single Southern State. After that election there may be a division. Many leading men think the State would be better governed with two such organizations as existed before the war between the States. After 1880 we can afford such; until then Democracy will be a unit.

THE SUGAR MEN'S QUARREL

A LIVELY ROW AT A TARIFF MEETING

A LARGE FORCE OF POLICE CALLED OUT—A MOB FROM WILLIAMSBURG DRIVEN FROM THE DOORS—ACCUSATIONS OF ADULTERATION AND SWINDLING FREELY BANDIED—THE LIE DIRECT GIVEN—A SCENE OF CONTINUOUS DISORDER.

The mass-meeting called for last evening in Chickering Hall to "provide for such a revision of the tariff as will insure an honest collection of the duties on sugars and to protest against adulterations in refined sugars and syrups," and supposed to be gotten up by the citizens of New-York generally uncounected with the sugar business, was really a scheme of one faction of the sugar men—those who are in favor of a uniform rate of duty and are opposed to the polariscope as a test. Owing to the vast pecuniary interests involved, the fight between the two factions is an exceedingly bitter one, and money is being poured out like water by each to defeat the other. The opposing faction laid their plans to capture the meeting, and, learning of this, the others applied yesterday to the authorities for an extra force of Police, alleging that they anticipated trouble. Accordingly, when those intending to take part arrived in front of the hall last evening they were confronted by a strong detachment of blue-coats under command of Capt. Williams in person, who closely scrutinized every person who applied for admittance. Shortly before 8 o'clock a large body of rough-looking men marched up to the doors, and attempted to go up stairs. Capt. Williams stopped them, and asked them what they wanted. The Captain says that they acknowledged that they came from Williamsburg, and had been ordered to attend the meeting with a view to its capture by their employer, Mr. Havemeyer. He ordered them to leave, saying that if they attempted to pass up they would run the risk of getting their skulls cracked. As they showed reluctance to obey, he commanded his officers to drive them away, and they were quickly run across the street, where they hung about until the arrival of Mr. Havemeyer, who told them to go home.

When the proceedings began the lower part of the hall was well filled with a highly respectable appearing assemblage, many of whom were ladies, but it subsequently turned out that, despite the vigilance of the Police, enough of the opposing faction had managed to obtain admittance to constitute at least half of the assemblage. Among the audience were Special Treasury Agents Alexander, Chamberlain, and Adams, who have had charge of the investigation of the alleged sugar frauds. On the platform were Hon. Cyrus W. Field, Peter Cooper, President Wood, of the Board of Education; Eugene Kelly, the banker; Algernon S. Sullivan, Alderman Bennett, Dr. Isaac Lewis Peet, LL. D.; José de Navarro, Ellwood E. Thorne, and many other gentlemen of distinction. Mr. Cooper called the meeting to order, and nominated Mr. Field as Chairman. Mr. Field introduced Mr. Sullivan, who analyzed at length the defects of the tariff as it stands at present. He said that it not only leaves the way open to fraud, but actually furnishes a strong inducement to cheat the revenue, and cited in proof that such frauds are perpetrated the alleged fact that, while the majority of raw sugars normally grade above No. 10 Dutch standard, 92 per cent. of those on which duties are paid are graded away below that. In this way the Government is cheated out of one-third of the revenue it should receive, amounting to about $30,000,000 per year. His remedy was a tariff with two grades only—raw and refined. In the course of his remarks he alluded in the most complimentary terms to Hon. David A. Wells, who has recently written a pamphlet on the sugar question; said, in fact, that Mr. Wells was a Gamaliel, at whose feet he [the speaker] sat.

Mr. Sullivan was listened to attentively throughout, but immediately afterward, when a long list of Vice-Presidents and Secretaries had been read, an ex-newspaper reporter named James D. Trenor, who occupied a seat on the platform, arose and demanded to know whether the gentlemen mentioned had authorized the use of their names. Mr. Field paid no attention to him, but put the names to a vote, and introduced Mr. Lawson N. Fuller. Mr. Fuller pitched into the opposite faction without gloves. He charged that frauds of the most glaring character were being daily perpetrated, and that the inspectors had been discharged from the Custom-house and persecuted for bringing these facts to the attention of the authorities. As a Republican, he charged that for 10 years the Custom-house had been rotten from centre to circumference. He criticised the testimony given by his opponents before the Wood Committee, and pronounced it untrue. He denounced the polariscope as an instrument of fraud, and characterized Hon. David A. Wells as a Rip Van Winkle who was in the market to the highest bidder. Here Mr. Sullivan held up his hands deprecatingly. Then, turning his attention to the subject of adulterations, Mr. Fuller plumply accused the Havemeyers of filling their sugars with tin, muriatic acid, arsenic, and other deleterious substances.

Up to this point the audience had contented themselves with alternately cheering and hissing him. Here Mr. Trenor arose and interrupted him, and there was considerable confusion. Hon. Dwight Townsend, who was in the body of the hall, arose to a point of order, but Mr. Fuller quieted him by saying that he was able to take care of Mr. Trenor—that if necessary he would throw him off the platform.

Mr. Trenor—"I'll give you the opportunity in a minute. [Applause and hisses.]

Mr. Fuller went on with his denunciations. Such men as R. & L. Stuart, Booth & Edgar, and others like them had been driven out of the business, while another house had, on the proceeds of fraud and adulteration, built up eight new refineries. Of the 42 sugar-houses in existence on the Atlantic coast in 1875 but 21 remain, the others having been the victims of an unscrupulous sugar ring. Threats had been made to break his [the speaker's] head, but he was not afraid. It would be no more possible for Cuba to compete with the United States in refining sugar than it would for the angels in hell to raise ice in heaven. Frauds would be proved amounting to between $6,000,000 and $8,000,000 per year. The man who adulterated food given to helpless babies should be sent to State Prison.

After much more of the same sort the anti-uniform tariff men again interrupted. Mr. Fuller said that he would be glad to discuss the question with them, and asked them to name a time and place.

Twenty voices—Here and now. [Applause and hisses.]

Mr. Fuller—I would prefer to give you time to get ready.

A hundred persons arose from all over the hall and shouted that they were ready. Mr. Henry O. Havemeyer was one. Hon. David A. Wells was another. Mr. Wells followed up his assertion by defiantly marching to the platform and taking Mr. Fuller's vacant seat beside Hon. Cyrus W. Field. Mr. Fuller expressed his readiness to remain all night and have it out. When the confusion had partially subsided, Mr. Donner, of De Castro & Donner, stepped to the side of the auditorium, and, raising his hat toward Mr. Fuller, shouted: "I declare here and now that your insinuations against the Havemeyers are based on lies." [Cheers and hisses and renewed confusion, during which Mr. Fuller retired.]

Another man, who called himself Prof. Fuller, here took possession of the platform and made a violent speech on the anti-uniform duty side of the question. He concluded by drawing from his pocket a long series of resolutions denunciatory of the objects those who called the meeting had in view, but before they could be seconded or put, Mr. Lawson N. Fuller was at his side speaking again. There were shouts of "Sit down," "shut up," "order," and mingled cheers and hisses, and a wrestle took place between the two Fullers for the possession of the floor. Mr. Lawson N. Fuller finally carried his point, and proceeded to read liberally from pamphlets and testimony, interlarding the quotations with remarks and explanations, all bitterly denunciatory of the opposing faction. He renewed with vigor his charges of fraud and adulteration. He also accused his opponents of swindling the Government by exporting refined molasses and New-Orleans sugar and getting a drawback on it. At this Mr. Havemeyer arose and said, angrily, "We do not export that." Mr. Fuller retorted promptly, "You export glucose, though." Throughout the interruptions and disorder were continuous cheers and hisses, and such remarks as "Sit down," "I rise to a point of order," "Let him go on," "Your's giving us too much literature," "That's not true," were heard on every side. Mr. Field begged the audience not to disgrace themselves, saying that he was willing to remain all night if necessary to give all sides a fair hearing. Once Mr. Trenor, when the Chairman refused to entertain his point of order, turned upon him and attempted to argue the matter. Mr. Field moved toward him with both hands extended, and succeeded in quieting him.

At length Mr. Fuller fairly gave out. The Secretary then stepped forward and read letters and telegrams of regret at their inability to be present from President Hayes, Secretaries McCrary and Thompson, Postmaster-General Key, Judge Noah Davis, John B. Hawley, of the Treasury Department, George B. Palmer, and Dr. Wilford Parker. Judge Davis expressed his sympathy with the objects expressed in the call for the meeting, and Dr. Parker said "the adulteration of an article of food is a robbery of the public by a slow and murderous process, and the culprits should have meted out to them adequate punishment." They were all roundly applauded by the uniform tariff men.

Mr. Field then introduced Hon. David A. Wells, who was received with cheers. He began by saying that he had not intended to speak, but his feelings had been stirred up by what had been said. He then gave a lot of statistics to show that the enormous value of the sugar trade justified, and asked that the men engaged in it should not be condemned unheard. He had examined the question closely during four months, and his opinion was that no more unfounded assertion could be made than that any considerable quantity of refined sugars had been adulterated. In 1877 Prof. Chandler wrote an article on sugar for an encyclopædia, in which he said that he had analyzed specimens of it over and over, and he had never found any adulteration. If adulteration existed, the Board of Health could easily discover it. The sugars of the refiners were to be had in every grocery store in the land. He then argued against a uniform tariff, and concluded with another appeal to the audience not to prejudge the accused refiners. He was frequently applauded.

There were loud shouts for an adjournment, but Mr. Townsend, who had meantime made his way to the platform, asked permission to say a few words. He had formerly been a sugar refiner, and therefore felt interested. Then he broke forth thus: "I was amazed at the effrontery of this man, [pointing to Mr. Trenor,] who forced himself upon this platform without an invitation, in interrupting the proceedings of this meeting to-night. [Applause and hisses.] I am prepared to assert the right of American citizens to meet and legally discuss all questions. [Cheers and hisses.] I was amazed, I say, to see the time of this meeting taken up and the honorable presiding officer boarded by the paid emissary of the Sugar Ring. [Cheers and hisses.] I was amazed to see the former apostle of free trade come here, and with actions that would disgrace a Fourth Ward bar-room endeavor to intimidate the gentlemen forming this meeting from bringing this question before Congress. [Cheers and hisses.] He comes here to give the lie to his whole life. He says the monopoly are threatened. They are threatened by the bold determination of American citizens to put down oppression wherever they see it. [Cheers and hisses.] I undertake to deny three-fourths of his paid-for arguments. [Cheers and hisses.] I have appeared before you because I would not allow you to be blinded and prejudiced by the false pleas of this pamphlet, and of the man who wrote it. Why cannot American citizens be allowed to hold a meeting without a crowd of cutsiders coming in and taking possession of it, as has been done to-night? [Cheers and hisses.] Does any honest man object to a protest against adulteration? [Cries of "No."] Does any honest man object to a revision of the tariff? ["No, no."] Why, then, cannot a meeting presided over by Peter Cooper and Cyrus W. Field be allowed to discuss these questions without being interrupted by men who have smuggled themselves in under false pretenses? [Cheers and hisses.]

At the conclusion of Mr. Townsend's speech, Mr. Field declared the meeting adjourned. The hall was cleared without further trouble. The ladies sat through the entire proceedings without flinching. They were probably reassured by the presence of numerous policemen. The callers of the meeting had prepared a series of resolutions, but they did not deem it advisable to even read them, so that really no definite action was taken.

THE LATEST SUGAR TARIFF PROTEST.

The following was circulated down town yesterday:

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress Assembled:

It has been officially represented to your honorable bodies that a change in the tariff on sugar is necessary. The reason given is that certain sugars of a high test come in under the present law at same duty as low test sugar when the color is alike. To remove this objection the Secretary of the Treasury recommends that these high grade and low grade sugars be admitted at a one-rate duty, which would, of course, prohibit the importation of the latter and do away in the United States with the refining of the class of sugars most largely used, and divert it to Cuba, England, and elsewhere.

If the tariff is changed in the manner now proposed it will greatly if not entirely annihilate a prominent American industry, which furnishes employment to many thousands of men, but if arranged so as to bear upon all classes of sugar equitably in proportion to their value, it will enable refiners to compete upon equal terms with those of other countries.

It would be flagrantly unjust in the Government to charge on her part as much for 75 per cent. of sugar as for 94 per cent.—as would be practically the case if the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury is approved. A protest against the measure which has been submitted to your honorable bodies as inequitable in principle and unfavorable to the interests of the sugar dealer, refiner, and consumer, and more especially to the poorer classes, to whom a low-priced sugar is an absolute necessity.

THE NEW METHOD OF SELLING SUGAR.

The sugar refiners object to the proposal to sell imported sugars by actual tare and not to allow lighterage, recently printed as coming from the importers. A meeting of both interests is to be held on Saturday, at which the subject will be discussed. It is thought that a compromise will be made, and that while sales will be made by actual tare, lighterage will be allowed as heretofore.

THE ALLEGED ADULTERATION OF SUGAR.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

When the general allegation was made, some months ago, that American refined sugars were adulterated, I called on Prof. Chandler, President of the Board of Health, and urged upon him the necessity of making an examination of the refined sugars on sale in the New-York market, and of giving the result of such examination to the public. He then stated to me that refined sugars were not adulterated, and that he considered such examination useless. Notwithstanding this, I insisted that, as the public mind was easily excited, it would be proper to give present attention to the matter. Prof. Chandler's reply was that such an examination would be expensive, that the Board of Health had not funds to defray the expense, and that it was already overrun with work. I then offered to bear the expense of the examination, stipulating only that it should be thorough and complete. Upon his answer that he did not think as a public official he could accept such an offer from a private individual, and his reassurance that refined sugars were not adulterated, I allowed the matter to drop for the time being. As the assertions of the parties attacking the refiners continued to be reiterated in a still higher key, I again waited upon Prof. Chandler, and urged him to make an examination of the New-York refined sugars. I received substantially the same replies and assurances as on the previous occasions.

On Saturday, Dec. 21, a report appeared in the Tribune stating that Prof. Chandler had analyzed certain samples taken by his assistant, Prof. Ricketts, from sugars in the possession of Mr. Earle, and that in these samples had been found tin, copper, and free acid. I called upon Prof. Chandler that morning, and asked him whether the Tribune report was correct. He answered affirmatively, but on reading over the report in my presence, said "that the copper ought to have been left out." He further informed me that Mr. Earle had sent him some samples to test, and that his assistant, Prof. Ricketts, had taken samples, at Mr. Earle's request, from sugars in Mr. Earle's store; that these samples had been examined, and found to contain tin, copper, and free acid, and that one sample was so acid it set the teeth on edge. I asked to see the analysis, but this Prof. Chandler declined, on the ground that as Mr. Earle had paid for the examination, the analysis was his [Mr. Earle's] property. To this answer no objection can, I think, be made. The sugars themselves I could not see, as they were in Prof. Ricketts' laboratory, and he was absent. When I asked Prof. Chandler whether the samples of sugar furnished by Mr. Earle and taken by Prof. Ricketts from Mr. Earle's store were the only samples of refined sugar he had examined, he replied that such was the case. I again insisted that Prof. Chandler should give me a report upon the general charge of adulteration to the Chamber of Commerce, and left him with the impression that, while calling attention to certain samples tested, he would contradict the general charge of adulteration advanced by the opponents of our industry. His report was given to the public without any such qualification. Now let me ask the public, Mr. Editor, whether the general issue of the adulteration or non-adulteration of refined sugars is to be, or should be, decided solely upon samples of sugar furnished Prof. Chandler by Mr. Earle, which sugars left the refinery unadulterated, which have been in the latter's sole possession since June, and the analysis of which was made by Prof. Chandler at Mr. Earle's request to enable him to answer a suit for the recovery of their value. During the course of this suit the fact that these sugars left the refinery absolutely unadulterated will be quite sufficiently established.

Yesterday morning I again called upon Prof. Chandler, and elicited from him the same statement, that the sugars tested, on which he had based his report, were chiefly taken from Mr. Earle's stock. I will not comment upon the manifest unfairness of allowing the public to rest under the impression that such analysis is in any sense either thorough or complete. But it is precisely a thorough and complete analysis of all refined sugars that I have for months been endeavoring to secure. I have therefore addressed the following communication to the Chamber of Commerce:

[Copy.]

NEW-YORK, Jan. 5, 1879.

The President and Members of the Chamber of Commerce, New-York:

GENTLEMEN: Prof. Chandler informed me yesterday morning that the sugars tested by him, and on the analysis of which he based his report to the Chamber of Commerce, were taken chiefly from Mr. Earle's stock, and that the analysis was made at the request and expense of Mr. Earle. He gave as his reason for what I contended was a one-sided examination that the Board of Health had not funds sufficient at its disposal to make a thorough examination. As I feel the public have a right to know whether what they purchase is or is not unadulterated sugar, I herewith hand to your honorable body $500, which I would ask may be put in place at Prof. Chandler's disposal, so as to enable him to employ all the aid necessary to make a full and complete analysis of the refined sugars exposed for sale in New-York, and his report to be presented to your honorable body when completed. I have named the above sum, as Prof. Chandler assures me it is sufficient to cover the outlay. If not, I hold myself responsible for any additional expense. I need not advert to Prof. Chandler's eminent fitness for this task, both as President of the Board of Health and as one whose long connection with Messrs. Booth & Edgar as consulting chemist has given him most extensive experience in all matters relating to the analysis of sugars. Trusting your honorable body will take prompt action in this matter, I am, gentlemen, yours truly,

HENRY O. HAVEMEYER.

THE BIG SNOW BLOCKADE.

TRAINS STILL DELAYED.

THE TROUBLE AT SYRACUSE—RELATED LEGISLATORS—EFFECTS OF THE TERRIBLE COLD ALL OVER THE COUNTRY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Jan. 6.—The New-York Central Railroad between this city and Rochester was opened to-day, after the most strenuous effort, and a passenger train from Rochester arrived in this city this evening. It was sent to New-York, on the time of the first Atlantic express, which arrives in New-York at 7 A. M. Superintendent George H. Burrows, of the Western Division of the Central, left Rochester this morning at 5 o'clock with three engines and a snow-plow to clear the track to Syracuse. He was followed by the express train. Superintendent Burrows, in conversation with the TIMES correspondent this evening, stated that the storm was the severest ever known in the history of the Central Railroad. Farmers living along the line told him they had not seen so much snow in 40 years. The drifts along the road range from 15 to 30 feet in height, and some of them extend for miles. As fast as excavations were made on Friday and Saturday, they were immediately filled up by the wind, which raged a perfect hurricane. Superintendent Burrows stated that the road was now opened between Syracuse and Rochester, and trains on Tuesday would be run as near the time-table as possible between those cities. He was of the opinion that this division could be kept open, although this evening it was snowing and blowing furiously 30 miles west of Syracuse. When asked in relation to the condition of the division between Rochester and Buffalo, Mr. Burrows said that it was impossible to predict with any degree of certainty when the road would be open between those cities. He authorized the statement that no trains could possibly reach Rochester from Buffalo on Tuesday, and probably not before Wednesday night or Thursday would the resumption of traffic on that division take place. In answer to a question whether the Niagara, Erie, and other western members of Assembly could reach Albany Tuesday, Mr. Burrows replied, "No, Sir! They cannot possibly reach Albany via the Central Railroad before Thursday morning."

James Tillinghast, General Superintendent of the Central Road, is at Buffalo. He is taking general charge of the work of clearing the road between Rochester and Buffalo; but, as the storm still continues, and the hurricane still blows, he is thus far able to make only indifferent headway. The road has been utterly abandoned since Thursday last, and the snow and wind have had it all their own way. The drifts on this division are stated by Mr. Burrows to be from 15 to 30 feet high and miles in length. The Auburn Division of the Central Railroad, which runs through Auburn, Geneva, and Canandaigua, is in about the same condition. A train was brought into this city from Auburn to-day, which has been snowed under since Thursday at that point, but west of Auburn the road will have to be dug out foot by foot. Several passenger trains are stalled along this line, and are literally snowed under. The Syracuse and Oswego Road is still embargoed, and cannot begin operations for several days yet. The Syracuse and Binghamton Road was opened to-day. The Syracuse Northern Road is still blocked, and will not be opened before the last of this week.

The passenger train which has been stalled since Thursday last, 13 miles from this city, was dug out to-day and hauled into Brewerton, one mile. In the passenger coach were 25 passengers, nine of whom were ladies. They had been in the car since Thursday, and the snow had drifted over the car, making it impossible for them to get out until relief came. Provisions were obtained from a farm-house, and happily a good supply of coal kept them from freezing. Curtains were improvised, and one end of the car was used for a sleeping-room for the ladies, who bore the privation with good nature. On Sunday divine service was held. Several passengers, who had passed four days in the car reached this city this evening. They unite in the statement that they will never start out on another journey in a snow-storm. Superintendent Burrows states that fully 5,000 loaded freight cars are strung along the Central Road between this city and Buffalo. The accumulation of the mails and express matter in Buffalo is very large.

RESULTS OF THE STORM.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT NEAR BATAVIA—AN EMBANKMENT BROKEN—CHILDREN FROZEN TO DEATH.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BATAVIA, N. Y., Jan. 6.—A serious accident occurred on the New-York Central Railroad at 1:30 o'clock this afternoon, four miles east of this place. Five engines were pushing a snow-plow. The front engine was thrown from the track by the spreading of the rails. The second engine was turned across the track and badly wrecked. The engineer, Samuel Cooper, was badly hurt in the foot. The fireman, Thomas Lawless, was caught between the tender and the boiler. His leg was broken below the knee, and a surgeon had to cut the bones before he could be extricated from his position. The surgeon says he will probably die. The surgeon is awaiting a reaction, which he thinks is doubtful, with a view to amputation. Four or five other persons were injured more or less, but do not require much medical attention.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan. 6.—A report from Batavia at 11:45 to-night says Thomas Lawless, fireman, has died at that village. The remains will be taken to Buffalo on the first train.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Jan. 6.—The embankment of the repairs to the Eddyville guard-lock of the Delaware and Hudson Canal gave way Sunday night, fatally injuring the watchman, Horace Hotchkiss. He died Monday morning at 6 o'clock. Fears are entertained of an ice-gorge.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 6.—A special dispatch says two children, named Nolau, were found frozen to death in bed on Saturday, near Crawfordsville, Ind. Their father came home intoxicated the night before, and threw the covers off the bed.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Jan. 6.—No snow fell to-day. The weather is very mild. The main track on the Central Road is still closed as far as Rochester, but the efforts put forth will probably result in clearing the track by to-morrow. On the Erie Road the Rochester Division and the Dunsville branch are in order, and the remainder of the road will probably be cleared by to-night. The Lake Shore Road is again clear. The Pacific express left here to-day, and the through train from Chicago which had been detained at Dunkirk since Thursday arrived this afternoon. The Buffalo, New-York and Philadelphia road is badly blockaded in the vicinity of Aurora. A force of 350 men are engaged shoveling out the snow, and with no further storm it will probably be clear by to-morrow night. The Canada Southern is entirely free from snow, and the trains are running regularly. All obstructions on the Great Western are removed, and trains go and come regularly. With the exception of a few drifts, the Buffalo, Corry and Pittsburgh between Stratford and Goderich, Canada, that road is again clear. Large gangs of men are at work on both ends of the Buffalo and South-western Road, and it is thought the road will be again in running order by to-morrow night.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Jan. 6.—The storm spent its fury on Saturday night, and early yesterday morning the railroad officials ordered an attack upon the snow. But as the high wind had made it hard, little progress was made. Snow-plows are of little use, and the mountains of snow will have to be shoveled out. A passenger train with four engines which had been snow-bound inside the city limits, on the Rome Road, since Thursday morning, was released yesterday after 10 hours' hard work, and brought to the depot. It will probably require two or three days, with fair weather, to open communication between this city and Syracuse, and the most of the week to clear the track of the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg Road. All the public highways are blocked.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Jan. 6.—The snow blockade on the Lake Shore Railroad was raised to-day, and trains commenced running between this city and Buffalo. A through passenger train for Chicago, the first since last Thursday, left Buffalo about 1 o'clock this afternoon.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Jan. 6.—Officers of the Atlantic and Great Western and Erie Railroad Companies state that there is little detention of trains on those roads on account of snow. Passenger trains are running within an hour or two of their usual time.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 6.—The weather continues very cold. Through trains on the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad are temporarily discontinued on account of the obstruction of navigation in the Ohio River by ice.

ROME, Ga., Jan. 6.—The steamer Sidney P. Smith was prevented from making her regular trip down the Coosa River to-day, on account of heavy fleets of ice from the Etowah and Coosawatta Rivers.

MOBILE, Ala., Jan. 6.—A snow-storm commenced on Saturday morning, and lasted all day, followed by freezing weather. It cleared off on Sunday. The thermometer stood at 9° this morning, and is 16° now. It is clear and cold.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 6.—The weather is clear and cold. Last night the mercury in the thermometer went to 20°, which is the lowest temperature since 1857.

VICKSBURG, Miss., Jan. 6.—The mercury last night was down to 12°.

DEATH OF MORTON M'MICHAEL.

END OF A LONG PERIOD OF SEVERE SUFFERING—SKETCH OF AN ACTIVE PUBLIC LIFE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 6.—Hon. Morton McMichael, who had been confined to his residence for some time with inflammatory rheumatism, died this afternoon, after a long period of severe suffering. Up to within a week it was believed he would recover; but the disease took a serious turn, and Mr. McMichael has since been at the point of death.

Mr. McMichael was widely known both in this country and in Europe. He was distinctively a Philadelphian and Pennsylvanian, and exerted his great energies for the advancement of the interests of Philadelphia. He was past 71 years of age, and had lived a life of usefulness and great honor. No record, however brief, of Mr. McMichael's career, no reference to his life, has any completeness that overlooks his personality. The man himself rose above all his accomplishments and penetrated all his surroundings. His presence was genial and alluring. His forces of character, sound judgment, broad grasp of principles, accurate knowledge, large tolerance of opinion, and adherence to right, were the attributes and attainments, with a quick perception of all that was humorous, and an appreciation of all that appealed to the feelings, which commended him equally to high and low.

He was born in Burlington County, N. J., Oct. 20, 1807, and came to Philadelphia in his youth. He was educated at the University of Pennsylvania. He subsequently read law, and was admitted to the Bar. He also associated himself with the press. He was for several years Alderman of the Spring Garden District, was High Sheriff, earnestly supported consolidation, and was Mayor of the city from 1865 to 1868. He was twice a Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket. He was President of the Fairmount Park Commission. He was also a member of the Constitutional Convention. He succeeded Hon. Sidney as President of the Union League. He was editor of the North American and United States Gazette from 1847, and sole proprietor from 1851 to 1870, when he relinquished active control to his sons, retaining his interests. He was also President of the State Board of Centennial Managers at the Exposition. He made an extended tour in Europe a few years ago, and since his return has taken without participation in public affairs. Mr. McMichael has been prominent in the Republican leadership in his own State, and was one of the ablest stanch Republicans. As adviser, editor, and speaker, he labored for the success of the Republican Party up to 1873. Perhaps no man ever possessed a greater faculty of unprepared oratory, especially at the dinner-table, no matter what was the theme or the occasion. His address at the Lord Mayor's dinner in London, in 1869, is well remembered by his many friends in England. His repartees were brilliant, and as the presiding genius at a public dinner, especially in the introduction of speakers, his comments were telling. He presided at the public meetings in Philadelphia during the war.

A special meeting of the Union League has been called for to-morrow evening, to take appropriate action relative to the death of Mr. McMichael.

OTHER DEATHS.

REV. BARTHOLOMEW WEED.

Rev. Bartholomew Weed, of the Newark Annual Methodist Episcopal Conference, died Sunday at his residence, in Newark, of heart disease. He was one of the oldest clergymen of the State, and had resided in Newark for many years, and had been for 11 years the Chaplain of the Essex County Prison. Mr. Weed was born at Ridgebury, now Danbury, Conn., March 6, 1793. When only 16 years of age he was converted, and joined the Baptists. Two years later, while at Reading, Penn., he became a Methodist. At the age of 24 he became a member of the Philadelphia Annual Conference, which then included New-Jersey and some portions of Pennsylvania, including Philadelphia. When the New-Jersey Annual Conference was organized he became one of its members, and in turn joined the Newark Annual Conference when the State was divided into two Conferences. From 1817 to 1863, he was engaged in the active ministry, and was appointed to many of the most prominent churches in the three Conferences. He also served several terms as Presiding Elder. In 1864 he assumed a supernumerary relation, and was made the County Prison Chaplain in 1867. He was twice married, and leaves a wife and four children. "Father Weed," as he was generally termed, was well known, and his death has caused wide-spread sorrow among the people of New-Jersey.

REV. DR. ELIAS R. BEADLE.

Rev. Dr. Elias R. Beadle, one of the most distinguished clergymen of Pennsylvania, died at an early hour yesterday morning of heart disease, at the residence of his brother-in-law in Philadelphia. Dr. Beadle preached on Sunday in his own pulpit in the Second Presbyterian Church, and was apparently in good health and spirits. He announced during the services that the entire debt of the church, amounting to $75,000, had been provided for. He said he had long been laboring to accomplish this result and was satisfied with his work. Soon after reaching his home he was taken seriously ill, and despite the efforts of his medical attendants, he died at 1 o'clock in the morning. Dr. Beadle was 60 years of age. He leaves a wife, who is now in Europe, three sons, and two daughters. During his career as a minister he successively presided over congregations in Albion, N. Y.; New-Orleans, Rochester, Hartford, and Philadelphia, and in the last-named city he labored for 14 years. Besides his attainments as a theologian, Dr. Beadle was distinguished as a conchologist, mineralogist, and geologist.

OBITUARY NOTES.

Princess Caroline, wife of Prince Henry of Hesse, died yesterday, in the thirty-first year of her age.

Thomas Clegg, a merchant of 30 years' standing in Poughkeepsie, died yesterday, from paralysis.

THE PROCEEDS OF A BURGLARY.

A great many mysterious burglaries have been recently committed in the Seventh Ward. Capt. Ward found reason to believe that two men inhabiting the basement of No. 44 Pike-street had something to do with the robberies. He detailed officer Thompson, in citizen's dress, to keep a sharp watch on the house. Nothing came of this surveillance until last night at a late hour. Then Thompson saw a heavy-built man sneaking toward the basement with a large box on his shoulders. When the officer went up to him and stopped him, the man said he didn't know who owned the box, what was in it, or whence it came; all he knew was that he had been paid by two men to carry it to the basement. He was taken to the station-house with the box. The latter was found to contain 4,000 very fine cigars, worth $600, with the name of a well-known firm on the brand. The prisoner was identified as John Andrews, a well known to the Police, and as he could give no satisfactory account of how he came by the cigars, it was concluded that he had stolen them, and he was locked up pending an investigation.

BLOWN ASHORE BY THE GALE.

During the gale on Friday night last the schooner Albert Phares, of Norwalk, Conn., Capt. William Cook, freighted with lumber, ran ashore in Cold Spring Harbor, Long Island, where she now lies. Her Captain and crew were saved. Wreckers are now at work endeavoring to get her off, but fears are entertained that she will become a total wreck.

WITH MANY CREDITORS IN NEW-YORK.

CHICAGO, Ill., Jan. 6.—Sutler Brothers, tobacconists, in Michigan-avenue, this city, have failed, with liabilities of $185,000. They will probably not pay over 25 cents on the dollar. Their creditors are mostly in New-York. The chief cause of their failure was depreciation in Detroit real estate, of which they held a large amount. The members of the firm came here from Detroit two years ago.

CHICAGO, Jan. 6.—The failure of Wright & King, representing the Eagle Reaper Works of New-York, is announced. Their liabilities are $150,000, mostly to Eastern creditors.

CRIMINALS THREE YEARS HIDDEN.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., Jan. 6.—It has been ascertained that Oliver Perry, of this county, and John Trader, who is in the State Penitentiary for life on another charge, were the ruffians who brutally assaulted, murdered, and robbed the old lady named Eva Peters, near this city, on the night of March 15, 1875. Perry has been arrested.

A MURDERER TO BE HANGED.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 6.—In the case of William E. Merrick, convicted of the murder of his wife during last September, Judge Heller to-day overruled the motion for a new trial, and sentenced Merrick to be hanged on Wednesday, Jan. 29.

INVESTIGATING POLITICAL CONVENTIONS.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 6.—Judge Laughlin, of the Criminal Court, in his charge to the Grand Jury to-day, directed it to investigate whether or not money was used in the political conventions held there last Fall.

RECORD OF AMUSEMENTS.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

MR. STRAKOSCH'S OPERA SEASON.

The initial performance of Mr. Strakosch's season was given last evening to a full and enthusiastic house, the opera being Verdi's "Aida," with Miss Kellogg, Miss Cary, Mr. Adams, and Signor Pantaleoni in the principal rôles. The enterprise of Mr. Strakosch has seemed venturesome, after the long season of the Mapleson company, with such attractions as Mme. Gerster, Miss Hauk, Signori Campanini, Gallassi, and the rest of that exceptionally excellent troupe; but the success of last night's performance shows that the opera is an entertainment in steady demand in New-York during the season. This opera of "Aida" differs so essentially from all of Verdi's previous works, and has so much of positive merit in its composition and form, that it stands alone among the author's labors, and is a constant surprise. The melodious characteristics and unmistakable mannerisms of this composer are but seldom apparent in "Aida," which may be properly styled a grand spectacular opera; and its successful performance demands the best artists, both as actors and singers, a good orchestra and chorus, and ample stage resources. Miss Kellogg's interpretation of the principal rôle is well known. Last night she acted with spirit, and sang at times, with her accustomed skill, but as a rule she was hardly up to her high standard as a singer. In the trying and prolonged requirements of the third act, she appeared at her best, and received hearty and genuine applause at its conclusion. Miss Cary was, as usual, perfect in her part of Amneris. She occupies a place which she alone can fill on the operatic stage, and has never yet failed to secure for herself a recognized position among the foremost contraltos now before the public. She was in excellent voice last evening, and sang with the power and finish of an accomplished artist. Mr. Charles Adams, as Radames, has a difficult rôle, this character being called on to begin the opera and to sing the aria "Celeste Aida" before he has had an opportunity to use his voice sufficiently to get it in order. Mr. Adams advanced steadily, however, through the evening, and, in the latter part of the work, was effective in his part, and sang and acted with taste and discretion. Signor Pantaleoni, who has been hitherto a stranger to New-York, at once established his reputation in the part of Amonasro. He has a fine baritone voice, and is an actor of exceptional merit. Messrs. Conly and Gottschalk were entitled to their share of the general applause, and the orchestra and chorus were full and very well drilled. There was a ballet in addition to the spectacle in the second and third acts, which was creditably managed. To-night "Lucia" is to be given, with Miss Maria Litta in the rôle of the heroine.

STANDARD THEATRE.

There are strong dramatic phases in the life which is led in the backwoods—in far Western wilds and in the romantic regions of California; but these phases are few in number, and they bear to each other such a strong family resemblance, that, when effort is made to use them for theatrical purposes, they are found to lack the infinite contrasts which are essential to the drama. The few plays of this kind which have been placed upon the stage represent, perhaps, nearly all that can be done with such simple materials, and the characters which have been introduced in them are now almost as conventional as those which figure in the established melodrama. At the same time, it is not to be denied that a play dealing with the primitive customs of Western life presents a variety of picturesque effects the charm of which is indisputable. It is vain to inquire whether or not the Oakhursts and Yuba Bills of literature are real or fictitious personages; artistically, their actual existence is a matter of no consequence. Are the novels of Cooper less interesting because we suspect that his Indians were, in most respects, creations of his poetic fancy? In the latest of the Western plays, "M'liss"—which was produced at the Standard Theatre last evening—the same attractive qualities which were noted in "The Danites" reappear, although in different shapes; but intrinsically the two plays teach the same lesson—the heroism of untaught man and the idyllic purity of love nurtured amid the woodland solitudes. Most of our readers are probably familiar with Bret Harte's striking sketch "M'liss," the beauty and pathos of which are at once intense and brief. Indeed, the merits of the story would be lost in a long narrative—in a novel, for instance. But the playwright who has undertaken to embody the tale in a drama was evidently hampered from the beginning by the necessity under which he found himself, to elaborate a certain number of incidents and characters which were artistically all that they could be. He has managed, nevertheless, to keep in view the spirit of the original, and the most interesting points in the narrative are utilized by him to good purpose. It is scarcely his fault if they are almost submerged in a mass of interpolated "talk," and if the bright and effective scenes so happily pictured by Bret Harte are rendered tedious and prosaic by the refining process to which they have been subjected. Yet, as it stands, "M'liss" is an attractive play, and, although of but ephemeral value, well suited to please an audience. Its real merit is the character of the heroine, which, in its essential features, is faithful to the original. M'liss is a lovely being, as sweet and fascinating a creature as ever lived in the imagination of a story-teller. She is the ingénue of the "glorious climate of California," and she partakes of the originality of that far-away land. She is in no sense a theatrical personage, and, in fact, does not belong to the stage; but even before the footlights her charming personality does not vanish. Perhaps we are confounding the character and the actress who interpreted it; if such be the case, the latter should be satisfied with her success, for no praise could be truer than this. Indeed, Miss Mary Shaw is a remarkable little actress, for she identified herself in the most perfect manner with the simple-minded, gladsome, true-hearted M'liss. She was what very few persons on the stage to-day are—original. There was an irresistible charm about her which neither arose from personal beauty, of which she has little, nor from any special dramatic power. She was in a word quaint, and her quaintness was full of sympathy and tenderness. Her humor was excellent drollery, and her ingenuousness was true to nature. Once in a while she was pathetic, but the comic element predominated in her acting. The utter absence of conventionality in her simple methods was especially noteworthy. On the whole, she proved herself worthy of the task of impersonating

THE NEW CITY GOVERNMENT

A NEW POLITICAL ERA IN LOCAL AFFAIRS.

THE LAST KICK OF THE OLD COMMON COUNCIL—ORGANIZATION OF THE NEW BOARD—AN ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT MOTT—MAYOR COOPER'S MESSAGE.

What is regarded as a new political era was inaugurated in the City Hall yesterday. For years past Tammany shaped local affairs in the building as she does in the wigwam on Fourteenth-street, but the November election deprived her of her prestige and power, and she had to surrender the latter to other hands. Her corporal's guard of new Aldermen entered their committee room early in the morning, and they were soon followed by the Republican and Anti-Tammany members of the Common Council. The latter held a brief caucus in the Corporation Library for the purpose of deciding who should be appointed to fill the subordinate places in their gift and to arrange the preliminaries incidental to organizing as a Board of Aldermen for the present year. The six Republican and the seven Anti-Tammany City Fathers were present. All this time the new Tammany Aldermen—nine in number—listlessly awaited the progress of events in their chamber. They had, it appears, previously decided to take no part in the organization of the board, and to stand together as a minority, believing that they would eventually be able to induce some of the Independent Democrats to join them. The proceedings yesterday, however, indicated that there is no prospect of breaking the union between the Republican and Anti-Tammany members of the board, and that they intend to act together on measures affecting the welfare of the City, irrespective of any action that may be taken by the Tammany members of the board. It was noticeable that every new Alderman was greeted by groups of friends who had gathered in the vestibule, corridors, and offices for that purpose. At one time the City Hall was densely crowded, and the space leading to the Municipal Chambers was almost impassable. Mayor Cooper's rooms were also filled with visitors.

THE OLD BOARD OF ALDERMEN.

The charter declares that the old Board of Aldermen shall remain in office until the first Monday in January. Half an hour before noon yesterday the old members entered their chamber for the purpose of passing a few complimentary resolutions, but the business took a wider scope than they expected. After thanking President Roberts for his impartial conduct while in the chair during the past year, the Clerk read a communication from ex-Mayor Ely vetoing the resolution granting permission to R. P. Childs and others, to lay telegraph wires in the streets and avenues of this City. Mr. Ely says he has already signed one resolution granting permission to certain persons to lay wires for the same purpose, and he was unwilling to multiply such permissions to take up the public streets.

The following communication containing Mayor Cooper's first veto was then received:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, CITY HALL, NEW-YORK, Jan. 6, 1879.

To the Board of Aldermen:

I herewith return, without my approval, the resolution adopted by the Board of Aldermen Dec. 26, 1878, granting to William H. Webb, Joseph Haight, and others permission to use the streets, avenues, and public places of this City for the purpose of laying mains and pipes therein for the transmission of hot water. Its passage is in my opinion due to the common Council has not the power to grant the privilege intended to be conferred by said resolution. If it have such power, it should itself have fixed the compensation, limitations, and conditions under which the privilege should be exercised.

EDWARD COOPER, Mayor.

Alderman Sauer said the resolution was beyond the reach and jurisdiction of Mayor Cooper, and he believed that it was then a law. He moved that the matter be referred to the Corporation Counsel, and his motion was adopted, after which the old board adjourned sine die.

It was not necessary, however, to send the matter to the Corporation Counsel, for he had already given the Mayor the following opinion on the subject:

JAN. 4, 1879.

Hon. Edward Cooper, Mayor:

I have examined the question submitted to me on the 24 inst. by you, viz.: As to an ordinance or resolution passed by the Board of Aldermen Dec. 28 last. The new board coming in on Jan. 6, at 12 o'clock noon, what course of action is open for the mayor to pursue? He has he a right to hold the same under consideration?" The Mayor has 10 days in which to act upon resolutions or ordinances passed by the Board of Aldermen, and the mode of computation is to exclude the first day from the computation and include the last. In this case the 10 days expire upon Jan. 7, 1879. There is no meeting upon that day, the next meeting until the next meeting of the board to communicate his action to the board.

Non-action, either by way of veto or approval, has the effect to make effective the action of the Board of Aldermen, and this would, I think, be the effect in the case under consideration. If it should be returned within the 10 days, or before the next meeting, thereafter, signed by the Mayor, it would also go into effect. If it should be returned, however, with objections, it would be equally fatal. The new board could not pass a veto because they have not 10 days of life, and it is necessary for a veto to lie over on the table 10 days before action can be had thereon. This also places to be considered all unfinished business of the old board dies with them; an incomplete legislative act dies with the body.

Very respectfully, WILLIAM C. WHITNEY, Corporation Counsel.

THE NEW COMMON COUNCIL.

When the hour of noon arrived the members of the new Common Council filed into their chamber, every part of which was filled with an audience representing every portion of the City, and mainly composed of politicians connected with the Republican, Anti-Tammany, and Tammany organizations. Those of the old board whom the people failed to remember at the last election mingled among the unofficial throng and anxiously observed the proceedings. Alderman Morris was appointed temporary Chairman, after which the roll of members was called in the following order: Michael W. Burns, Thomas Carroll, John Cavanagh, Frederick Fink, Robert Foster, George Hall, Robert Hall, Nicholas Haughton, John G. Hyatt, John W. Jacobus, Patrick Keenan, Bernard Kenney, Terence Kiernan, John J. Morris, Jordan L. Mott, Henry C. Perley, William R. Roberts, William Sauer, Thomas Sheils, James J. Slevin, Mathew Stewart, Joseph P. Strack.

Alderman Jordan L. Mott was then elected President of the board by a vote of 12 to 6, and a committee, consisting of Messrs. Sauer, Haughton, escorted him to the chair. Mr. Mott said:

GENTLEMEN OF THE BOARD OF ALDERMEN: I return my grateful acknowledgments for the honor conferred on me by electing me your presiding officer. A position unsought for by me, but, being generously tendered by you, I willingly accept it, and I do so without embarrassment, except that which any man feels when called upon to assume a position with the duties of which he is totally unfamiliar. I am not familiar with parliamentary law, and ask your kind indulgence for a short time, that I may, with a little experience, transact the business incidental to the position which you have so promptly, and, with your kind co-operation, honorably to be able to do it. We meet under favorable circumstances, with a Mayor, Mr. Cooper, elected by a very large majority, a gentlemen of honor and ability, and one who has the interests of the people uppermost in his mind. Our duty is to support him faithfully and fearlessly in all measures tending to the public good. We are of different shades of politics, but will be guided by one principle of good and wisely economical government for the people, irrespective of party, and remember the words of one very high in authority, that "He who serves the people best, serves his party best." Much depends on us, and the people of New-York will hold each of us to a strict accountability for each of our official acts. The efforts that have been made in the past, and will be made in future, to reduce taxation and the City debt should, and I believe will, have an earnest and hearty support. The reduction of the debt to the lowest possible amount is most desirable, but let it be done with wisdom and to a substantial good, not in a way to make a good exhibit by neglecting to take proper care of the public property or by neglecting our streets, avenues, and public parks, that in the near future will require thousands to rebuild or renew, when a comparatively small amount judiciously expended will answer to preserve. I do not intend to say more in regard to what the people expect of us. That subject, is, I think, sufficiently understood by all of us; but a few words in regard to what the people owe to themselves may not be amiss. I would respectfully ask our wealthy, highly-respectable, and influential citizens to reflect on what they owe to themselves and the example they set to others. Instead of criticising almost every official act done by their representatives, would it not be better for them to take a direct interest in politics on one side or the other, and so shape political affairs that none but the best men shall be nominated for responsible positions? Attention to primary meetings and nominating conventions, matters confessedly of not importance by them, might have immense influence on local affairs. I will not speak of the different departments under the City Government, because I am not sufficiently informed of the business transacted by each, and I think that his Honor the Mayor will soon send a communication to the board that may embody his opinions on this subject.

In conclusion, let me remind you that the discussions in the press and on the platform of public issues during the last campaign have educated and informed every citizen of this the Empire City, and the result is the people, without regard to party, demand a rigid economy and retrenchment in public affairs. We have given the people promises which must be kept. Let us see to it that the issues on which we were elected shall not prove to have been the mere watchwords of a political campaign, but rather the plighted faith of good and true men given to those who have honored us by their suffrage and confidence. "The lessons of adversity have their uses." In every house the stringency of the times has compelled economy, the citizen forced to surrender every luxury and many of the comforts of his family to the stern demands of the hard times, regards with indignation and as a personal wrong any form of public wastefulness. I ask you to insist that faith be kept with the people, that they be not mocked with promises lightly to be broken. Our powers are limited, but let us insist that the present glaring contrast between extravagant salaries of city officials and wages of needy laboring man shall no longer exist. In this the people's demand. I invite with the fullest confidence in receiving it the earnest and unflinching efforts of you, the people's direct and nearest representatives. And as the door of my labors let us all indulge the hope that we may each and every one, on surrendering the trusts which have been confided to us, receive the honorable verdict of "Well done thou good and faithful servant."

The allusions to Mayor Cooper in the address elicited loud applause, and Alderman Sauer hoped that the President would not permit any demonstrations of the kind.

Alderman Strack then moved that Mr. Jacob M. Patterson, Jr., be elected Clerk of the board, and Alderman Cavanagh offered as a substitute that Mr. Martin P. Killian be selected for the office. Mr. Patterson, however, was chosen by a vote of 13 to 8.

Alderman Morris put in nomination Mr. Albert Osborn for Sergeant-at-Arms.

The nomination was opposed by Alderman Roberts, who hoped that the board would reappoint Mr. James Walsh, the father of the late William Walsh, formerly County Clerk, to the position. He claimed the place for him on account of his long services and his advanced age. Mr. Osborn, however, was elected by a vote of 13 to 8.

MAYOR COOPER'S MESSAGE.

The following message was here received from Mayor Cooper:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, Jan. 6, 1879.

To the Common Council:

It is the duty of the Mayor "to communicate to the Common Council, at least once a year, a general statement of the finances, government, and improvements of the City," and "to recommend" . . . all such measures as he shall deem expedient." This duty will be performed when I shall have been long enough in office to become familiar with the actual condition of the various departments of the City Government. In the meantime, it will not be out of place to make a few general suggestions indicating the policy which it seems to me should be pursued in the Administration. The public authorities are charged with the care of the property of the City, the protection of life and health, and the supervision of affairs which affect the well-being of the whole community. The increase of population and resources which has characterized the City during the present century should not be checked through the want of enterprise and wisdom in utilizing the natural advantages with which New-York is favored. By her commercial relations with all parts of the Union and with foreign peoples, by its manufactures, which have steadily grown to a large volume, and by its subordinate industries, our City has thriven hitherto, and must continue to thrive. To develop these sources of wealth and prosperity, to invite and accommodate the interchange of the products of all countries, and to attract additional capital, skill, and labor, it is necessary that the burdens imposed upon commerce by tolls, charges, or exactions be lightened; that the facilities of our harbor and its docks and ferries be extended and adapted to modern cheap methods of handling bulky products; that our streets be kept clean and in proper condition for the passage of persons and merchandise; that life and property be protected; that the attractions of our parks and pleasure-grounds be maintained; and that in the newer parts of the City the plans for its extension be comprehensively and intelligently adjusted to the uses for which it will be occupied. These objects, I believe, can be attained at a lower rate of taxation than is now imposed, and without any increase of debt.

The accomplishment of these ends is intrusted to various agencies deriving their powers from multifarious statutes, the tendency of which, for many years, has been to take from the Common Council jurisdiction over one subject after another, and to vest it in divers departments, boards, and officers, in whom are now found combined both legislative and administrative functions. The power of determining the amount to be raised by taxation, which, until recently, had been retained by the Legislature, is now vested in a body before unknown in our Municipal affairs—the Board of Estimate and Apportionment. This body fixes the amount of annual taxation and the appropriations to be expended by the several boards and departments among which the executive and legislative functions have been distributed. The result is a complex system, in which the limit of power is not always clearly defined and responsibility not always evident. Experience will probably suggest to us the necessity for modifications of this system, but at present we have to proceed in the discharge of our duties under the laws as we find them. The sums to which public works paid for by the City, and by assessments on property benefited, ought to be prosecuted, is a subject that will continually force itself upon our attention. It is for us to consider, in this time of financial depression and of heavy taxation, which of the improvements required in the upper part of the City have precedence in the order of public necessity. Additional facilities for crossing the Harlem River, by bridges or tunnels, should be pressed by means and to time, as required. At some points this has long been a pressing public need. The work of repairing and repaving the ways in those parts of the City where the business by which it is supported is transacted, and where people live, ought to be carried forward more rapidly, and adequate appropriations should be made for this purpose. An abundant supply of water is of vital importance. The great reservoir on the middle branch of the Croton, the construction of which has consumed nearly four years, is completed and filled. The aqueduct should be maintained in thorough repair, and timely consideration should be given to the increase in the demand for water, as the City grows, and to measures for suppressing waste. The additional high service works to be commenced forthwith will afford much needed relief to the elevated portions of the City, and should be prosecuted rapidly to completion.

There are too many City officials, and their salaries are in many instances excessive. To equalize compensations, to get rid of sinecures and unnecessary officials, is a duty devolving upon the Administration. Compensations should be adjusted to the character of the labor and responsibilities imposed. Where a discretion is vested in the local authorities, that discretion should be exercised with the economy of the public. Where salaries and offices, needless though they may be, are anchored in provisions of law, legislation alone can bring relief. Where the compensation of present incumbents is protected by the Constitution, provision should be made for reducing the emoluments of their successors. The heavy expenditures involved in the administration of justice in this City form a special item in the burden of taxation. No good citizen will desire to embarrass the courts by insufficient appropriations, but these expenses can be reduced without detriment to the public service. The question of Excise is, in all its aspects, deeply important. The laws now in force, framed for the State at large, should be so modified as to meet the requirements of a great Metropolis, and secure, by the proper regulation of the traffic upon which they operate, a greater revenue in aid of our charities and in reduction of taxation. The revenues of the City should be more efficiently collected. No lease, franchise, or privilege should be granted without adequate return to the City Treasury. No interest or individual should be permitted to evade just and legal obligations to the City. But it is our duty to go further and ascertain to what extent additional sources of income can be opened by imposing taxation upon all corporations and persons who enjoy special privileges and franchises which do not contribute in the shape of taxation an amount fairly proportioned to the profit which they derive from the public bounty. Without discussing how far it is proper to grant exemption from taxation, or to compromise it for fixed or gross payments, it is clear that public opinion will not long justify the enjoyment of valuable privileges which escape their fair share of the necessary expenses of the Government by which they are protected and their value is maintained.

To the annual budget of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, adopted Dec. 31, 1878, I have not yet been able to give such examination as would warrant a review of its various items. In my judgment, however, the action of this board in no wise relieves the heads of departments from responsibility for strict economy. They are as truly bound to effect all practicable saving of expenditures within the maximum apportionment to them as if that maximum had not been fixed. To the extent of my power I shall hold to accountability all departments and officers of the Municipal Government, requiring and expecting from all a hearty co-operation in the efficient discharge of their respective duties. I do not deem it improper to remind you that the results of the late election were brought about by a desire for dissatisfaction in the community with the management of City affairs. To the extent of the power vested in us we should remove the causes of this dissatisfaction. Where we do not possess the necessary power proper representations should be made to the Legislature in order to secure remedial measures. To the determination and the effort to secure an efficient, economical, and enlightened administration of the public business we should subordinate questions of party, partisan politics, allowing no individual or political differences to interfere with the needed work of retrenchment and progress. EDWARD COOPER, Mayor.

After the Message had been read, the board directed that 500 copies of it be printed.

A TAMMANY REVOLT.

President Mott then selected the following members as a Committee on Finance of the board: Messrs. Haughton, Morris, Robert Hall, Burns, and Roberts.

Alderman Roberts said that the Tammany members of the board were entitled to more consideration than they had received in the selection of the committee. He and his colleagues represented two-fifths of the board, but only one of them was placed on the committee. He felt that the duty he owed to his party demanded that he should not serve upon the committee, and he would therefore ask that his name be taken from the list of its members.

President Mott then appointed, in turn, every other Tammany member of the board to take the place of Mr. Roberts on the committee, but each declined to serve. The President declared that, as each of the gentlemen in the minority had declined to serve on the committee, he would appoint Alderman Bernard Kenney to fill the vacancy.

Alderman Morris here offered a resolution requesting Mayor Cooper to investigate the charges made against the Park Commissioners in connection with the work on the Riverside Drive. He read an editorial from a morning journal attacking some of the Commissioners.

The resolution was opposed by Alderman Roberts, who said the report of the engineers on the subject showed that the contractors for the work were to blame.

Alderman Sauer hoped the matter would be laid over. The resolution was laid on the table.

A resolution was then adopted requesting the Commissioners of Charities to provide coal for the out-door poor, the sum of $40,000 having been appropriated for the purpose.

Mr. Jacob A. Hazel sent in a protest against permitting Alderman George Hall (Tammany) to take a seat in the board, he [Mr. Hazel] claiming that he had received a majority of the votes of his district for the office. The matter was referred to a special committee, consisting of Messrs. Robert Hall, Stewart, and Sheils.

The board then adjourned.

THE BROOKLYN ALDERMEN.

ORGANIZATION OF THE NEW COMMON COUNCIL.

ALDERMAN RAY ELECTED PRESIDENT—MINOR APPOINTMENTS—THE MAYOR'S MESSAGE—THE PERMANENT DEBT INCREASING—PROPERTY UNABLE TO PAY TAXES—THE BRIDGE QUESTION—VARIOUS RECOMMENDATIONS.

The Brooklyn Board of Aldermen for 1879 met yesterday afternoon in the Common Council Chamber, which was crowded to excess, and organized by electing Alderman Ray, (Republican,) of the Thirteenth Ward, President. The new board consists of 16 Republicans, 1 Independent, and 8 Democrats. Mr. Ray was the caucus candidate of the Republicans. After Alderman Ray had briefly returned thanks for his election, the following minor appointments were made: Isaac Crane, Clerk of Committees, salary $1,200; W. F. Tracy, Assistant Clerk, $800; Alexander Ray, Sergeant-at-Arms, $800 Thomas H. Rogers, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms, $700; John H. Butler, Messenger, $900; Godfrey Lemcke, Keeper of Truant Home, $1,000; Mary A. Lemcke, $200; Herman T. Schloss, watchman Truant Home, $600; Benjamin Bryan, farmer Truant Home. The following Sealers of Weights and Measures were appointed: W. H. Caulfield, James Williams, B. T. Chapman, John Allen, Adolph Wilson, and F. W. Gertlenger. Patrick and Mrs. Canavan were appointed Keeper and Matron of Twelfth Ward Bath at salaries of $800 and $200 respectively; Richard McGuire, Assistant Keeper Twelth Ward Bath, $600; B. T. Chapman and wife appointed Keeper and Matron of the Eastern District Bath at salaries of $900 and $200 respectively; Louis Cook, watchman Fifth Ward Bath, $600.

Alderman Harper, of the Twenty-first Ward, offered a resolution calling for the appointment of a committee of five, with power to send for persons and papers, to investigate the management of the Department of City Works. An amendment offered by Alderman O'Reilly was accepted, including an investigation of the Third-avenue sewer job, the contract for which was awarded by a former Board of City Works. The resolution was adopted. A communication was received from Mayor Howell, recommending William C. De Witt for Corporation Counsel. Mr. De Witt's nomination was unanimously confirmed. The Mayor, contrary to custom, did not appear in the Common Council Chamber with his Message. He sent the document, of which the following is a synopsis, by his clerk. In the debt statement submitted by the Mayor, the city's share of the county debt, amounting to about $4,000,000, is not included.

THE MAYOR'S MESSAGE.

The Mayor's Message opens with a paragraph calling attention to "the public burdens which were recklessly or carelessly accepted and lightly thought of in times of inflation, and of great apparent public prosperity," which, it sets forth, are more entertaining the theory of Brooklyn to the effect that a not inconsiderable part of its bonded debt has been contracted often against the wishes of her own people in the real or assumed interest of special classes of property-owners who are now unable to meet their legal obligations, while the city, as a whole, cannot escape its liabilities. The following table, included in the Message, shows the permanent and temporary debt of the City, payable from taxation and assessments, at stated Jan. 1, 1878, and as it stood Dec. 1, of the same year:

	Jan. 1.	Dec. 1.
Permanent debt	$10,136,000	$10,136,500
Water loan	11,216,500	11,216,500
Temporary debt	10,283,000	9,756,000
Tax certificates	3,500,000	3,100,000
Total	$40,906,500	$42,257,000
Less sinking fund	4,868 747	4,781,978
Grand total	$36,239,753	$37,475,318 36,239,752
Increase within the year		$1,235,566

The amount paid by the city as its quota of subscription to the East River Bridge was $1,650,000, a sum in excess of the total amount of the increase of the indebtedness. The temporary debt has been decreased $500,000 during the year, but the tax certificates now outstanding amount to $3,100,000. Taxes remain unpaid amounting to half the total tax levy. The Mayor puts it as an absolute certainty that the existing permanent debt of the city will be swelled to over $20,000,000 by the obligations the City has already contracted, or the means for providing for building the East River Bridge, and predicts that within two years, at the furthest, provision must be made for a permanent addition to the annual interest account of over $500,000. Referring to the temporary debt occasioned by advances for the improvement of real estate, which has since deteriorated so much in value that the owners are ready to abandon the property rather than pay the assessments, the Mayor says: "Fortunate as the part of the City in enforcing tax obligations in their various forms rarely secures the owners of property against its loss or confiscation; such forbearance embarrasses and aids in bringing about and extending the very disasters against which it is designed to guard. If the City had exhausted all the remedies the law can give it for the collection of taxes, it would be inclined to advocate radical measures to meet the existing situation as it is presented in the anomaly of an almost stationary temporary debt now amounting to nearly $10,000,000. I see no way of avoiding the conclusion that the City must collect the money due it, and no legislation can fairly be complained of which tends to this end. The City cannot save the property-owner who is liable to lose his property if the City claims are enforced, but it is quite easy to extend the area of ruin by burdening the solvent property-owner in the vain effort to save property which is already lost to the citizen in nominal ownership of it."

A return to the old rate of default—12 per cent.—is advised, and the recommencement of the annual sales of property, in arrears for taxes. To avoid the enormous expense heretofore incurred in the advertisement of the property to be sold, the Mayor recommends that a special arrangement be made with the corporation newspapers, and if this cannot be done, that the property be advertised in pamphlet form and the pamphlets distributed in the newspapers. Continuing, the Mayor says the City itself has no capital with which to carry on its business. It must rely on the collection of its claims to meet its current expenditures. It pledges itself to do so. To do so. There must be a limit to the latter device, and it must be fixed by the authorities, or, in the Mayor's opinion, it will be determined by the impairment of the City's ability to meet its obligations promptly. Property the Message contains the following:

"That there is a great deal of unimproved property in Brooklyn that is not good for the liens now held by the City upon it is not open to question. That this property is now considered by its owners as virtually abandoned to the city, in many cases, is within the knowledge of its officials. I am in favor of making a composition with the owners of such property as choles of evils, but, first of all, I recommend that a vigorous attempt be made to enforce the claims of the city by adequate penalties. When all the power the law can give us is exhausted, I would recommend then the passage of an act like that enacted some years since for the City of New-York, selecting from among existing officers of the city a Board of Adjustment and Apportionment of Taxes and Assessments in Arrears. Such a board, subject to proper limitations, may effect such a compromise or adjustment of these arrearages as will settle the precise liabilities of the city respecting this 'temporary debt and taxes uncollectible by the ordinary methods,' collect what is collectible from our assessments, restore the abandoned property to use by its owners, and enable the city to fund her share of this floating and uncertain debt in long bonds at the lowest practicable rate of interest."

One of the things which demands most earnest attention, is, in the Mayor's view, the constant increase in the volume of outstanding certificates for deficiencies in the collection of taxes. These evidencies of debt now reach to the sum of $3,100,000, and if the increase, as in 1878, $600,000 a year, is not arrested, bankruptcy will eventually ensue. The wrong is the more grievous because this branch of the debt, which is created by delinquents, becomes a cloud on a lien upon the property of the prompt tax-payer. After showing that the tax levy last year was $7,434,952 29, that this year it is $6,452,765 38, showing a reduction of $982,186 91, and a reduction in the tax rate from $3 18 to $2 61, and alluding to the application of the pruning-knife necessary to bring this result about, the Mayor announces that the good work has only commenced. He says: "Brooklyn cannot afford to pay any more than the marketable value which labor commands. A still further reduction is inexorably required. We are paying $2,500 to $3,000 to Principals of our schools, whereas Professors of colleges and seminaries of learning receive in many cases only from $1,200 to $1,500. Professors of the larger institutions have sought the Principalships of our common schools because of the larger compensation, and in one instance, at least, such a transfer has actually taken place. As respect to the Police and firemen, these observations are of still more forcible application. . . . Plenty of men, every way qualified to be efficient firemen can be had for $800 a year, and equally competent man can be had as firemen for $700."

The Mayor recommends the Aldermen to take action toward a greater reduction of the salary lists.

The recommendation contained in the Mayor's last annual Message, respecting a consolidation of all the fiscal departments into the Department of Finance, is renewed, and the arguments then adduced in favor of the change as being in the interest of economy pure and simple are renewed. The Mayor also recommends, as he did in his last year's Message, the passage of a bill by the Legislature doing away with the triple-headed commissions and placing the different departments under single heads, to be appointed by each incoming Mayor and to go out of office with the Mayor appointing them. This measure, the Mayor claims, would effect a saving to the City of $100,000 per annum.

A paragraph of the Message is devoted to the indictment of Commissioners of City Works Flaherty and Bennett preferred by the Mayor on the ground that they had filled the departments under their control with obscurists just before election for the purpose of defeating a free expression at the polls of the people's will.

Touching the East River Bridge, the Mayor thinks it is quite clear that $4,000,000 will be needed to complete the work. Both cities have too much money invested in the structure to jeopardize a suggestion that the work be either abandoned or postponed. Taking the direct possible view of the situation it is conceded to be the wisest policy to go forward than to go backward, and every day's delay is a damage to the interests of the people. Still treating of the bridge question, the Message concludes as follows:

Within the past four months the Controller of the City of New-York refused to make any further advance to the Trustees of the bridge upon the ground mainly that the structure now being built will exceed in cost the $3,000,000 provided in the last act of the Legislature. It is claimed that this act by its terms rendered the right to draw the requisite funds from the two cities depend; ent upon the condition that the bridge should be completed within the sum allowed, viz.: $3,000,000, and it being conceded that the entire cost will exceed this sum to the amount of $200,000 or $300,000, the power to go on stands arrested by the limitation. The General Term of the Supreme Court in the City of New-York has held in favor of this construction of the statute, and a mandamus sued for by the Bridge Trustees against the Controller of the City of New-York to compel the payment of the contribution remaining from that City was, therefore, denied. An appeal from the order denying this mandamus has been taken by the Trustees to the General Term of the Supreme Court, and the dispute is not likely to be settled until a decision of the Court of Appeals has been reached. The decision of the Special Term of the Supreme Court, I suppose, must be taken as the true interpretation of a statute until it is reversed, and as the point held was just as applicable to the Controller of Brooklyn as to the Controller of New-York, that officer has likewise refused to make any further advances for the bridge. The work is at a stand-still. But the debt and the interest are in full flammer. I am not competent to express an opinion upon the merits of the questions of law involved in this controversy, but I am very sure that neither the ingenuity of the lawyers nor the learning of the courts will hasten the actual completion of the bridge or tend to a diminution of its final cost. From the foregoing views you will anticipate that I favor a resort to the Legislature for such an act as will terminate a fruitless litigation and enforce a speedy completion of the bridge pursuant to the understanding which has from the first accompanied its construction."

The Mayor strongly recommend a consolidation of the five county towns with the city in accordance with the provisions of a report of a commission of which the late Judge John A. Lott was a member. Property-owner in the county towns, was Chairman. The dual Government now in existence at no least a cost to the tax-payers would be abolished, and a great saving effected. The Mayor urges as one of the reasons in favor of consolidation that proper protection could be afforded to the thousands of Brooklyn citizens who visit Coney Island in the Summer. In a paragraph devoted to rapid transit the Mayor announces that he will propose any rapid transit scheme which contemplates on the part of the company the securing of a franchise without compensation to the property owner. "If," the Message continues, "rapid transit is a public necessity, those who obtain a rapid transit franchise ought to be able to fully compensate the property-owner that may be injured in his estate by it." The Mayor alludes to the many fatal accidents occasioned by the surface steam road on Atlantic-avenue, and urges that a sunken track be substituted for the surface road on that avenue. He calls attention to the fact that he has directed the City Treasurer not to honor two drafts drawn by the Board of Education, the money being taken from the appropriation of 1879 to pay expenses of 1878. The passage by the Legislature of a bill reducing the number of the corporation newspapers from four to two is recommended, and also a decrease in the annual expense of advertising in these papers, which now costs the City about $250,000 a year. The Message concludes with a brief allusion to the reports of the Board of Assessors and of the Police and Fire Departments. An increase in the number of Police and firemen must, the Mayor thinks, be put off until better times.

THE STEAM-HEATING PROJECTS.

OPINION OF THE CORPORATION COUNSEL—HE DECLARES THE RESOLUTION OF THE COMMON COUNCIL INVALID.

Corporation Counsel Whitney has sent an important opinion to Mayor Cooper in regard to the resolution of the old Board of Aldermen, giving permission to William H. Webb and others to lay pipes and mains in the streets and avenues of this City for the transmission of hot air or steam for cooking and other purposes. The Corporation Counsel holds that the resolution is invalid, and the reasons he gives for this opinion seem, also, to apply to the Spinola steam-heating project, which was recently approved by the Board of Aldermen. Mr. Whitney's points are as follows:

First—The fee of the land constituting many of the streets, avenues, and public places in this City is vested in the Corporation. The fee of other streets, avenues, and public places is still held by individuals, although the land constituting the same has been contributed for public use. Whenever the fee is, however, in the City or in individuals, all such streets, avenues, and places are public highways, and the Common Council can lawfully give permission to use the surface of them, or the land beneath the surface, in those cases only in which authority has been conferred upon the Common Council to grant permission by the charters of this City or by acts of the Legislature. Such authority has been given for many purposes, many purposes, besides those of ordinary travel, among which may be mentioned telegraph poles, awnings, water-pipes, gas-pipes, and lamps, sewers, drains, and culverts. There is, however, no provision in the charters of this City, nor in any act of the Legislature, which expressly empowers the Common Council to permit any of the streets, avenues, or public places of this City to be used for purposes mentioned in said resolution, and, in my opinion, the general authority given to pass ordinances and to regulate and control the use of the streets, avenues, and places for certain purposes does not confer upon upon the Common Council to pass this resolution.

Second—The resolution contains no limitation as to the time for which the permission is given, nor does it reserve to the City the right to revoke the right to use it. If, therefore, the Common Council could lawfully permit the public highways to be used for the purposes mentioned in the resolution, and the persons therein named should accept the privilege and exercise the powers conferred, a contract would thereby be made between the City and the grantees which could not thereafter be rescinded or impaired by the Common Council, and perhaps not even by the Legislature. In such case, no matter how injuriously the public interest might be affected by the laying and use of mains and pipes for such purposes, the resolution could not be repealed. It is no answer to the objection to say that the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund are authorized to impose conditions and limitations which will protect the City. The Commissioners might or might not impose conditions and limitations which would be effectual for this purpose. The fact that the resolution itself does not contain any limitation in regard to the duration of the grant nor any reservation of the right to annul it renders the resolution invalid. It is well settled that the Common Council cannot tie up nor authorize other officers of the City to tie up its legislative powers by making a contract of any kind.

Third—The resolution is invalid because it grants a franchise to private individuals. A franchise is a "privilege conferred by grant from the Government and vested in individuals." The resolution does not purport to grant exclusive privileges to the persons therein named; but "a monopoly is not an essential feature of a franchise."

The Corporation Counsel then proceeds to show that the grant to Mr. Webb and others, as embodied in the resolution, is a franchise, and he holds that "the power to grant franchises of this character, which was formerly a prerogative of the Crown, is now vested exclusively in the Legislature." The Legislature may grant such franchises directly or may authorize the Common Council, or other officers of municipal corporations, to grant them. Neither the old charters of this City nor any act of the Legislature grants the privileges mentioned in this resolution, nor authorizes the Common Council to grant them, and the resolution is, therefore, ultra vires and void.

Fourth—The resolution is invalid because it delegates to the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund legislative powers which, if they existed, would have to be exercised by the Common Council itself.

Mr. Whitney cites many decisions in support of his opinion. In closing, he thinks the Common Council cannot lawfully pass any resolution which will confer power and privileges attempted to be given by this resolution.

THE SUIT OF TWO CHURCHES.

The Church of the Redemption, formerly called Grace Chapel, in Fourteenth-street, brought a suit in the Supreme Court against Grace Church to recover the value of the furniture, organ, and other property which the plaintiffs had purchased and placed in the building. The plaintiffs had previously been defeated in a suit began by them against Grace Church, to establish the right of the former to the fee of the church property. The present suit was referred, and the Referee reported awarding the plaintiffs $5,247 for the furniture claimed by them. In deciding a motion to confirm that report Judge Van Brunt yesterday handed down an opinion at Special Term, in which he says he does not see any possible way in which a distinction can be made between the personality and the realty, and the Court of Appeals has already confirmed the title of Grace Church to the realty. Nevertheless, there is a clause, in the opinion of the Court of Appeals in that case, which does make a distinction, and the Judge therefore confirms the report and gives judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

THE VOLUNTEER LIFE-SAVING CORPS.

Subscriptions were opened on the Stock Exchange yesterday to found a life-saving station for "Nan the Newsboy" and his comrades. It is expected that no difficulty will be experienced in raising $250, the amount needed. Similar subscriptions will be opened to-day on the Produce, Cotton, and Maritime Exchanges. The Marine Bank has consented to take charge of the money collected. Messrs. Lane & Robinson, of South-street, yesterday presented the boys with a handsome 15-foot, life-saving boat, complete in all its fittings. They are highly delighted over it, and pronounce it "just the thing." Many promises of boats have been made to them, but this is the first that has been fulfilled. Capt. Boyton yesterday visited Mayor Cooper to ask his influence to have a small compensation paid to the boys for their services. The Mayor said that he would see what could be done, but he did not hold out much encouragement.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

During Sunday and yesterday there were reported at the Sanitary Bureau 63 cases of scarlet fever and 18 cases of diphtheria.

The Castle Garden Labor Bureau furnished employment to 5,623 males and 4,945 females last year—a total of 10,568 persons.

Dr. Albert J. Steele, aged 72, Professor of Electrical Therapeutics, fell dead at Centre and White streets yesterday morning.

Dr. E. C. Seguin will lecture upon "Diet" before the Working Men's Lyceum, at Science Hall, No. 141 Eighth-street, this evening.

One hundred and thirty-three immigrants were landed at Castle Garden since Saturday. The Labrador brought 86 and the Abyssinia 47.

The Cercle Français de l'Harmonie will celebrate the thirteenth anniversary of its organization by a banquet at the Westminster Hotel this evening.

Capt. Francis J. Twomey, who has been connected for many years with the Common Council, has been appointed Deputy Clerk for the new Board of Aldermen.

At a meeting of the committees that had charge of the recent fair in the Roman Catholic cathedral, Mr. James Lynch, the treasurer, announced that he had thus far received $171,000, and had yet to hear from several churches that had tables at the fair.

The steam-ship Fernwood, which arrived from Cardiff yesterday, was blown off the coast on Thursday last by the westerly gale, and lost all of her sails. Everything movable on deck was washed overboard by the heavy seas. The sufferings of the crew from cold were intense, and three of the sailors were badly frost-bitten.

The suit of Annie M. Holmes against Deputy Receiver of Taxes Henry Overin, to recover $220, the amount of board contracted by Mrs. Henry Overin, was discontinued yesterday, in the Third District Civil Court, before Justice Parker, by consent of both sides. It is rumored, however, that the plaintiff will recommence proceedings later in the year.

John Riley, of Fordham, and William Murray, of One Hundreth and Tenth-street and Riverside Drive, laborers, while at work in an excavation for a sewer, at One Hundred and Tenth-street and Ninth-avenue, yesterday afternoon, were severely injured on the head and face by the premature explosion of a blast. They were cared for at the Ninety-ninth-Street Hospital.

Deputy Coroner Goldschmidt made an autopsy yesterday of the body of James McArthur, who was found frozen to death in an open lot at First-avenue and Eighty-sixthth-street, on Saturday morning. Although the body had lain in the Morgue for two days, it had to be thawed out before it could be cut, and the ventricles of the brain were found to be studded with icicles.

A preliminary meeting of a number of Irishmen, most of whom hold offices under the Federal Government, took place last evening at the Astor House, when a committee was appointed to take measures for the holding of a mass-meeting at Cooper Institute during the coming week to protest against the insult offered to Gen. Grant by the Town Council of the City of Cork. Another meeting will be held on Wednesday next.

A lecture upon the experiences of the various expeditions to the Arctic regions in search of relics of Sir John Franklin and his companions will be delivered by Mr. G. Melville Brown, at Chickering Hall, Jan. 23. The proceeds will be applied to the purchase of provisions to be sent this Spring to the expedition under command of Lieut. Frederick Schwatka, United States Army, which was taken to the North last Summer by the schooner Eothen.

John C. Campbell, the former Engineer of the Croton Aqueduct Bureau, who was removed by Commissioner Allan Campbell because of the falling in of the Forty-second-street arch, applied to Judge Lawrence, in the Supreme Court, yesterday, for a writ of mandamus requiring the Commissioner of action may be reviewed by the court. The applicant says he was not, properly, in charge of the work, nor responsible for the accident. Judge Lawrence reserved his decision.

In the suit of Clinton G. Colgate against the Western Union Telegraph Company, Judge Blatchford, in the United States Circuit Court, yesterday delivered an opinion refusing to grant a preliminary injunction against the further use by the defendant of the Simpson patent gutta percha covered wires or cables, but granting an injunction against the sale by the defendant of the gutta percha wires or cables now in use, against the manufacture or use of like cables and wires.

Patrick Murray, whose accusations against Shipping Commissioner Duncan were recently printed, was examined yesterday under

THE WHITE LEAGUE'S WAYS

TERRORS OF DEMOCRATIC RULE IN LOUISIANA.

THE FIRST DAY'S TESTIMONY BEFORE THE TELLER INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE—EX-CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS DRIVEN FROM HOME OWING TO THEIR REPUBLICAN PRINCIPLES—MISERY OF THE NEGROES—INCIDENTS OF WHITE LEAGUE VIOLENCE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 7.—The Teller committee to-day examined nine witnesses—seven of them white native Southerners. The whites, excepting one—a large slaveholder, in full sympathy with the rebellion, and his son, (then a minor,)—were ex-Confederate soldiers. The witnesses showed that the Democrats, by organized military intimidation and violence, drove out every Republican leader in Natchitoches Parish before the election. It is a heavy Republican parish, but no Republican vote was cast there. The armed mobs were led by the Democratic candidate for the Legislature. Four Democratic witnesses—old citizens of the parish—showed that the regular Democrats in Tensas overawed the supporters of an independent Democratic ticket, all of whom were white, Southern, life-long Democrats, and men of property and standing. The independent Democratic votes that were cast were overwhelmed with fraudulent ballots. All the Judges of Election were regular Democrats.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMITTEE.

The Teller sub-committee met at 10 A. M., in Surveyor Wells' private office, at the Custom-house.

Senator Garland asked if there would be any special programme published, and the Chairman answered that no programme had been arranged, but that when a neighborhood was reached it would be gone through with. Senator Garland then suggested that the neighborhoods be designated, so that witnesses might be notified. The Chairman maintained that the charges of fraud in Natchitoches, Tensas, and Caddo Parishes would be the first considered.

Senator Cameron said that charges came from every part of the State, and it might be impossible to define any exact part.

Senator Bailey thought that, as near as possible, some definite plan of proceeding should be adopted, so that the charges could be met by evidence on the other side.

The Chairman declared that he would allow all necessary time for the production of such evidence, but no detailed plan would be published.

HOW A REPUBLICAN SPEAKER WAS DRIVEN FROM HOME.

J. Ernest Breda was then sworn. He is a native of Natchitoches and has always resided in the parish; served during the war in the Second Louisiana Regiment; has been a Republican since 1871; has been a stump-speaker, but did not take part in the last campaign, having been driven away from home on the 22d of September. Witness gave an account of the manner of organizing Republican ward clubs, and the formation of executive committees. He then said: One ward club was to meet on the 2d of September; on that day there was to be a Democratic convention; at our meeting there were 150 Republicans, and I addressed the assembly; after adjournment we started home, I and my brothers, on horseback. We had gone about 100 yards, when, at the corner of Cypress-street, a body of armed cavalrymen opposed our passage; pistols were drawn and strong language use; at this moment I saw some more armed men coming down a side street; my brothers and I ran down a side street, went to the woods, and, encircling the town, arrived during the night at home; there we staid until the next day; on that morning at 8 o'clock my uncle, a former Mayor of Natchitoches, rode up; he had not spoken to me since 1874 on account of my politics; he told me that my house was to be attacked, and desired me to surrender; I told him I would fight, and never surrender; my uncle said he would bring a guarantee from a body of armed men that the house and property would be respected if we would leave the place within two hours; my uncle went back and conferred with the committee of armed men; my brother left in the meanwhile, but did not go too far away to see what was going on; we remained in the woods until the 25th of October; on that day my uncle came again to the house and told my sister that we were to be hunted with bloodhounds; on the 31st of October we left for Shreveport, and have remained there until summoned before the Grand Jury.

Witness produced a copy of the Vindicator, calling it the organ of the bull-dozers, otherwise Democrats, (self-styled,) of the parish, and read certain warnings therefrom. Also a copy of a document purporting to be an agreement, by which, if the witness became a party to it, he could return home. The document was read. It is in the shape of a preamble, narrating from the bull-dozing point of view all things the said Bredas had done to excite the ire of the good citizens of Natchitoches, and ending with a promise to be signed by the Bredas, that they would hereafter behave themselves, &c. Witness stated that the formality of signing this document was respectfully declined, on the ground that the statements in the preamble were false in every particular.

To Senator Teller—There is no lawlessness among the negroes; miserable individuals, they hardly dare strike back; they are murdered there like sheep; political speeches calling upon negroes to cut loose from the Democratic party, are styled incendiary speeches, and I never made a speech that was not strictly a speech on simply political matters; negroes are ground down and cannot even sell their crops under their own names. There are 1,700 white and 4,000 colored voters in the parish, and there are more white men who vote the Republican ticket than blacks who vote the Democratic ticket. The Democratic majority in the recent election, given in the official journal, was 2,900.

To Senator Garland the witness gave details of the organization of the armed bands. The witness was formerly a Parish Judge, and held the office until the Nicholls Government came into power.

Senator Cameron—Are any prosecutions against fraudulent voters &c., being carried on in any of the State courts?

Witness—No, Sir; for, if so, the whole judiciary of the State would have to be brought to trial.

To Senator Bailey—I state this on hearsay only; I know nothing from personal observation.

To Senator Cameron—I and my brother were driven out simply because we were political leaders.

DR. BREDA CORROBORATES HIS BROTHER'S STORY.

Dr. A. P. Breda was sworn and testified: The Republican meeting on the 21st of September was held for the purpose of instructing colored people as regards the changes which had been made in the number and boundaries of the different wards of the parish, so that they might vote intelligently. Witness corroborated the testimony of the previous witness. He said that the only speech he ever made was on the day after the killing of a negro in Natchitoches, in 1876, in which speech he said that the law was still existent, and such murders were unexcusable.

To Senator Garland—I was Coroner for two terms while my brother was Parish Judge.

To Senator Teller—Nearly all the white people I knew in the parish were members of the Knights of the White Camellia organization. The name was changed afterward to the White League. The same body is now known as No. 2866. It is and always has been a political organization. I think it is because it is composed solely of Democrats, and because some of my acquaintances told me they would not join the 288 because of its political nature; besides, it is generally understood to be a political club.

SIMILAR STORIES OF INTIMIDATION.

V. A. Barron was sworn, and testified that he is a resident of Natchitoches, but is a native of Mississippi. He said: "I fought throughout the war in the Confederate Army; I was Sheriff of Natchitoches up to 1876." The witness gave an account of a meeting on the 21st of September, and testified as to the proceedings of a band of armed men who obstructed the street. The witness left town and took to the woods. "Nine days afterward I came home, and was told to leave town; Mr. Cunningham told me that the Bredas had been ordered out of town, and that the committee had ordered me to leave the place; this committee is called an Advisory Committee, and is composed of Democrats; I remained several days; having some business, I left to see my brother in the country; I was absent 10 days; when I returned Cunningham told me that as the others had been sent away I had better go also; the reason given was that they—the Democrats—wished all of the Republican leaders to get out of the way; that the ruling of matters properly belonged to the Democrats; before I left town Cunningham told me I need go only as far as my brother's, and added that I could return after the election; I went to Shreveport."

John G. Lewis, (colored,) of Natchitoches, testified that after the adjournment of the meeting on Sept. 21, his house was broken into by a body of men armed with rifles and revolvers; while the party were searching his house for him he hid in some thick weeds in the back yard; the party were much excited, and threatened to kill him if they could find him; witness managed to effect his escape from the place, and made his way to New-Orleans.

Raford Blount, (colored,) of Natchitoches, was next examined. He stated that on Sept. 21, in the afternoon, his house was surrounded by a body of armed men, numbering 250, commanded by M. J. Cunningham, at present a member of the Legislature from Natchitoches; his house was broken into, and he surrendered himself on receiving assurances that he would not be harmed; he was taken to jail, and kept there until midnight, when he was allowed to leave town, on condition that he would advise negroes to leave politics alone, and would never return to the parish; the witness said that he was a man of property in the parish, and was driven away on account of his influence with the colored race—an influence he had always exerted against the Democratic Party. The witness was Pastor of a Baptist church, and in 1876 was Senator in the Packard Legislature. The witness stated that the lawlessness in Natchitoches County was due solely to the politicians, as respectable people were not in favor of it. The witness has not been in Natchitoches since Sept. 22.

Messrs. J. D. McGill, Lucien Bland, and J. M. McGill, residents of Tensas Parish, testified that before the election there were two tickets in the field—a regular Democratic and an Independent Democratic. The negroes agreed to support the latter. The witnesses believe the negroes were intimidated to such an extent as to prevent the election of an Independent ticket. They also believe that frauds were committed by stuffing the ballot-boxes. The whole machinery of election was in the hands of the regular Democratic nominees. The witnesses were candidates on the Independent ticket.

The committee adjourned until to-morrow, when other witnesses from Tensas Parish will be examined.

BEACONSFIELD REPORTED ILL.

ENGLAND'S PREMIER SAID TO BE SUFFERING SEVERELY FROM GOUT—THE REPORT DENIED AND REITERATED.

LONDON, Jan. 7.—Lord Beaconsfield, the British Premier, is suffering from a severe attack of gout which confines him to his room at his estate, Hughenden Manor.

The Press Association denies that Lord Beaconsfield is ill.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—The Advertiser and Post contradict the report that Lord Beaconsfield is ill.

The Standard, on the authority of its local correspondent, who inquired last evening, reiterates the report, and states that the attack of gout is more serious than was at first supposed, though since it commenced on Monday the severe pain in the chest and lack of nervous energy from which Lord Beaconsfield had previously been suffering, have been somewhat relieved. He was able to get up for an hour or two last evening, but was much wearied and exhausted by the effort. The Standard's leader even discusses the contingency of Lord Beaconsfield's temporary or permanent withdrawal from public life, saying, for instance, that "there will be no lack of statesmanship, even were our most distinguished representative to retire." The Standard says the doctors feel some degree of anxiety in regard to Beaconsfield's condition.

The Times and Daily News simply reproduce the denial of Lord Beaconsfield's indisposition, which was given, professedly on authority, by the Press Association.

THE BUSINESS CRISIS IN ENGLAND.

BAD EFFECTS OF THE CORNISH BANK FAILURE—SERIOUS ASPECT OF THE LABOR TROUBLES.

LONDON, Jan. 7.—The Financier says: "The worst feature of the failure of the Cornish Bank is that the promise of the new year is falsified; the crisis is kept dragging on, and, further, it causes disagreeable rumors to be circulated regarding other provincial banks, as was the case yesterday. The Cornish Bank failure might be left to sink into its position as merely a local affair were it not for its tendency to generate fresh difficulties."

A dispatch from Barnsley to the Times says: "The strike of the miners of South Yorkshire and North Derbyshire will not be nearly so large as at first anticipated. It is expected now that not more than 6,000 operatives will go out on strike."

WARRINGTON, Lancashire, Jan. 7.—A strike has begun in the wire trade here, which may assume serious proportions throughout the country if some agreement betw en the employers and workmen is not come to. The masters contend that if a reduction of wages is not agreed to the works must be closed, as German wire can be obtained cheaper than English manufacturers can make it. The men contend that the reduction demanded is excessive.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—The ship-builders of the Tees have decided to give notice of a reduction of wages, ranging from 5 to 10 per cent. on the various classes of work. The ship-builders on the Wear will give notice to-morrow of a reduction of from 5 to 25 per cent. A strenuous resistance is expected.

The Midland Railway Company state that the guards have resumed work at Peterboro, Gloucester, Bristol, and Coalville. The company expect an early termination of the strike through lack of funds to support it, but the tone of various meetings indicates that the strikers are still very determined.

HARVARD AND OXFORD NOT TO ROW.

BOSTON, Jan. 7.—The Harvard Boat Club is in receipt of a letter from the Oxford University Club, announcing its inability to row Harvard as late as Aug. 1. As Harvard will not row before that date, there will probably be no English race this year, and therefore, probably, no race with Cornell. A meeting of the boat club is to be held next week, and the matter will then be decided. Since the receipt of Oxford's letter, several of the old Harvard eight have determined to withdraw, and a new crew will train for next Summer's race with Yale.

SEVEN HUNDRED MINERS IDLE.

POTTSVILLE, Penn., Jan. 7.—A strike occurred this morning at the Cameron Colliery, one of the Mineral Railroad and Mining Company's collieries, near Shamokin. Several days ago the men were given notice of a reduction, which took effect this morning. This is the largest colliery in that region, and causes about 400 men and boys to be idle. There are now over 700 men and boys idle in consequence of the two strikes at Shamokin.

BOTH HOUSES IN SESSION.

LOUISIANA BANKRUPT.

THE DEFAULT IN THE PAYMENT OF INTEREST—NICHOLLS' GOVERNMENT UNABLE TO BORROW—THE STATE DEMOCRACY DEMORALIZED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—A letter received here to-day indicates very clearly that the interest on the Louisiana bonds, which was to have been paid on the 1st inst., but which, because of the impoverished condition of the State Treasury, is still due, will remain so for some time to come. The bankers, who were confidently expected to aid the Nicholls Administration by a loan of the $900,000 necessary to meet its obligations, still positively refuse to make any advances, and in consequence, the State is obliged to declare itself practically bankrupt. The tax-payers, who have little pecuniary interest in the bonds, evince no disposition to make any extraordinary effort to sustain the honor of their State, but on the contrary, those in the interior parishes who have heretofore defaulted still continue to declare that they do not propose to pay State taxes, now that what they call their own Government has come into power. They very significantly ask the authorities what they are going to do about it?

The feeling in Washington regarding the default in the payment of interest is particularly bitter. A number of prominent Democrats here, who trusted the Nicholls Government, not wisely but too well, and who hold upward of $1,000,000 worth of the bonds, are not now so enthusiastically in favor of the White League administration as they were when Gov. Packard was overthrown. Senator Kellogg, who arrived here last night from New-Orleans, has been closely questioned by these gentlemen in reference to the payment of the interest, and confirms the statement that there is no prospect that it will be paid. Regarding the political outlook in Louisiana, Senator Kellogg says that many of the most influential white natives of the State are thoroughly disgusted with the weakness of the present State Government, and with the result of the city election frauds in New-Orleans. This feeling has done much to divide and disorganize the Democracy. On the other hand, Mr. Kellogg believes that the Republicans were never more united than they are now; or in a better condition for making a hopeful contest against the White League.

MR. ACKLEN'S DISGRACE.

THE HOUSE REFUSES TO INVESTIGATE THE SCANDAL — AN UNSATISFACTORY EXPLANATION BY THE ACCUSED CONGRESSMAN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—The proceedings of the House to-day were opened by Mr. Acklen, of Louisiana, who made a personal explanation in relation to certain charges of a scandalous character, which have been preferred against him in the newspapers by the Democratic State Committee of Louisiana. He made a sweeping denial of the charges, and asked that a committee of the House be appointed to investigate and report upon them. Mr. Acklen's explanation was listened to with attention by most of the members, but many of them manifested a degree of impatience which showed that they had no sympathy with the man whose immoral excesses have made him the hero of two or three social scandals, and brought discredit upon the body of which he is unfortunately a member. During the course of his remarks, Acklen said he had hoped that the scandal would have been buried, particularly as nine Representatives and one Senator had passed upon the charges and had declared them malicious and without foundation. In view of the fact that Acklen is charged with having obtained the favorable verdict of his colleagues upon the same forged papers and affidavits with which the Louisiana Republican Committee was imposed upon, and through which that committee was induced to express a belief in his innocence, this reference to his recent exculpation in Washington was regarded as a severe reflection upon the conduct of the nine Representatives and one Senator who gave him a certificate of character. Mr. Acklen's resolutions to appoint a committee was objected to by Mr. Reagan, of Texas, who thought the matter involved was one over which the House had no jurisdiction. Such an investigation, he thought, would be a very awkward affair and would establish a very awkward precedent. Mr. Acklen claimed that the matter presented was a question of privilege, but the Speaker declined to rule that it was such a question, and, upon referring the matter to the House, Mr. Reagan's objection was sustained by an almost unanimous vote. Mr. Acklen will have to seek a vindication in New-Orleans, which is just what he does not care to attempt.

IN FAVOR OF FREE SUGAR.

ARGUMENTS ON THE TARIFF TO BE HEARD BY THE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE TO-DAY—THE CHAIRMAN AND OTHER MEMBERS IN FAVOR OF ABOLISHING THE DUTY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—The Committee of Ways and Means of the House has decided to listen to-morrow and the two following days to the arguments of those interested in the tariff on sugar. During an interview to-day with the Chairman of the committee, Mr. Wood, he said he had no doubt that there would be some kind of a bill passed during the present session. What its provisions would be, however, could not be determined until after the arguments of the sugar men had been heard. Mr. Wood said further that he was himself in favor of the free importation of sugar. Some time ago there had been a great outcry in favor of what was called a free breakfast-table, and, in response, coffee and tea had been placed upon the free list. Mr. Wood holds that sugar belongs as much to the breakfast-table as either tea or coffee. Regarding the fact that the price of coffee had not been reduced in consequence of the tariff being removed, Mr. Wood said that the causes which had contributed to keep up its cost were beyond the influence of legislation. The arguments to be heard by the committee will be made by importers and refiners, who are in opposition to each other, and there is an understanding that the bill to be prepared will be presented to the House on the 15th inst. In addition to the Chairman, three other members of the committee are understood to be in favor of placing sugar on the free list.

A STOCK-JOBBING CANARD.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—Several years ago the Pennsylvania Railroad Company leased the Columbus, Chicago and Indiana Central Railroad, one of the conditions of the lease being that the Pennsylvania Company guaranteed to pay 6 per cent. interest per annum on the first mortgage bonds of the leased road. Subsequently, the Pennsylvania Company upon the ground that there were certain obligations attaching on the part of the Columbus, Chicago and Indiana Central Road, not made known to the lessors when the lease was made, declined to pay further interest on the first mortgage bonds, and the amount now in default is quite a large sum. Suit was brought against the Pennsylvania Company, and the case was heard last Summer by Justice Harlan. A few days ago persons visited this city from New-York and succeeded in imposing a paragraph upon a few correspondents to the effect that Justice Harlan had given a decision in favor of the Cleveland, Columbus and Indiana Central Road. This was undoubtedly a stock-jobbing movement, as no decision has been rendered in the case by Justice Harlan, and is not likely to be for several weeks.

CONGRESSIONAL TOPICS.

SENATOR McDONALD'S BILL FOR THE TAXATION OF GREENBACKS—THE NEW-YORK CUSTOM-HOUSE CASES NOT YET ACTED ON.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—Two more financial measures were introduced in the Senate to-day—one by Senator Booth and the other by Senator McDonald. The bill by Senator Booth provides for the exchange of subsidiary silver coins when presented in sums of $20. This bill does not differ from several others previously presented in both houses. The bill presented by Senator McDonald, however, is entirely different from any financial measure hitherto presented to Congress, and provides for the taxation of United States legal-tender notes by the several States and Territories. It enacts that any State or Territory may provide for including in the valuation of the personal property of the owner or holder, any legal-tender notes of the United States, denominated "lawful money," owned or held by any person or corporation, in assessing taxes imposed by authority of such States or Territories, and may impose a tax thereon; but the tax imposed shall not be greater than is assessed upon gold or silver possessed by citizens of the States or Territories. This bill will never come back from the Committee on Finance, to which it was referred.

The question of whether or not the appointment of Gen. Merritt to be Collector of New-York will be confirmed does not as yet excite any particular interest here. Senator Conkling is in the city and there is some prospect that his committee will dispose of the Custom-house cases in the latter part of the week, but as yet he has not made public his intention regarding the matter. To-day, during an interview with a Senator who is a member of the committee, he stated that he and most of his colleagues were ready at any time to make such a report on the cases as Senator Conkling might desire.

NOTES FROM THE TROUBLED EAST.

PROBABLE OCCUPATION OF KANDAHAR THIS WEEK—SURRENDER OF KHOST TO THE BRITISH—RUSSIA AND TURKEY BOTH READY TO SIGN A DEFINITIVE TREATY.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—The Standard's correspondent with the Quettah column telegraphs that the commander of the British advanced cavalry has sent back a dispatch stating that the Governor of Kandahar has occupied a defensive position on the Tarnak River. Gens. Stewart and Biddulph will begin a joint advance to-day, (Wednesday.) They hope to defeat the Governor and enter Kandahar about the 10th inst.

A Vienna dispatch to the Times says it is expected that the definitive Russo-Turkish Convention will be signed to-day, (Wednesday.) The Turks having promised to commence the cessions to Montenegro, and the Russians having made concessions in regard to the war indemnity, and consented not to impose a clause making Russia the special guardian over the execution of the treaty of Berlin.

CALCUTTA, Jan. 7.—Gen. Roberts telegraphs that he reached Kakubi yesterday. The Deputy Governor of Khost came to Kakubi to pay his respects to Gen. Roberts. He will transfer to the British commander the forts and all the records, which, it is supposed, contain full information regarding the revenues of the Khost and Khuram districts. The people of Khost, who were at first unfriendly, seem to be reassured.

LONDON, Jan. 7.—It was a correspondent of the New-York Herald, and not Mr. James Gordon Bennett, who had the interview at Tashkend with the Russian Gen. Kaufmann when the latter communicated the fact that he had received a letter from Gen. Rasgonoff announcing that he accompanied Shere Ali in his flight from Kabul to the Russian frontier.

VIENNA, Jan. 7.—A dispatch to the Political Correspondence from Scutari reports that Hussein Pasha and the Montenegrin delegates are conferring to-day, by order of the Porte, with reference to the surrender of Podgoritza to Montenegro.

CURRENT FOREIGN TOPICS.

THE IRISH HOME RULERS REORGANIZING—MARRIAGE OF THE KING OF HOLLAND—SPREAD OF THE PLAGUE IN ASTRAKHAN—GEN. GRANT'S WELCOME IN BELFAST.

LONDON, Jan. 7.—The Council of the Irish Home Rule League has determined to call a general meeting of the organization, to be held on the 4th of February next, to consider a series of resolutions submitted by the active section of the Home Rule Party, on the policy of the Irish Parliamentary Party, and for the reorganization of the movement in Ireland.

AMOLSEN, Jan. 7.—The King of Holland was married to Princess Emma of Waldeck-Pyrmont, at 6:30 o'clock this evening, with great solemnity. The Duke of Saxony and Prince William of Wurtemberg were the witnesses. Prince Henry of the Netherlands, brother of the King, was unable to be present on account of illness.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 7.—The plague at Astrakhan is assuming serious proportions. Fugitives have carried the contagion to three adjacent villages. Quarantine has been proclaimed throughout the district of Enotaievsk. There have been 400 deaths from the disease up to Jan. 4.

TUNIS, June 7.—The Bey has sent a plenipotentiary to Paris to arrange the difference between France and Tunis. The French Government is not satisfied with the Bey's action, and demands an apology to the French Consul, the dismissal of the offending functionaries, and an inquiry regarding the dispute with M. Desancy.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—Gen. Grant arrived at Belfast yesterday, where his reception was very cordial. Replying to a toast at luncheon, he said he admitted that all the compliments paid his country were only its due, and it would only be an enemy of both Great Britain and America who would raise his hand to cause a difference between them.

All the special dispatches from Paris to the London journals state that the re-election of the Duke d'Audiffret-Pasquier to the Presidency of the Senate is improbable. M. Le Royer, of the Left, is mentioned as his successor.

Advices from Toulon report that the ironclads there are being rapidly refitted. Some rumors connect these preparations with the Tunisian difficulty.

BERLIN, Jan. 7.—The Police have seized the Freiheit, a Communistic paper published in London by Johann Most. All future issues of Die Laudwehr, published at Brussels by Carl Hirsch, are refused admission into the German Empire.

MARINE DISASTERS.

LONDON, Jan. 7.—The British brig Erycina, Capt. James, from Bull River, S. C., Nov. 12, for Liverpool, was abandoned at sea. Her crew was rescued and landed at Brest.

YAPHANK, Long Island, Jan. 7.—The Coast Wrecking Company have taken the steam pump out of the steamer Vindicator, in consequence of its inability to keep the water from gaining headway in her hold. The prospect for saving the vessel is not encouraging. The work of discharging the cargo is being vigorously pursued. Wreckers are working night and day.

THE MISSOURI TREASURY.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 7.—It is given out on the authority of one of the committee appointed by Gov. Phelps to examine the accounts of State Treasurer Brockmeyer, that a shortage of between $200,000 and $300,000 has been found. The most, if not all of this, was occasioned by the failure of the Mastin Bank, at Kansas City, which State funds were deposited.

A BIG FESTIVAL AT ALBANY.

THE STATE'S HOUSE-WARMING.

A BRILLIANT AND CROWDED RECEPTION AT THE NEW CAPITOL—A SUCCESSFUL AND MEMORABLE OPENING OF THE NEW BUILDING.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 7.—Albany is satisfied to-night. The reception which has been looked forward to has proved a great success, and the Capitol has been seen by a throng as brilliant and delighted as any that ever gathered in the county. It was expected that there would be a crowd. The expectation was fully met. The Capitol was opened at 8 o'clock, and even at that early hour the doors were besieged by throngs of ladies and gentlemen, while a long line of sleighs extended down Washington-avenue, waiting to discharge their loads. When the doors were opened the Capitol Police, a special force, dressed in neat dark blue uniforms, with silver buttons and badges, had all they could do to restrain the rush. The ladies were shown to the dressing-rooms on the right, and the gentlemen were sent to the left. In the dressing-rooms racks had been provided, and a large force of clerks was employed to ticket the parcels. They had their hands full for hours. The rush that began at 8 continued until after 10, and many visitors came later than that. From a careful estimate of the crowds that poured in and out for four hours, the number of visitors has been placed at about 10,000. The density of the crowd may be imagined.

As the ladies and gentlemen met at the foot of the grand stairway, they passed up at the right in a continuous line. The halls were well lighted in some places by the permanent jets of bronze, and in others by temporary chandeliers. At the landing on the main floor, the visitors came upon the brilliant red and gold corridor that runs along the court. Here a flood of light set off the brilliant coloring of the walls and arches to the best advantage. The atmosphere was warm, and there was a movement of the air that proved a great relief when the crowd became heavy and slow in its movements. Austin's Band began playing in the corridor at the extreme western end soon after 8 o'clock. It was intended that there should be dancing here, if the crowd was not too large to permit of it. As the event proved, the idea of dancing was one that could not be entertained. The crowd moved up and down through this corridor, and into the Senate Chamber. This room, with its carved oaken ceiling and walls, and its antique rafters of solid oak projecting into the apartment, and its heavy, glistening pillars of polished granite, proved to be a very attractive one. Groups of ladies and gentlemen lingered in it to admire the carvings, the brilliant gas-burners reflecting a thousand glances of light on their burnished surfaces, the warm and soft carpets, the heavy oaken furniture, and the rich brocaded curtains in the broad windows.

On leaving the Senate Chamber, the movement of the crowd was through the red corridor to the grand stairway again. Then it toiled slowly up the three flights under the arched staircase to the Assembly lobby. This was crowded, the space under the galleries was crowded, and the chamber itself, radiant with light, was bright with the rich costumes of ladies. The seats of the members were occupied, the Speaker's desk was filled, and every gallery, except that in which Gilmore's band and the cornet player, Levy, were stationed, was crowded. The Assembly Chamber was lighted by temporary fixtures, only two standards of heavy bronzes, of the pattern to be adopted all over the house, were in use. These are tall and elegant, of bronze, carrying many shaded globes. Out of this chamber the crowd made its way slowly down the second staircase, by which it had ascended. The crush was so great that it took nearly half an hour to pass from the Assembly to the lobby. On the basement floor, from 10 to 11, the stairway was packed solidly with ladies and gentlemen, one-half of the mass bent on getting up while the other was just as anxious to get down. A great deal of comfort was secured here, but never was a crowd less impatient. Everybody kept in good temper, and put up with what was really cause for complaint without growling.

The supper-room in the tent raised in the court was attractively decorated with flags and strips of bunting. It was expected to accommodate 600 persons at a time. Not more than 400 were in it at a time, and when there were so many there was much discomfort. The lunch was excellent. When the crowd became very dense, many persons went away without visiting the supper-room at all. From the time the throng began to enter until nearly midnight, the committee having the reception in charge received all who chose to present themselves in the Governor's room, at the head of the grand staircase on the main floor. Mayor Nolan, the Chairman of the Albany citizens, together with ex-Senator Harris, J. F. Smyth, R. H. Pruyn, Daniel Manning, Erastus Corning, Robert L. Banks, J. B. Thatcher, and Charles E. Smith divided the honors here. Their hands were full of business and they were ready with smiles and good words for everybody, so completely had their dreams of a great reception been realized.

About 10 o'clock Gov. Robinson appeared. He was followed by his staff, all in full uniform, cocked hats, and with their swords by their sides. The Governor marched along very solemnly, not deigning to look a pleasure he did not feel. Everybody knows what the Governor thinks about the new Capitol, and as he tramped sturdily along, with his staff following closely, in their brilliant uniforms, every man of them looking as if he liked the bustle of the crowd and the grandeur of the building, it was felt that he was annoyed by the scene; that he was offering himself as a sacrifice merely because he knew that duty demanded his presence, and that all the time not a fibre of his being responded to all the splendor and the rejoicing.

To attempt an enumeration of the prominent guests of the night seems to be an almost impossible task. Among the most conspicuous, however, were Postmaster-General Key, Postmaster James, of New-York; ex-Gov. J. B. Hawley, of Connecticut, ex-Gov. Seymour, ex-Gov. J. T. Hoffman, George William Curtis, Thurlow Weed, Gen. Carr, State Commissioner of Charities; Dr. and Gen. James McQuade, Chief-Judge Church, Gen. John C. Robinson, Gen. D. E. Sickles, William S. Verplanck, son of Gulian Verplanck, James Kent, grandson of Chancellor Kent, Rev. John Forsyth, Chaplain at West Point, Rev. Edward Everett Hale, Louis Palmer, Police Commissioner Jourdan, of Brooklyn, Quarantine Commissioner Judd, Congressman Bagley, of Watertown, Judge Sawyer, of St. Lawrence, ex-Senators J. W. Gerard and Starbuck, Gen. George G. Knapp, Collector Merritt, Justice Andrews, of the Court of Appeals, Auditor Schuyler, Judge Sturgis, Gail Hamilton, Hon. A. B. Cornell, David Dudley Field, Bishop George Cresswell Doane, Samuel Hand, Park Commissioner Lane, George M. Van Nort, ex-Commissioner of Public Works; Brig.-Gen. Wylie, Hubert O. Thompson, H. N. Camp, George Bliss, and a host of recent members of the Senate and Assembly. Of the present Legislature nearly every member attended, and all the State officers were represented. Nearly every gentleman brought a lady on each arm, so that the proportion of ladies to gentlemen was very great.

Late in the evening, when the crowd was densest on the stairways, the venerable Thurlow Weed called upon Mayor Nolan, in the Governor's room, and asked to be assisted to the Assembly Chamber. He did not fear to run the risk of being crushed or of fainting in the crowd. When he made his appearance room was made, and he was helped up the long flights by Senator Harris, and supported through the lobby of the Chamber to the place where the body will meet of which he had been a member years ago. He expressed himself as pleased with the interior, and particularly enjoyed the spectacle of the vast crowd of ladies and gentlemen who filled the wide space between the pillars and the Speaker's desk. The only serious drawback to the pleasure of the evening was the delay at the cloak-rooms after the reception was over. This was so great as to test the patience of both ladies and gentlemen. The reception was remarkably successful for one projected on so broad a scale, and the degree of success it met with merits recognition.

Many of the visitors to the new Capitol went from the top of the hill to the Martin Opera-house to attend the inauguration ball given by the Albany Burgesses Corps. The large ball-room was a brilliant sight at midnight. The stage was set with a scene representing a waterfall, with a stream of actual water rushing over a rocky bed and glistening in colored light. The gallery seats were all occupied, and the floor was filled with dancers. The red coats of the organization were abundant on the floor, and there was a good sprinkling of guests who wore the uniforms of other military bodies. Their ball was quite as successful as its managers expected it would be, and was a fitting supplement to the other and more dignified festivities of the day.

A large number of letters of regret at inability to be present at the reception at the Capitol were received from all parts of the country. Vice-President Wheeler writes: "I am usually averse to these gatherings, but really want to attend this one. But Congress reassembles on the day of its occurrence, and my presence here is necessary." Secretary Evarts sends regrets for the President and the members of the Cabinet, that they cannot leave Washington at this time. Secretary Sherman, Attorney-General Devens, Gov. McCreary, of Kentucky; Gov. Hubbard, of Connecticut; Gov. Carroll, of Maryland; William H. Vanderbilt, Gen. W. S. Hancock, Senator Francis Kernan, Parke Godwin, Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Schell, Judge Noah Davis, Gen. Sherman Hon. John Jay, Gen. Schofield, and many other prominent persons also send their regrets.

SENATOR VOORHEES' CAMPAIGN.

HIS CHANCES FOR RE-ELECTION DIMINISHING—AN EMBARRASSING POSITION FOR A CANDIDATE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 7.—Much interest is felt in the Indiana Senatorial contest, which is increasing in complications as the day of election approaches. The situation is a very embarrassing one for Mr. Voorhees. He needs all the Democratic and several of the National votes in the Legislature to secure his election, but the success of resumption has emboldened some of the hard-money Democrats, who have been quiet hitherto, to speak out. Hon. A. P. Edgerton and State Senator Sarnighausen, of Fort Wayne, are among those who express open hostility to Voorhees. To secure the votes of these and other Democrats of like views, Mr. Voorhees must make some kind of hard-money pledges. On the other hand, the National members, who have all arrived at the State capital, and are the object of unremitting attention from Voorhees' friends, declare that they will not support him unless he stands squarely by his public utterances, in favor of the inflation of the volume of greenbacks, and they require pledges from him to that effect. The situation is a very delicate one for Voorhees' friends to manage, and it is remarked that they are less hopeful than a few days ago. Hon. W. H. English, of Indianapolis, is the only hard-money Democrat prominently mentioned as an opponent of Voorhees, but so far he has declined to allow the use of his name. He has money and good standing in the party, but he could not be elected without Republican votes. The Republicans are quiet and waiting for developments. With the aid of the Nationals they could organize both branches of the Legislature and elect a United States Senator. It is very improbable, however, that they would give their support to any candidate who is satisfactory to the Greenbackers.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—Senator Voorhees to-day made a speech in the Senate, ostensibly upon his resolution instructing the Committee on Finance to inquire into the expediency of making the trade dollar a legal tender, but really for the purpose of making capital with the Greenback element in the Indiana Legislature. The Greenback men, with a few soft-money Democrats who are opposed to Voorhees' re-election to the Senate, hold the balance of power in the Indiana Legislature, and it is said there is a movement on foot to elect Mr. De La Matyr to the Senate from Indiana for the unexpired term of Senator Morton, which is now being filled temporarily upon the appointment of the Governor. Mr. Voorhees is somewhat alarmed at this threatened movement, fearing that it it should be successful his chance for the full term, beginning March 4 next, would be jeopardized. His speech to-day was made for the purpose of giving him additional prominence in the canvass now being made for the Senatorship.

A TOWN PREPARING FOR SIEGE.

FEARS OF AN ATTEMPT TO RESCUE MURDERERS CONFINED AT KEARNEY, NEB.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

OMAHA, Neb., Jan. 7.—The most intense excitement prevails in Kearney, in this State. Olive and eight or ten of his herders are in jail there for burning to death two homesteaders who had taken claims in the cattle country, thereby incurring the hostility of the cattle men. In the first attack made upon the homesteaders, a brother of Olive was killed. Olive offered $1,000 reward for the arrest of the two homesteaders. The arrest was made and the reward was paid to the Sheriff, and subsequently the men were taken from him as he was carrying them across the country for trial and burned to death. Great indignation throughout the State followed, and resulted in the arrest of Olive and his herders. Olive is a wealthy, influential cattle man.

Information was received to-day at Kearney, where Olive and others are in jail, that the cattle-herders in North-western Nebraska were organizing for the rescue of the prisoners. These herders are bold, desperate, reckless men, and have captured the town of Kearney and held it several hours on previous occasions. The citizens are arming, and say they will hold the prisoners or will shoot them before a rescue is effected. The situation is all the more perilous because United States troops cannot be called upon in such emergencies. Three large military posts near by could furnish adequate protection if the laws would permit. The most serious trouble in the history of the State is apprehended. Special correspondents of the Omaha papers went west to-day to be on the ground when the trouble begins.

THE CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO ROAD.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 7.—The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company was held to-day. President Huntington in his report says: "While the business of the road is steadily increasing, your President and Board of Directors are more fully than ever before impressed with the fact that connection with the Western system of railroads and an Eastern extension to deep water must be had before the success of the road can be fully assured. A small percentage on the securities you now have in the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company, invested in the securities of a line to connect with the Western system of roads would enhance the value of present holdings more than the amount called for by the new investment necessary to make this important connection."

Second Vice-President Wickham's report shows that the total earnings for the fiscal year were $1,936,260 68, and the total operating expenses, $1,594,739 10, leaving a balance of earnings over operating expenses of $341,621 58. The increase in the gross earnings over those of the fiscal year 1876-7 is $233,627 93.

The following Directors were el more at home than most of the Democratic members in the business of organizing, nominated for Clerk of the Assembly, John Kinney, of New-York, speaking of him as a man who, in the important position for which he was nominated, would do credit to himself and reflect honor upon the Democratic Party. No one seemed to know exactly who John Kinney was, and it was supposed that he would be voted down. Maurice B. Flynn, of Kings, nominated Hiram Calkins, who has been accorded, for several years, the empty compliment of nomination to the office. Mr. Kinney received the unanimous vote of the caucus. Again Mr. Seebacher came forward with a nomination, this time presenting Peter Hagan, of New-York, for Sergeant-at-Arms. Major Bogan objected to giving all the honors at the disposal of the caucus to New-York City, and he nominated P. H. O'Grady, of Albany, for the post. The Albany candidate was unanimously rejected, for Mr. Seebacher immediately reminded the caucus that Albany had not done anything in the last election that deserved recognition, and the other 19 Democrats present coincided with him and voted for Hagan. The business of the caucus was interrupted by Mr. Brooks, who urged that the Democrats should not forget during the session the importance of meeting for consultation more frequently than they had done last year. John Glen, of Brooklyn, was named for Door-keeper, and William Larkins and James Roberts for assistants.

The caucus was over, and outside, in the Court of Appeals Room, the Senate was gathering. Below, in the old Assembly Chamber, bare and cold, with its seats and desks out of the way, piled away somewhere for any use to which such furniture can be put, the Assembly was collected. The members were not anxious to remain long in the old place, for it was dusty and desolate, as well as cold. The Senate, under the leadership of Lieut.-Gov. Dorsheimer and Attorney-General Schoonmaker, formed in the order of districts and marched down below, tramped down the creaking stairway, which many of them had trodden thousands of times, and which few of them will ever have occasion to ascend again. The line passed across the corridor to the door which leads out toward the site of Congress Hall, and as the end of the line of Senators passed the Assembly door, Clerk Johnson led out the Assembly, formed in a double line behind the upper house. Around into Washington-avenue the line passed, and through the central door of the four which open into the lower lobby of the Capitol. Above the heads of the two bodies swung a single flag, the largest that could be procured, but it appeared insignificant hanging from the cornice of the immense pile of granite. A crowd of people had collected along the avenue and about the entrance to see the procession, and as the line advanced they fell back, without the assistance or suggestion of the Police, to open a passage for the Legislature.

The Senate led the way up the grand stairway, which few of the members had even had an opportunity to see before, and in their efforts to keep in line it is probable that the impression they obtained of this really most impressive feature of the new Capitol was an indistinct one. The lobby to the Assembly was crossed and the central folding doors were thrown open. Inside the sun lit up the warmly decorated walls and ceiling, gleaming in through the stained glass so as to produce a gloomy picture. The galleries above the Speaker's desk, behind carved balconies, were filled with ladies, the wives and relatives or friends of members of both houses, and of the officers of the State. The galleries at the east end of the room were also packed with spectators. Behind the Speaker's desk hung a gay Turkish rug of immense size, which had been used as a substitute for the draperies that are to serve as a screen for the arched hall back of the Speaker.

It was 10:55 by the stone-faced clock in the east gallery when Lieut.-Gov. Dorsheimer stepped into the space beside the Speaker's desk. The Senators ranged themselves about before the desks fronting the semi-circle. A crowd of eager spectators crowded up the stairways, and filled up the spaces behind the Assemblymen, who remained in the rear of the seats not to be occupied by them. At 11 o'clock the gavel fell upon the Speaker's table, and the Lieutenant-Governor said: "The Senate has escorted the Assembly from the old Capitol to the new one; and now, in this room, I declare the two chambers formally transferred to the Legislature. The Senate will now retire to its own room.

Clerk Johnson receive the gavel from the hands of Lieut.-Gov. Dorsheimer, and after the Senate had marched out he rapped for order, and then requested the members of the Assembly to be seated. The seats they were invited to take were inviting enough to make the formal request almost unnecessary. The desks are so admirably arranged about the Speaker that there can be little choice of seats. They stand in four rows, in a semi-circle, and are numbered from left to right, beginning at the row nearest the Speaker. The members poured into the empty aisles and passages, and sat where they were pleased to sit. "Old Salt," the candidate for Speaker, the veteran of the House, sat in the second row, at the left of the right aisle. He was one of the first to be seated. Jonathan Ogden, of Brooklyn, and Robert H. Strahan, of New-York, sat together in the front row of seats at the left of the centre aisle, and the other members were modestly seated in a row well back on the left. Erastus Brooks and Jacob Seebacher were near at hand, and on the extreme left, back row, ranged beside each other were George B. Sloan, the opponent of "Old Salt," Dr. I. I. Hayes, and James W. Husted. As the House became arranged, the spectators had an opportunity to see that the body before them was one of substance. One fact will be remarked by every one who sees the Assembly of 1879. It contains a much larger proportion of middle-age and elderly men than any Assembly in this State for years. The inexperienced members upon whom once that there had been for one occasion a very successful effort made to bring men who would truly represent the Republican Party. There were many farmers there, but they were farmers who were not without hay-seed upon their clothes. If an Assembly can be judged from its physique, a good record may be expected from the Assembly of 1879.

Rev. Dr. Holley, of the Presbyterian Church, offered the prayer. His voice was clear and round, and his words were heard with great distinctness all over the chamber. The Clerk then announced that members who were present, but who had not taken the oath, were immediately began the calling of the roll. Secretary of State Beach stood at the side of the Speaker's desk, and Deputy Secretary of State Moss took his stand before the Clerk's desk, on the floor of the House. The members responded to their names in twos and fives and sixes, heard the oath, kissed the Bible, and then signed their names to the roll of the Assembly at the Clerk's desk. As soon as over. When the names of the members had all been called, and those present had been sworn in, it was found that the number who had taken the oath was 112, and that the absentees were 16 in number. Then the right hand was raised and the members present and desired to know the further pleasure of the House.

Mr. Alvord rose from his seat. All eyes turned toward him as slightly bent figure, with its venerable head and long gray beard. He had only to make a motion, and he spoke in a tone of voice that immediately made it doubtful to those very near to him whether the duties of his place he or perform what they had been reported to be. He said: "With a few preliminary remarks, I propose to make a motion in reference to our future proceedings. After consultation with members of the House, I find that not have a full attendance of the members here today, and being informed that very near all, if not all, of the members will be within the limits of the city some time during the coming 72 or 18 hours, and with the intention upon the part of those who have this in charge, with the common consent of the prevailing party in this House, to call at the earliest possible moment a caucus of the members for the purpose of a temporary organization of the House, and deeming it desirable that it should be understood that the notice of a caucus may be had at any time in the coming future, I move you, Sir, that this House do stand in recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon."

The motion prevailed and the House adjourned. The members immediately bestirred themselves to range around the building and see the rooms that had been set apart for them. The gentlemen in the gallery all reported that they had heard nothing that was said except the remarks of Lieut.-Gov. Dorsheimer and the prayer of Dr. Magee. Mr. Alvord's remarks had sounded like a mere mumble. There had been, however, no special effort made by anybody to fill the immense space, and it may be that the fear that there will be difficulty about hearing what is said will be dissipated hereafter. Clerk Johnson had done one good thing. He had overcome the foolish notion of the person who contemplated sending the correspondents into the gallery, from which they could see nothing and hear less, and keep provided for them a desk on the floor. Among the visitors who examined the interior of the chamber, the halls, the stairway, and the decorations, was Rev. Edward Everett Hale, of Boston, who was enthusiastic in his praise. His characterized the building as marking an epoch in architecture, and lingered over its beauties with the fondness of a connoisseur.

The first session of the Senate was opened with prayer by Rev. Dr. Holley, of the Presbyterian Church, after which the roll was called, and all the Senators answered to their names except Mr. Davenport, of Steuben, and Dr. Pierce, of Erie. Lieut.-Gov. Dorsheimer, whose desk was ornamented by a mammoth bouquet of flowers, then delivered the following welcome address—the Senators rising and remaining standing during the delivery:

SENATORS: I cannot omit to say that four years been so closely associated with the construction of the building, the partial completion of which we this day celebrate, that I do not find any language in which it would be appropriate for me to address you. I will, therefore, simply trespass upon your patience long enough to express the hope that you will find the arrangements that have been made for you comfortable and satisfactory, and also that the most agreeable and friendly relations which I have heretofore enjoyed with each and all of you, may continue to the end of my term of office. Gentlemen, I welcome you to the temporary Senate Chamber.

A committee was then appointed to wait upon the Governor and inform him that the Senate was in session, to which the Governor returned answer that he would communicate, by Message, with the Senate as soon as he received information that the Assembly had organized and was ready to proceed to business.

Senator Edick presented the report, with accompanying bills, of the special committee appointed at the last session to revise and amend the Code of Civil Procedure, which was directed to be placed on General Orders, in accordance with a resolution of last Winter. The committee has made numerous amendments to the 13 chapters of the Code now in force, as well as to the remaining chapters that passed the last Legislature and were vetoed by the Governor.

Several bills were introduced, including one by Senator Oakley to consolidate the East New-York and Jamaica Railroad Companies, and one by Senator Goebel relative to the common schools of the city of New-York; a resolution by Senator Esmond, directing the Committee on Cities to inquire into the comparative expediency of conducting public works on the contract system or by day's work, was laid over for debate; also, a resolution by Senator Wagstaff to add to the regular standing committees of the Senate a Committee on Game Laws. Senator Harris offered the following resolution, which, after some discussion, was unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The Army Reorganization bill now before Congress proposes to prohibit the future manufacture of ordnance and ordnance stores at United States arsenals; to release the arsenals which thus become unnecessary, and hereafter to purchase ordnance and ammunition from private individuals only; therefore

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of this State in Congress be requested to oppose the passage of said bill, or at least the portions relating to the Ordnance Department, United States arsenals and ordnance stores.

The above is very similar to a resolution that was passed at the last session. Mr. Harris urged its immediate adoption to-day, because the Army bill was to be a special order in Congress to-morrow. Mr. Hughes advocated it on the ground that the abolition of the arsenals and Government works would throw large numbers of people in this State, and especially in his district, out of employment. Mr. Pomeroy favored the resolution on the broad principle that the United States Government ought to retain control of the manufacture of its own implements of warfare.

After the adoption of the resolution, the Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 12 M.

A TWENTY-FIVE-MILE WALK.

PLUCKY PEDESTRIANS AT GILMORE'S GARDEN—A NEW AMATEUR CHAMPION FROM PHILADELPHIA.

Having profited by the experience and failure of the previous evening's games, the members of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club managed the 25-mile walking match for the amateur championship of America—contested under their auspices in Gilmore's Garden last evening—so well that it proved one of the most successful and interesting entertainments of the kind of the season. The earthen floor of the great amphitheatre having been thoroughly sprinkled just before the doors were opened, the air was free from the stifling clouds of dust that proved so distressing alike to contestants and spectators on the first evening. The Police arrangements were also so perfected that all who had no business there were rigidly excluded from the centre of the arena. The judges of the walk were Messrs. Thomas W. White and Jasper T. Goodwin, and the referee was Charles Eldridge. Of the 47 entries for the race 37 appeared as starters, and of these the favorites were Harry Armstrong, of the Harlem Athletic Club; Frederick Mott, of the same club; William O'Keefe, of the Yorkville Athletic Club, and Charles Conner, of the Scottish-American Athletic Club. Harry Armstrong was the champion of 1878, and was therefore watched with the greatest interest. The start, which was at 7:32 o'clock, was witnessed by nearly 1,000 persons, and was made in good order, with all the men in a bunch. Conner at once struck a tremendous pace, and at the end of the first quarter had a lead of 50 feet. He was followed by Armstrong, Moot, O'Keefe, and the rest. This order was kept for two miles, though after the first three or four laps Armstrong pressed Conner so closely as to be at his shoulder, and they scored their first and second miles together in 5:18 and 16:53. Then Armstrong passed Conner amid yells and cheers from the crowd. Armstrong finished his third mile in 25:36, half a lap ahead of Conner. The pace was tremendous and well sustained by the favorites. A few of the losing ones also picked out another man who was doing splendid work. This was Budd How, of Philadelphia, a stranger to most present. He was not a graceful walker, and worked his arms and body violently; but he did not seem to be affected in the tremendous pace, and, though but little attention was paid to him, stuck doggedly to his work.

The first of the large field to leave the track was Thomas Noden, of Brooklyn, disqualified for running at the end of one mile and five laps. Then in rapid succession were disqualified John Lundgren, George Hills, Thomas Buckley, Frank T. Wound, John Harrington, Alexander W. Gerry, T. H. Noonen, W. M. Hamilton, and Samuel Auschell. Buckley and Noonen had a private match of 10 miles for a gold medal, but as the first was disqualified at the end of five miles, one lap, and Noonen at six miles, they were matched at six miles. From the eighth mile men began to leave the track of their own accord, and it became possible to centre the interest upon the man likely to stay to the end. At the end of the tenth mile Conner left the track. At this time Armstrong had a lead of three laps. How was second, Remhoffer, of New-York, third, Mott fourth, and O'Keefe fifth. This was also the position at the end of two hours, when on their thirteenth mile. Shortly after this Armstrong slipped on one of the lower turns, of the track and sprained his right ankle. He began to limp badly, and on the 14 mile and a lap left the track, unable to walk further, with his ankle very much swollen, and paining him so that he could hardly bear his foot on the ground, and had to be supported to his dressing-room.

The men now ran very fast, until, at the end of the twentieth mile, only five were left on the track. How, who by this time was well in the lead and was attracting much attention, was two laps ahead, completed the fifteenth mile in 2:20:15, and his twentieth in 3:14:57. Little O'Keefe drew forth rounds of applause from the spectators by his frequent and tremendous spurts, in any one of which he seemed about to be a chosen competitor as though the other was at a standstill. He completed his twentieth mile in 3:17:55. Mott was cheered to the echo by many men from his club who were present, and made a plucky fight, but on his twentieth mile showed signs of faltering, and after leaving the track several times finally left it for good, at the end of his twenty-first mile, a very plucky man. Remhoffer quit on his sixteenth mile, and after Mott gave up but four men were left on the track. They were How, O'Keefe, A. Varian, of the Knickerbocker Yacht Club, and William A. Elkes, of Port Henry, N. Y. These men kept up the pace admirably, though O'Keefe and Varian looked badly, and would have been glad to call the walk ended when they had finished the twenty-fourth mile; but this Elkes would not agree. As How neared the end the enthusiasm of the spectators was manifested in the most uproarious manner, and the new champion was greeted with the wildest yells at every turn. He finished at 11:45 o'clock, winner of the walk and amateur champion. His time was 4:12:46½, while that of Harry Armstrong last year was 4:09:09. Six laps, or nearly a mile, behind How came O'Keefe, at 12 laps, or a mile and a half, behind came Varian. Elkes was 16 laps, or two miles, behind. How was borne from the track on the shoulders of several members of the Knickerbocker Club, and Frank Whittaker, Barnum's veteran ring-master, proclaimed his victory from the centre of the arena. This victory of the man from Philadelphia was a surprise to every body, for no one had ever heard of him, and his general appearance at the start did not promise as much as that of a dozen others who started the race with him.

A HAPPY PARTY OF FRENCHMEN.

A happier party of Frenchmen never met around a banqueting-table than that which attended the annual dinner of the Cercle Français de l'Harmonie at the Westminster Hotel last evening. The banquet was in celebration of the organization of the Cercle, and was the thirteenth festival of its kind. In 1866 the club was founded by a pleasure-loving coterie, the only members of which present at the banquet last night were the President of the Cercle, M. Kinzler, and MM. Fiarand and Jamaret. The Cercle dined en famille last night, their only guests being representatives of the press, the most distinguished of whom was Mr. Charles A. Dana. The table was handsomely decorated, and the dinner was excellent and well-served. After it had been pleasurably discussed, President Kinzler introduced Prof. Charlier, who made an earnest speech, expressing the love of Frenchmen for "France our mother," and rapidly sketching the condition of the Republic, and its relation to Germany. Mr. Charles A. Dana spoke briefly of the erection of the Republic in France and its relation to our system of government. He closed by offering a toast to the success of the French Republic. His remarks were greeted with enthusiasm. Speeches were afterward made by Messrs. Villa of the Courrier des Etats Unis, Fiarand, and other gentlemen. The concluding exercises were of the most informal, and hence jovial, character.

NEW-JERSEY FREEHOLDERS CONVICTED.

The Board of Chosen Freeholders of Bergen County, N. J., have just been convicted on an indictment for neglect of duty in not keeping in repair a bridge once built on a public highway. Ten or 11 of the 13 Freeholders considered that the bridge was not of sufficient public utility to justify the board in repairing it at the public expense, and they voted to close it. The court held that after the bridge was built it was the duty of the board to maintain it, so long as the road was a public highway. The only way to get rid of it would be to have the road vacated by the courts. Under this interpretation of the law the jury found the board guilty. A great many indictments have been found in past years in New-Jersey against Chosen Freeholders for building bridges, but this is said to be the first time a board was ever tried for not building one. As the question is one of considerable importance, it is quite certain that the Bergen County Board will take it up to the Supreme Court on a writ of error.

IS HIS STORY TRUE?

A few days ago Daniel Dougherty was convicted, in the Court of Sessions, at Jersey City, of having robbed the residence of Charles Meisel, on Jersey City Heights, on the evidence of George Hendricks, and both were sentenced to three years' imprisonment. Yesterday Hendricks wrote to the counsel who defended Dougherty that neither he nor Dougherty had committed the robbery, but that he was induced by Police Capt. Woerner, Officers Farnham, Medrish, and Stanton to swear that he and Dougherty had been concerned in it, for the purpose of securing Dougherty's conviction. He afterward pleaded guilty himself to the charge, but the policemen named promised, he says, to secure his freedom for him.

NATIONAL CAPITAL TOPICS.

THE SUCCESS OF RESUMPTION.

SECRETARY SHERMAN MAKES A GRATIFYING REPORT TO THE CABINET—NEW NATIONAL BANK DEPOSITORIES.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—All the members of the Cabinet were present at the meeting to-day except Postmaster-General Key, who was represented by Assistant Postmaster-General Tyner. A large amount of routine business was transacted, and the condition of the finances of the country was again discussed. All the members expressed gratification at the success so far attending the resumption of specie payments, and saw no reason why it should not be maintained successfully.

Secretary Sherman called attention to the fact that the Treasury now holds large amounts of gold, silver, and greenbacks, much more than there is any use for at present. Reference was also made to reports from all parts of the country that resumption had given confidence to business, and that both at home and abroad business seems to be stimulated, and is being conducted with renewed activity. The arrangement of the Treasury Department with the national bank depositaries is that all subscriptions to the 4 per cent. loan through them are to be paid in coin. Subscriptions through other sources can be paid for in greenbacks. The subscription of $30,000,000 made recently, was payable partly in coin and partly in greenbacks. The subscription made on the 3d inst. by the National Bank of the State of New-York of $800,266 44 was paid in coin. On Jan. 1 national bank depositories held $41,996,346 67 in coin on account of subscriptions to the 4 per cent. loan.

In addition to those heretofore designated, the following named national banks have since the 1st inst. been designated as depositories to receive deposits on account of subscriptions to the 4 per cent. funded loan of the United States: The Hartford National Bank of Hartford, Conn.; the First National Bank of Quincy, Ill.; the First National Bank of Chillicothe, Ohio; the Continental National Bank of New-York City; the First National Bank of Newark, Ohio; the Chemical National Bank of New-York City; the National Park Bank of New-York, City.

THE TENTH FEDERAL CENSUS.

PROVISIONS OF THE BILL REPORTED TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES BY MR. COX.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—The bill introduced by Representative Cox, of New-York, to-day, provides for taking the census of the population, wealth, and industry of the United States, beginning on the 1st day of June, 1880. The Superintendent of the Census is to be appointed by the President, and confirmed by the Senate; a clerical force is to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, and one or more Supervisors for each State and Territory, not exceeding in all 150, are to be nominated by the Governors of the several States. The schedules of inquiries are the same as those contained in the act for taking the census of 1850, with additional provisions for inquiries as to the relation of each person enumerated to the head of the family, whether wife, son, daughter, servant, boarder, &c.; as to the civil conditions of each person enumerated, whether married, widowed, or single; as to the place of birth of the parents of each person enumerated, and as to the physical and mental health of each person enumerated, whether active or disabled, maimed, crippled, bed-ridden, deaf, dumb, blind, insane, or idiotic.

To agricultural schedule—No. 3—the Superintendent of the Census may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, add inquiries relating to the acreage of the several crops reported, and with a like approval may drop from the schedule such of the minor crops as it may be deemed expedient to omit from the enumeration. Manufacturing schedule—No 3—shall contain inquiries respecting the kind and amount of power employed in establishments of productive industry, and the kind and number of machines in use, together with the maximum capacity of such establishments.

The social statistics shall contain inquiries relating to the public indebtedness of cities, counties, and towns, and of the ownership of the public debt of the United States, by whom owned, and the respective amounts, and such additional inquiries respecting the same, as well as respecting public paupers and criminals, as the Superintendent shall deem necessary.

The mortality schedule shall contain inquiries as to the birth-place of the father and mother of each person reported as having died during the year, and the usual occupation of each person. The Superintendent of the Census is required to obtain from every railroad corporation the name of the corporation, with the corporate names of all leased lines; the number of miles projected or authorized by law or charter, with the several terminal points of the same; the number of miles completed, exhibiting separately the length of lines within each State; the number of miles operated during the fiscal year ending with June; the capital stock authorized and amount paid up; the amount of funded and unfunded debt, with period of funded debt and interest thereon, and the amount of all sinking fund provided for the redemption of such debt; the character of the grants derived from public grant remaining unsold—in short, a complete detailed statement of the affairs of each road, including its business, liabilities, and assets. Provision is also made for obtaining like information from express, telegraph, life insurance, and fire and marine insurance companies.

The sum of $3,000,000 is fixed as the maximum cost of the census. The bill proposes a provision that to any State or Territory which at the intermediate five years may take a census with similar blanks and schedules and report to the Secretary of the Interior, the Government in such case to pay half the cost. The bill is also operative for all future censuses unless otherwise ordered by Congress. The reason assigned by Mr. Cox for this five-year clause is that the decennial census becomes almost obsolete and unreliable before the expiration of that period. It is also claimed that the taking of the enumeration from the Deputy Marshals and giving it to the enumerators, who are appointed by the Supervisors named by the Governors of the States and Territories, makes the work as nearly a non-partisan as possible. The bill was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on the Tenth Census.

NOTES FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7, 1879.

The subscriptions to the 4 per cent. loan to-day were $2,733,250.

The receipts from internal revenue to-day were $175,459, and from Customs $237,147.

The Senate in executive session this afternoon transacted no business except to refer to appropriate committees the nominations received to-day.

Representative Hartridge, of Georgia, was in a critical condition yesterday from incipient pneumonia, but to-day he seems to be improving in health.

Hon. Alexander H. Stephens had an attack of neuralgia of the bowels last night, and is in a worse condition physically than he has been for years. He is still confined to his room at the National Hotel.

Associate Justice Hunt remains in a critical condition, though to-night he is somewhat easier. His attending physician, Dr. Baxter, while he has no fear of any immediate danger, is not prepared to say that he believes Judge Hunt will recover from his present illness. His right side is completely paralyzed, and he is unable to articulate. His mind is perfectly clear.

The first diplomatic reception of the season was given last night by the Brazilian Minister and his wife. Nearly all the foreign legations were represented, and Sir Edward Thornton was present with his family. The company included many ladies, Justices of the Supreme Court, members of the Cabinet, Senators, and Representatives, and other persons of prominence.

A memorial from the citizens of Bayonne, N. J., was presented in the House to-day by Representative Hardenbergh, praying that such parts of their city as are now comprised within the limits of the port of entry of Newark be detached, and that the same privileges of entry and clearance for foreign commerce be conferred upon them as are and may hereafter be enjoyed by their adjoining city, Jersey City, which is now embraced within the port of entry of New-York.

The members of the sub-committee who visited Memphis to inquire into the cause of the yellow fever epidemic, returned to Washington last evening, with the exception of Col. Casey, who is expected on Monday next. The Board of Experts who accompanied the sub-committee South have been instructed to prepare their report for submission to the full committee on the meeting in this city on the 15th inst. This report will include the result of the investigation for the district of New-Orleans.

The Senate Committee on Finance held a meeting to-day, which was devoted to an informal discussion of the bill that provides for the issuance of Treasury certificates of deposit to any person depositing coin or United States notes, said certificates to bear interest at 3.65 per cent. per annum, and to be convertible at any time within one year from their date into 4 per cent. bonds, issued upon the refunding of the 6 per cent. bonds. No action was taken, but the general feeling was highly favorable to the measure. The committee are desirous to dispose of the Tobacco Tax bill as soon as possible, and will at an early day consider the hearing of arguments on the subject. Arrangements will probably be made to hear the Commissioner of Internal Revenue during this week.

The report presented to-day by the House Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures concurs with the Senate Committee in the recommendation that the silver dollar of 412½ grains be retained, and that the trade-dollar be discontinued. The report also recommends the early passage of the House bill introduced at the last session of the Congress to establish the metric system in the Post Offices and Custom-houses of the United States. It provides that on and after July 1, 1880, for all postal purposes 15 grams shall be substituted for half an ounce, and so in proportion; and that the Postmaster-General shall furnish all Post Offices with postal balances graduated in grams of the metric system at an expense not exceeding $50,000, and on and after July 1, 1880, the metric system of weights and measures is legalized in the customs, and the Revised Statutes shall be obligatory in the assessment of duties on imported commodities in the Custom-houses of the United States.

HOWGATE'S ARCTIC PROJECT.

A LETTER ADVOCATING AID FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A COLONY ON LADY FRANKLIN'S BAY—PROSPECTIVE BENEFITS TO THE WHALING INTEREST.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7—The following self-explanatory letter was to-day addressed to the Secretary of War by Capt. Howgate:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 7, 1879.

SIR: Referring to the bill to authorize and equip an expedition to the Arctic Seas, I have the honor to submit that, aside from any benefits that may accrue to science from a thorough exploration of the vast area within the Arctic Circle yet unknown to civilized man, the present reduced condition of the whaling interests of our country would alone justify the expenditure of ten times the cost of the proposed colony on the shore of Lady Franklin's Bay, as a reasonable effort to discover and develop new whaling grounds. It may be that there is no large body of water, no open polar sea, within this unknown area, but it is the opinion of some of the most distinguished geographers and experienced explorers that one does exist, and that it abounds in such forms of life as are found in more southern waters. Prof. Maury, the distinguished scientist, says: "Within this polar area the whales have their nursery." Prof. Agassiz, another distinguished scientist, of whom New-England is justly proud, writing to the President of the American Geographical Society in favor of a polar expedition then before the public, says: "Scientific is not its highest importance, only in a scientific point of view, but particularly so for the interests of the whale fisheries. The discovery of a passage into the open water around the pole, which would render whale-fishing possible, would be one of the most important results for the improvement of whale-fishing."

The following figures, taken from Mr. Starbuck's exhaustive history of the whale fisheries of the United States, show the startling decadence of this important branch of national industry, and the necessity of prompt action to prevent its total extinction: In 1846 there belonged to the various portions of the United States 678 ships and barks, 32 brigs, and 22 schooners, with an aggregate capacity of 233,199 tons. On the 1st of January, 1877, the entire fleet was reduced to 112 ships and barks, and 51 brigs and schooners, having a total capacity of 57,328 tons. The value of oil brought into the United States in 1854 amounted to $10,802,594 20, and in 1876 to only $2,639,463 31. While I believe that the interests of geographical and scientific discovery, as set forth by Prof. Henry J. Loomis and others in connection with the proposed Arctic colony, are of themselves of sufficient magnitude to warrant favorable legislation, the additional practical and commercial results that are possible would seem to demand such legislation as a matter of justice to that section of the country whose inhabitants depend so largely for their employment upon our whale fisheries as do those of the New-England States.

NAVY AND ARMY INTELLIGENCE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—Passed Assistant Surgeon C. H. H. Hall has been ordered to duty at the Mare Island Naval Hospital, and Passed Assistant Surgeon P. A. Lovering to the training-ship Minnesota, at New-York. Passed Assistant Surgeon N. McP. Ferebee has been detached from the training-ship Minnesota, and placed on waiting orders. The Secretary of War has granted to Capt. Charles Porter eight months' leave of absence, with permission to go beyond the sea.

MERCHANTS EMBARRASSED.

DETAILS OF TWO FAILURES IN CHICAGO—OTHER BUSINESS TROUBLES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 7.—Sutter Brothers, wholesale dealers in leaf tobacco, who failed yesterday for nearly $200,000, were indebted to the following New-York firms, among others: Rosenwald & Brother, $18,319; Teller Brothers, $18,891; A. H. Nixon's Sons, $4,764; Guerra & Lopez, $1,705; J. J. Admiral, $13,054 66; C. F. Tag & Son, $21,270; Vega & Bernheim, $3,816; J. N. Griswold, $3,085; L. Bamberger & Co., $1,175; Schröder & Bon, $16,083; J. Hamburger & Co., $2,778; Neuburger & Steinecke, $5,094; M. L. Hungerford, $3,819; Basch & Fischer, $2,819; A. H. Seyville & Co., $3,409; N. D. Skinner, $1,606; A. Coleman, $9,543; G. W. Graves, $995. These are all unsecured debts. The nominal assets are $176,110, but less than 50 per cent. of that amount can be realized. The attorneys are of the opinion that the firm cannot pay 25 cents on the dollar. The books show a loss of $34,000 during the past year from bad debts. The credit of the firm is set down in the latest issue of Bradstreet's Commercial Reports as excellent. The suspension was entirely voluntary, and had been contemplated for several weeks.

CHICAGO, Jan. 7.—Souther & Hooper, furniture dealers at Nos. 7 and 8 Haymarket-square, have failed, with liabilities of $40,000 and assets estimated at $30,000.

W. H. Smith & Co., dry goods, of No. 434 Washington-street, failed to-day. Their liabilities are $75,000, and their assets are nominally equal to their liabilities.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 7.—L. Sobel, the proprietor of the dollar store, has failed. Liabilities, $24,000. Most of his creditors are New-York firms.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

At 9 o'clock last night flames were discovered issuing from Woolsey's ship chandlery building, on the north-east corner of Hudson and York streets, Jersey City. The Fire Department responded promptly, but before their arrival the two upper floors of the building were ablaze. The firemen succeeded in confining the fire to that part of the structure. The two floors which were gutted were occupied by Chester & Keefe, sail makers, who estimate their loss at $5,500, partially covered by insurance. The stock in Joseph Moans' rigging establishment on the floor below was damaged $1,500 by water. Woolsey's stock was also damaged $1,500 by water. The loss on the building, which belonged to the estate of the late C. A. Woolsey, is $2,000. The origin of the flames cannot be accounted for.

Early yesterday morning the block in Claremont, N. H., owned by Putnam, Pierce & Fairbanks, was damaged by fire to the extent of $2,500, on which there is an insurance of $5,000. The ground floor is occupied by J. W. Pierce & Co. as a general country store, whose loss is $6,000; insured for $4,000.

The harness and saddlery manufactory of the Peters & Calhoun Company, at Broad and Green streets, Newark, N. J., was damaged $15,000 by fire, Monday night. The fire was no doubt caused by a defective flue.

John T. Merril's steam mill at Gray's Corner, Me., was burned Monday night. Loss, $3,500; no insurance.

THE ESTATE OF EDWARD BOYLE.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Jan. 7.—The January term of the Supreme Court of New-Jersey was opened to-day, Judge Scudder presiding. The only important decision rendered was in the case of the estate of Edward Boyle, the well-known City Surveyor of New-York, on property valued at $40,000 in Ocean Township, claimed by William J. Cowley and Margaret A. Fountain as against the other alleged heirs and the House of the Good Shepherd, New-York. The court decided that as Cowley is only a cousin, and does not know if Margaret Fountain, the aunt, is living, his claim to the property is not sufficient to warrant the court in dispossessing Emma Knapp, sister of Boyle's wife, who died two days before her husband, in Paris, in 1876.

BOLD ROBBERY IN CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, Jan. 7.—A bold robbery occurred on East Madison-street, at 7 o'clock this evening. Two unknown men drove up to Goldsmith's pawnbroking establishment in a cutter. One locked the door while the other broke in the show-case and abstracted two trays of diamonds valued at $7,000. The two then re-entered the cutter and drove rapidly away. Nothing has been learned of them since.

RAPID TRANSIT IN BROOKLYN.

A joint meeting of the Directors of the newly-organized Kings County Elevated Railway Company and the Rapid Transit Commissioners was held yesterday, at which the Commissioners transferred their maps, &c., to the Directors, the latter having shown that they had taken all the proper steps to complete the organization.

At a meeting of Fulton-street property-owners held last evening at the store of T. K. Horton & Co., ex-Mayor Schroeder presiding, a committee was appointed to secure the passage of an act exempting Fulton-street from the general law permitting the building of elevated railroads on the routes designated by the Rapid Transit Commission.

MISS CORSON'S SCHOOL.

The first lesson in cookery for the season of 1879 will be given to ladies by Miss Juliet Corson this afternoon at 3 o'clock, at the New-York Cooking School, No. 33 East Seventeenth-street. The bill of fare includes consommé à la royale, baked carp with Spanish sauce, pommes à la royale, breast of lamb with Richmond sauce, salade à la Romaine, and apple meringue.

FRAMERS OF STATE LAWS.

PENNSYLVANIA'S LEGISLATORS.

ORGANIZATION WITH REPUBLICAN OFFICERS—SENATOR CAMERON'S RE-ELECTION CONSIDERED CERTAIN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARRISBURG, Penn., Jan. 7.—The Legislature assembled to-day and was organized, and is now ready for the serious business of the session. Both houses met at 12 o'clock, and without delay proceeded in the business of organization. In the Senate, after the reading of the returns of the elections for Senator, the swearing in of new Senators and the calling of the roll, the election of temporary Speaker was the first business in order. Senator A. J. Herr, of Dauphin, was nominated by the Republicans, and was elected by a vote of 33 to 17 for his Democratic opponent, Senator Ermentrout, of Berks. Senator Parker, elected by the Greenbackers of Schuylkill County, voted for Mr. Herr, and Senator Paulson, a Greenback Democrat, voted for Mr. Ermentrout. The chief officers of the Senate were elected by the Republicans, as follows: Chief Clerk, Thomas B. Cochran, of the Lancaster Journal; Clerk, Lucius Rogers, of McKean; Reading Clerk, E. W. Smiley, of Venango; Message Clerk, W. A. Hinchman, of Franklin; Transcribing Clerks, F. A. Weaver, of Indiana; Maurice B. Hannum, of Delaware; Sergeant-at-Arms, Robert Greaves, of Philadelphia; Assistants, Frank Murray, of Allegheny, and Joseph Berry, of Philadelphia.

In the House, after reading the returns, swearing in members, and calling the roll, Hon. Henry M. Long, of Allegheny, was elected Speaker, receiving 111 votes to 76 for Daniel L. Sherwood, Democrat, of Northumberland, and 11 for M. P. Doyle, National, of Huntingdon. There are 16 Nationals, or Greenbackers, in the House, and the five who did not vote for Doyle voted for Long. The House chose the following subordinate officers: Chief Clerk, W. C. Shuriock, of Beaver; Resident Clerk, John A. Small, of this city, chosen unanimously by acclamation; Mr. Huhn, of Philadelphia, Reading Clerk.

The present session promises to be a long and busy one. Many important measures will be brought before the Legislature, and it is thought the session will extend over fully 150 days. Among the important measures to be considered are a proposition to make the State liable for the Pittsburg riot losses of 1877, and a bill to arrange the finances of the Commonwealth that there will not be a deficiency in the general revenue fund while the sinking fund is overflowing. Hereafter the sessions will be biennial.

To nominate a Republican candidate for United States Senator will be held to-morrow evening. There is now no opposition to Senator J. D. Cameron's re-election. Wolfe, of Union, who was or time a formidable opponent, has now but a poor fight and determined to break up the Cameron ring, but so hopeless was the undertaking that even Wolfe gave up the undertaking, and he now declares his intention of going into the caucus and abiding by its action. The matter now stands Senator Cameron's re-election by a handsome majority, probably exceeding that of the party in the Legislature, is a foregone conclusion. The election will be held on Wednesday, Jan. 22, in joint convention, the houses voting separately the day before.

Great preparations are making for the inauguration of Governor-elect Hoyt, which will take place on Tuesday, Jan. 21. The Young Men's Republican Club of this city will give a reception and ball on Monday evening, Jan. 20, in honor of the Governor-elect.

WISCONSIN SENATORIAL CONTEST.

GATHERING OF THE MEMBERS OF THE LEGISLATURE—PROSPECTS OF THE DIFFERENT CANDIDATES FOR SENATOR.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

MADISON, Wis., Jan. 7.—The Wisconsin Legislature will convene here to-morrow noon. The city is filled with members, office-seekers, and politicians, and all incoming trains are thronged. Owing to the sudden and complete triumph of the Republican Party in the State, the number of applicants for position from all parts of the State is far larger than known here for many years. Republican caucuses were held to-night, and all the vexed questions were settled. William T. Price, of Jackson, was chosen as President of the Senate, and C. E. Bross, of Dane, as Chief Clerk. D. M. Keeley, of Brown, was selected as Speaker of the Assembly, and John Eldred, of Milwaukee, as Chief Clerk. The Senate numbers 33 members; of these 11 are natives of New-York State, 6 of New-England, 7 of other States, and 9 of foreign birth. The Assembly has 100 members, of whom 8 are natives of Wisconsin, 30 of New-York State, 11 nearly as great to him as to this Government. We are obliged to go to Rio for our coffee and rubber, for we cannot produce these articles or buy them elsewhere to equal advantage. On the other hand, the European markets are open to the merchants of Brazil, and they can there find what-ever they require. The building up of the trade, therefore, remains to be done by our merchants, who need much a market as Brazil. The English merchants have shown their shrewdness by purchasing cargoes of products in this country, and re-shipping them direct to Brazil, after putting an English brand upon them. In this way the people of Brazil have unconsciously become familiar with American butter and cheese, and many other articles, while the profits have been made in England instead of in America. The new line has now been running for seven months, bringing the mails regularly on schedule time. The ships touch at St. Thomas, Para, Pernambuco, Bahia, and Rio, whereas the English ships make no intermediate ports. Immense quantities of flour are being shipped by this line, and articles with which the European market are glutted are sent to seek outlet in the markets thus opened to our manufacturers and producers. Upon the permanent establishment of such lines and speedy has depends wholly the future of our trade with Brazil. The matter is certainly an important one to this country, and the prospect of largely supplying Brazil with American products ought not to be swept away by any popular cry based on false arguments. The question of the Brazilian mail service is before Congress. No money has as yet been paid by the Brazilian Government for the new service, that Government awaiting the action of our own.

"The increased trade which has resulted already from the establishment of the new line has raised the question of banking and exchange. Our mercantile friends found that it was a great hindrance to be obliged to buy bills of exchange on London, to say nothing of the double commission to be paid. The cost of exchange on a yearly business of $50,000,000 is a sum worth looking after and retaining in our own country, instead of sending it to help swell the capital of England. Therefore the movement was started, as stated in THE TIMES, to establish a banking house in Chicago, where exchange could be procured directly in New-York or Rio Janeiro. The project is not matured as yet, but I have no doubt of its success.

"This is a single instance of how the extension of our shipping interests brings money into this country. A merchant of my acquaintance from South America was so attracted by the ships of the American line to Brazil that he dropped the plans he had received from an English ship-builder and came to Philadelphia to conclude a contract with a firm there. This single transaction brought $90,000 in gold to this country instead of to England, and seven-eighths of that sum was distributed among our industrial classes. It is not easy to find any ground on which we can afford to lose the advantages, direct and indirect, of a rapid steam-ship communication between the United States and Brazil, and I have only to look at the matter in all its bearings to recognize its great importance as a factor in the growth and development of this great nation.

"Whereas Brazil's European countries estimate the value of fast mails as factors of trade, England has a semi-monthly mail with Brazil, the contracting company receiving a liberal sum for the service, and being required to furnish ships of large carrying capacity, great speed, and splendid passenger accommodations, all this to attract the merchants of Brazil to her shores. France, in 1875, renewed her contracts with her former carriers for a semi-monthly line from Havre to Rio Janeiro and the River Plate, the distance traveled being 298,656 miles a year, for 3,644,000 francs, or $703,292. The West India contract was renewed by France at the same time, and Germany and Italy have in other conventions in the conclusion that postal ships are a necessity to the development of the South American trade."

THE NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY.

RECEIVER BEST INDORSED—THE COMPANY'S PRESENT CONDITION—DOLLAR PAID TO CREDITORS AND A HANDSOME SURPLUS REMAINING.

In answer to a call for a meeting to discuss the "desirability of taking the National Trust Company out of the hands of the court and placing it upon a substantial basis," 18 stockholders, representing 4,071 shares of the capital stock of that defunct and grossly mismanaged concern, met in Room No. 11 of the Coal and Iron Exchange Building yesterday morning. The gentlemen present were Samuel T. Ross, Elliott C. Cowdin, N. J. Haines, S. Livingston, F. J. Constant, J. W. Hody, J. S. Lowery, J. P. Morris, G. E. Thomas, N. A. Freeborn, N. H. Haight, G. W. Haight, S. D. Coykendall, representing Thomas Cornell, William Ripley, W. O. McDowell, S. A. Wood, J. H. V. Arnold, and Darius R. Maugam, the ex-President of the company. There appeared to be a misunderstanding about the meeting from the start. A majority of those whose names were signed to the call were absent, and nearly all who did attend seemed to regard with suspicion the actions of the few who appeared to be the prime movers in the matter. Mr. Ross was chosen Chairman and Mr. McDowell Secretary. Mr. McDowell offered a series of resolutions providing for the appointment of a committee to investigate the affairs of the company, and calling upon the Receiver to take no action excepting with their approval. Mr. F. Smyth, counsel for Receiver Best, objected to the resolutions on the ground that the Receiver was an officer of the court, and must act under its orders. His report, together with 4,000 accompanying vouchers, had been carefully examined and passed upon by a competent officer, and had been placed in the County Clerk's office after having been ratified and approved by the court. It was subject to the inspection of every one. Another reason why this resolutions were an imputation on the Receiver. Never before had a Receiver paid 100 cents on the dollar within six months of taking office. Mr. Best had paid all undisputed claims, and only awaited the settlement of suits sworn before he took office to finally settle up everything. Some of these suits were in New-Jersey, where New-York counsel cannot practice, and Mr. Best had employed ex-Gov. Bedle, who, so far, had been successful. The Receiver had found that loans had been made and money advanced not allowed by the charter, and these were under investigation. The Receiver should not be hampered, and Impertinent cast upon him, by any such action as was proposed.

Mr. McDowell disclaimed any intention of casting an imputation on Mr. Best, and tried to argue that an investigation would be a good thing for him as well as for all other persons concerned.

By a unanimous vote Mr. Best was asked to state to the meeting the present condition of the company. He said that he had been waiting for the settlement of old suits that had been in litigation for years, involving over $260,000, before presenting his final report. In the matter of one loan of $100,000 he had been enjoined from enforcing payment or disposing of the collaterals. This injunction had been issued by the United States Circuit Court of Indiana. By order of the Supreme Court of this State, Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks had been retained to have it set aside. He argued the question before Judge Drummond early in April last year. Owing to illness his Honor had been unable to render a decision, but one was shortly expected. Should this be favorable, Mr. Best would be able to pay the stockholders 15 per cent. In November Mr. Best got a decree of foreclosure and sale in the matter of a $45,000 mortgage, involving $50,000, was to have been argued last September, but was, after adjournments, set down for the present month. There is another case in the Court of Appeals, and should the judgment be affirmed the stockholders will get about $20,000. Should it be reversed they will have to pay probably $30,000. There are other litigations involving sums of $10,000, $15,000, and $20,000. It was hoped that decisions would be had in all these suits within the next 60 days. All undisputed claims had been paid in full in three dividends. The contingent liabilities aggregate something over $90,000, including $30,000 for rent and $45,000 in a bond given in the case now in the Court of Appeals. Mr. Best believed that these liabilities would be reduced by the Referees and the court to $60,000, and he had reserved sufficient money to meet them as they may be approved by the court and presented for payment. Another contingent liability recently presented is a claim by depositors for interest on their balances. Mr. Best had refused to recognize these demands, and had been sued in consequence, and the matter is now pending in the Supreme Court. The company owns $95,000 of its own stock as treasury stock, withheld from the estate will give a larger pro rata payment to the stockholders than if the entire capital were outstanding.

After a little more discussion, the resolutions were matifiated out of shape, and were finally laid on the table by a stock vote of 2,350 yeas to 1,546 nays. Among the latter were 275 cast by ex-President Mangam. They were immediately challenged, on the ground that the stock they represented had been rehypothecated, and they were thrown out. Mr. Smyth then asked that inasmuch as the Receiver had been fully indorsed by the vote just cast, an advisory committee should be appointed to act with him, and that the committee should be given full power to investigate the company's affairs. Mr. Coykendall stated on behalf of Mr. Cornell that the latter's name had been signed to the call under a misapprehension. Mr. Cornell had the utmost confidence in Receiver Best, and knew him to be intelligent, capable, and animated solely by the best interests of the stockholders. He was opposed to removing the affairs of the company from the hands of the court, and believe it was in the power of any committee to do so. Several other gentlemen also expressed their confidence in Mr. Best, and made disapproval of any action tending to displace him. Mr. Smyth's request was put in the form of a motion and was carried. Messrs. Elliott C. Cowdin, E. M. Kingsley, and N. J. Haines were appointed the committee, with power to fill vacancies. The meeting then adjourned.

THEIR STORIES DO NOT TALLY.

Mary A. Dater has sued her husband, Irving Dater, in the Superior Court, for a limited divorce on the ground of alleged cruel and inhuman treatment. The parties were married in 1862 and have had seven children, of whom but two are now living. She recites a number of instances where he struck her and threw her down, and charges also that he has squandered a sum of her personal property. The defendant specifically denies the charges of cruelty, and alleges that the plaintiff has a bad temper and has been guilty of criminal conduct with a family physician. On motion before Judge Ingraham, yesterday, certain portions of the answer were ordered out as immaterial and scandalous.

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

THIRD SESSION—Jan. 7.

SUMMARY.

Both houses of Congress reassembled and proceeded with business. In the Senate, a communication from the Commissioner of Pensions was submitted, asking for an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the pension contingent fund. Several bills were reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, some of which were referred to other committees, while others were placed on the calendar or indefinitely postponed. Among the bills introduced was one for the interchange of subsidiary silver coins and United States notes, and one authorizing the taxation of the outstanding legal-tender notes. Mr. Beck offered a resolution, to which objection was made, providing for an investigation as to whether the laws regarding the payment of Customs dues and interest in coin have been complied with. Mr. Edmunds offered resolutions, which he will call up hereafter, declaring it to be the duty of Congress and of the Executive to enforce the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments. Mr. Voorhees called up his bill making trade dollars legal tender, and addressed the Senate in favor of its passage. In the course of his remarks he denounced Secretary Sherman's all-ver dollar policy, and declared that, in his opinion, the resumption of specie payments would be followed by disasters and hardships. The consideration of the bill amending the patent laws was then resumed, but without action thereon the Senate went into executive session, after which it adjourned.

In the House of Representatives, Mr. Atkins, of Louisiana, rose to a question of privilege, and asked the House to adopt a resolution providing for an investigation into the charges affecting his moral character. After some debate, the House decided that the question was not one of personal privilege. On motion of Mr. Harrison, the Judiciary Committee was instructed to investigate the charges against United States District Judge Blodgett, of Illinois. The consideration of the Geneva Award bill was then resumed, but no action was taken. At 3:15 P. M. the House adjourned, as a mark of respect for the late Congressmen Douglass and Williams.

SENATE.

A PENSION DEFICIENCY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior inclosing a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, asking an appropriation of $3,500 to supply a deficiency in the contingent fund for the Pension Bureau during the present fiscal year. Referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

THE SUPPLEMENTAL RAILROAD BILL.

Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, reported back from the Judiciary Committee the bill supplemental to the several acts relative to the Union Pacific Railroad and its branches, providing for the eligibility of certain persons to the office of Director, &c., and moved that the bill be referred to the Committee on Railroads, as it involved no question of law for the Judiciary Committee to consider. So ordered.

MR. M'LIN'S SALARY.

Mr. EDMUNDS also reported from the same committee favorably on the Senate bill authorizing the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to audit and pay to Samuel B. McLin, of Florida, who was appointed by the President an Assistant Appraiser of the Treasury, the difference in salary provided by law for said office, for the period during which the said McLin performed the duties of the office. Placed on the calendar.

THE ELECTION OF RAILROAD RECEIVERS.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY, of Michigan, from the same committee, reported adversely on the Senate bill to authorize bondholders and other creditors of railroad corporations to elect Receivers in suits in equity pending in the courts of the United States, and it was indefinitely postponed.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, praying for the abrogation of the treaty between the United States and the Empire of China so as to stop and prohibit the importation or immigration of Chinese and other Asiatic laborers to the Pacific coast. Referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The following bills were introduced and referred:

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

By Mr. HAMLIN, of Maine—For the more efficient collection of, the postal revenues. Referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. BOOTH, of California—For the interchange of subsidiary silver coin and United States notes. Referred to Committee on Finance.

By Mr. MCDONALD, of Indiana—To authorize the taxation of outstanding legal-tender notes of the United States. He moved that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as the main question to be considered was one of constitutional power. He referred to various decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and said, now that specie payments had been resumed, for all money purposes, these notes were equal to gold and silver coin, and Congress should not permit them to remain untaxed. He had introduced the measure with a more regular form he would ask the indulgence of the Senate to present his views at more length. The bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

THE COST OF THE SPRINGFIELD ARMORY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War in answer to a Senate resolution requesting a report from the Chief of Ordnance respecting the cost of manufactures at the National Armory at Springfield, Mass. Referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MR. BECK'S WAR ON SECRETARY SHERMAN.

Mr. BECK, of Kentucky, submitted the following:

Resolved, That the communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to the resolution of the Senate passed Dec. 3, 1878, relative to the amount of silver coin received in payment of Customs dues during the current fiscal year, and the disposition which has been made of it, be referred to the Committee on Finance, and said committee is authorized and directed to make such investigation as it may deem necessary to ascertain whether the laws relative to the payment of Customs dues, and the payment of interest on the public debt with the coin received, have been complied with, and are being complied with, and report by bill or otherwise.

Laid over upon an objection of Mr. EDMUNDS.

ALLEGED DISCREPANCIES IN TREASURY ACCOUNTS.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, submitted a resolution to print the testimony taken by the Select Committee to inquire as to the manner of keeping the books and accounts of the Treasury Department and alleged discrepancies therein. Agreed to.

THE ENFORCEMENT OF THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, said that on this glad morning of the new year, when there was peace and joy and hope everywhere, he thought it best to offer a resolution tending to cement more perfectly the good-will and harmony existing among the land. He, therefore, submitted the following:

Resolved, As the judgment of the Senate, that the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States have been legally ratified, and are as valid and of the same binding authority as any other part of the Constitution; that the people of each State have a common interest in the enforcement of the whole Constitution in every State in the Union, and that it is alike the right and duty of Congress to enforce said amendments and to protect every citizen in the exercise of all the rights conferred thereby by laws of the general character already passed for that purpose, and by further appropriate legislation so far as such enforcement and protection are not secured by existing laws; and that it is the duty of the executive department of the Government faithfully and with diligence to carry all such laws into impartial execution and of Congress to appropriate all moneys needful to that end.

Resolved, Further, that it is the duty of Congress to provide by law for the full and impartial protection of all citizens of the United States, legally qualified, in the right to vote for Representatives in Congress; and to this end the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it hereby is, instructed to prepare and report, as soon as may be, a bill for the punishment of such rights, and the punishment of infractions thereof.

Laid over at the request of Mr. EDMUNDS, to be called up by him hereafter.

MR. VOORHEES' BILL LEGALIZING TRADE DOLLARS.

Mr. VOORHEES, of Indiana, called up the resolution submitted by him on the first day of the session instructing the Committee on Finance to inquire into the expediency of making the trade dollar a legal tender for all debts, public and private, and of providing for its recoinage into the standard dollar of 412½ grains. Mr. Voorhees said the functions of the trade dollar as money were foreshadowing and the people had a right to protection against further abuses. It was simply an article of trade, manufactured at the Mints of the United States in violation of the constitutional power of Congress. The origin of the trade dollar was disreputable in other respects. It was a part of that conspiracy which demonetized the silver dollar in 1873. He spoke of the purposes for which the coin was claimed to have been used, and said it had failed in its mission abroad and had now returned home to cheat the honest people of this country. The number of trade dollars in existence was much larger than the public had any idea of. Forty-five millions had been coined and sent forth into the channels of trade and commerce. The people had suffered loss by reason of the deception practiced on them. The best remedy for the evil of this trade dollar wrong was to make it a legal tender, and recoin it into the standard silver dollar. He referred to the circulation, and said the laboring classes demanded a volume of currency which would measure the value of labor and property at fair and healthy rates. A scarcity of money in circulation cheapened every acquisition of human toil. He argued that the silver money was not receiving fair play at the hands of the present Administration, and those who drew their inspirations from it. He reviewed the course of Secretary Sherman in relation to the Standard Silver Dollar law, and said the execution of this popular law was in the hands of its most conspicuous and pronounced enemy. The Secretary admitted, in his answer to the recent resolution of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. Beck,] that he allowed the bondholder to say that kind of coin he would receive in payment of the interest on his bonds. In view of the high duty of the Secretary to use both gold and silver in proportion to the amount of each he had under his control. He referred to the action of the national banks of the City of New-York last November, and said they proclaimed a rebellion against the lawful currency authorities of the Government. Their document in regard to specie resumption was addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Boston banks indorsed it, but the New-York "Peacemakers" believed the rebellion had gone no further. He had seen a bill, the passage of which he was assured would be urged before the New-York Legislature, which virtually demonetized silver in that State, but the bill was unconstitutional and could not do it. In spite of all adverse circumstances, he predicted the final triumph of the silver dollar. The country had just entered upon the crude experiment of a forced resumption of specie payments, leaving behind five years of bankruptcy and ruin. An appalling penalty had been paid for the bare proclamation of specie resumption. In his judgment the results to follow specie resumption would be full of disasters and bankruptcy to the people of this country.

At the conclusion of Mr. Voorhees' remarks the resolution was laid over without action.

THE PATENT BILL.

The Senate then resumed consideration of the bill, which was partly considered before the holiday recess, amending the Revised Statutes in relation to patents, and for other purposes.

An amendment, which Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, submitted before the holidays, giving any Circuit Court power to recognize the decision of another Circuit Court in cases of infringement of patents, and grant injunctions, to continue pending an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, was agreed to.

Messrs. CHRISTIANCY, of Michigan, and MORGAN, of Alabama, spoke in favor of the bill, with certain amendments.

The Senate, at 3 o'clock, on motion of Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, went into executive session, and when the doors were reopened, at 3:15, adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House was called to order at 12 o'clock, and the Journal of Dec. 20, 1878, was read.

MR. AUKLEN ASKS FOR AN INVESTIGATION.

Mr. ACKLEN, of Louisiana, rose to a question of privilege, and said that he had hoped to have been spared the painful necessity of bringing before the House any matter which had been published almost every journal in the country. He had trusted that it would have been buried like other slanders against every public man. Particularly had he hoped so, when a committee of nine Representatives of both parties and one Senator, had passed on that question, and had declared that the charges were malicious and without foundation. But, unfortunately, late publications had been made purporting to have obtained the sentiment in that case, and he felt compelled, not only in justice to himself, but to the gentleman who composed that committee, to demand the fullest investigation into the charges against him. They had been made in secret, and had been prepared with the devilish ingenuity which characterized the man who originated them. He then proceeded to review the facts of the case in regard to the investigations made by the Louisiana committee which had made examination into the matter. The Democratic committee, which had advised him to withdraw from the canvass, had refused to pass on the social question. He had not resented this slander other means to vindicate himself, and, therefore, he felt compelled to offer a resolution (which he asked the House to adopt) for the appointment of a select committee of three members to investigate the truth or falsehood of the charge. He asked to send for persons and papers, employ a stenographer, Deputy Sergeants-at-Arms, &c.

Mr. REAGAN, of Texas, objected, on the ground that the subject involved was one over which the House had no jurisdiction. The gentleman had been allowed an opportunity to make a personal explanation, but the investigatigation of such a matter would be an awkward thing and would establish an awkward precedent.

Mr. ACKLEN appealed to Mr. Reagan to withdraw his objection, claiming that the charge involved a crime which affected his official character, because if the charge were true he should not be allowed to hold his seat.

Mr. REAGAN declined to withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER stated that he was reluctant to decide whether the question involved was one of personal privilege, but he would submit the question to the House.

Mr. ACKLEN—I want the House and the country to know that in this case the courts have been closed against me by the death of all the parties connected with this slander, and that I have no opportunity of vindicating myself, except through an investigation before the House.

The SPEAKER submitted the question to the House whether the resolution involved a question of personal privilege, and the House, by a very large majority, decided that it did not.

THE CHARGES AGAINST JUDGE BLODGETT.

Mr. HARRISON, of Illinois, then rose to a question of high privilege, and offered a resolution providing that Henry W. Blodgett, United States District Judge for the Northern District of Illinois, had been guilty of gross misconduct and corruption, and providing for a select committee of five to inquire into and examine such charges, to inquire into Judge Blodgett's official conduct, and to report what action the House should take in the premises, with power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. GARFIELD, of Ohio, suggested that the resolution should be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois, moved to amend the resolution by substituting the Judiciary Committee for a special committee, and that the charges be indicated by himself, Mr. TUCKER, of Virginia, and Mr. HANNA, of Indiana, and was opposed by Mr. HARRISON, but finally, after considerable discussion, the amendment was agreed to, and the resolution, as so amended, was adopted.

THE GENEVA AWARD BILL.

The House at 1:25 P. M. went into Committee of the Whole—Mr. Finley, of Ohio, in the chair—on the Geneva Award bill.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas, supported the majority report. He said that while under the majority bill the bulk of the money would go to corporations. These corporations had grown into colossal proportions, and were looked upon with suspicion and distrust; yet the claims of these corporations, he argued, were could not justly ignore in the settlement of the award. The United States had been the first country to inaugurate the system of Christian diplomacy, and for that reason, although Great Britain had obtained in the fisheries award more than she was really right, the United States could not afford to imitate her, and he was, therefore, in favor of returning to England any balance remaining after the payment of just claims.

Mr. CHITTENDEN, of New-York, favored the minority bill on the ground that, under the majority bill, no one claim would ever have any standing in the court, especially claims of foreign companies.

Further consideration of the bill was then postponed until to-morrow.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following bills were introduced:

By Mr. LUTTRELL, of California—Appropriating $700,000 for the improvement of Mare Island Navy-yard.

By Mr. CARLISLE, of Kentucky—To include newspapers, periodicals, and proof-sheets in mail matter of the third class.

By Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, to establish a Board of Assistants for the United States Navy.

By Mr. COX, of New-York, to provide for taking the Federal census.

THE CLASSIFICATION OF MAIL MATTER.

Mr. WADDELL, of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported a bill relating to the classification of mail matter, and the amount of postage thereon. It was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

A BILL ADMITTING DAKOTA AS A STATE.

Mr. KIDDER, of Dakota, introduced a bill for the admission of Dakota as a State. Referred.

Mr. MAISH, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, submitted the report of that committee on the subject of the metric system. Ordered that it be printed and recommitted.

THE LATE CONGRESSMEN DOUGLASS AND WILLIAMS.

The deaths of B. B. Douglass, of Virginia, and A. S. Williams, of Michigan, were then announced, and the House, in respect to their memory, at 3:15 P. M., adjourned.

FERTILIZERS—Trade has been rather quite moderate as to prices, however, essentially unchanged prices.

FISH—Most kinds have been in light request, though without important changes. The principal holders offering supplies with reserve....Dry Cod quoted within the range of $3@$4 25 ₱ 100 lbs.; Dry Cod, in drums, $4 50@$5 25; Pickled Cod, in quarters at $3@$3 50 (for quality) for No. 1; $6 50@$8 50 for No. 2, and $3 50@$3 50 for No. 3 ₱ bbl.; Pickled Herring, $2 25@$3; Smoked Herring, 14c.@15c. for scaled, and 12c.@14c. for No. 1 ₱ box; Dutch Herring, 65c. ₱ keg.

FLOUR AND MEAL—State and Western Flour has been held with firmness, and the offerings of desirable lots of choice to extra grades have been only of a very light character, thus tending to check operations, though a pretty fair inquiry has been noted, in part for shipment. The chief feature has been the active and street transportation worked against the local jobbing movement. Of the minnesota Extras, Patent at-tracted little attention....Sales have been reported since our last of 14,100 bbls. of all grades, including 500 bushels of Spring Wheat at $1 11¾; 4,800 bushels White State at $1 10¾@$1 10¾; 18,400 bushels No. 1 White at $1 10@$1 11; 10,000 bushels No. 2 Red at $1 11½; 10,000 No. 2 White at $1 07½@$1 08¾ (of which 8,000 bushels, to arrive, at $1 08¾); 12,000 bushels No. 3 White (last evening) at $1 05½@$1 05¾; 13,000 bushels Red Winter at $1 07@$1 10¾; and 2,400 bushels No. 1 Red at $1 10@$1 11, (a car-load went as low as $1 10;) 34,000 bushels No. 2 Red at $1 10@$1 10¾, closing weak at about $1 10¾....56,000 bushels do., January options, at $1 10@$1 10¾, closing at $1 10; 96,000 bushels do., February options, at $1 11@$1 11¾, closing at $1 11; 6,000 bushels No. 3 steamer grade, at $1 07½@$1 08; 9,600 bushels No. 3 Red at $1 03@$1 06; 25,000 bushels ungraded Red at $1 04@$1 12½, and 1,000 bushels Amber at $1 05¾@$1 06¾; 16,000 bushels do., January options, at $1 05½@$1 05¾; 48,000 bushels do., February options, at $1 07@$1 07¾, closing at $1 07; 2,000 bushels ungraded Amber at $1 04@$1 11¾, (of which 8,000 bushels choice Amber Michigan, to arrive, at $1 11¾;) 8,000 bushels Rejected Chicago Spring at $1 01@$1 02; 3,400 bushels ung

The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for to-day in this region, falling barometer, warmer south-east to south-west winds, increasing cloudiness, possibly followed by snow or rain.

Yesterday was a great day for Albany, albeit the guests who came to witness the glories of "Reception Day" were more numerous than distinguished. Everybody admired the new Capitol building, incomplete as it is, and enthusiastic connoisseurs said that it marked the beginning of a new era in American architecture. There are some misgivings felt about the acoustic properties of the magnificent Assembly chamber, but it is hoped that by a little practice members will be able to attain the pitch of voice necessary to make themselves audible. It would not be an unmixed misfortune if the vast concave of the new chamber acted as an extinguisher on speech-making, though it would be matter for regret if it gave the loud talkers a decided advantage over their brethren of weaker lung power. The character of legislation molded by bawling discussion would be likely to partake of some of the objectionable loudness of its origin.

Mr. Voorhees evidently thinks that the exigencies of the political situation require him to keep up a show of determined opposition to the policy of the Treasury. He returned to the charge yesterday with a long speech in support of a bill to make the trade dollars a legal-tender, and to coin them into the standard silver dollar. He showed considerable confusion of mind as to what the trade dollar is or was intended to be, and denounced it as a part of the "conspiracy" for the demonetization of silver, which is an entirely novel view of its origin. He declared that the people were cheated by it, but if they are, it is only because the Silver bill has created an entirely false notion as to what is and is not a dollar, and the remedy is an easy one, since no one need take the trade dollar who does not wish to. Mr. Voorhees sees a gloomy prospect before us as the consequence of "forced resumption," and said that it would be followed by disasters and hardships. If resumption is honestly maintained, the principal hardship that it will entail, we imagine, will be the exhaustion of the political capital of men like Mr. Voorhees.

Two important amendments to the existing postal laws were introduced in the Senate yesterday. The first is Senator Hamlin's bill to provide for the better collection of unpaid postage. It is proposed that a new issue of stamps be prepared for the use of Postmasters; and that when any piece of mail matter, on which the full postage has not been paid, shall be delivered to the person to whom it is addressed, the Postmaster shall affix a stamp or stamps representing the amount due and unpaid. The other is Senator Carlisle's bill to abolish the senseless discrimination now made against manuscripts in the mails, designed for publication in newspapers or periodicals. Under the law as it now stands, "book manuscripts" only are transmitted at third-class rates. Mr. Carlisle proposes that proof-sheets and correspondence intended for publication, when sent by authorized correspondents, shall pay third-class rates. There is likely to be some difficulty in procuring satisfactory credentials of "authorized correspondents" of newspapers and magazines, however. But there is much need of a revision of the law relating to this class of mail matter. And, while Congress is about it, it can bestow a boon upon suffering authors by allowing that rejected manuscripts from the office of publication shall also be charged only third-class postage.

Mr. Fernando Wood does not shine as a revenue reformer. His latest proposal for simplifying the tariff is to abolish the duty on sugar. Having, in the interests of protection, thrown away the tea and coffee duties, Mr. Wood thinks that all we need to provide a "free breakfast table" is untaxed sugar. It does not seem to have occurred to Mr. Wood that the country is which the praise of a "free breakfast table" originated took the duties off the materials composing the table and the cover thereof, as well as off the knives, forks, spoons, and dishes, before turning its attention to the imported luxuries which have become the indispensable concomitants of breakfast. Great Britain does not even yet enjoy a free breakfast table, in Mr. Wood's sense, because its legislators have had wisdom enough to retain taxes which have the recommendation of being easily collected, very productive, and less burdensome than any other impost which fiscal ingenuity has devised. The cause of tariff reform would be in a much better way if Fernando Wood could be induced to leave it alone.

It seems to have surprised some good people to find John Kelly endeavoring to pack the Tammany Society in his own interest by the methods of a sneaking trickster. It is several years ago since The Times reminded the people of New-York that Kelly was "the legitimate successor of Tweed." Mr. Kelly brought an action for libel, in which that phrase formed the chief subject of complaint, but forgot to go to trial on the issue. Tweed's trick of March, 1870, in closing the doors of Tammany Hall in the face of a General Committee which he said intended to "foment disturbance in the party," was far less despicable than Kelly's device of hiding away the advertisement of the meeting of the Tammany Society in order that he might manufacture votes enough to prevent his defeat in the choice of Sachems. There may be changes in the men who control the secret society which controls the Tammany organization, but, from the necessities of their position, there can be no change in their methods. That fact may be, profitably, borne in mind before extending any sympathy to an effort merely to compel Kelly and his allies to make way for a different set of rulers. The interests of free institutions demand the complete extirpation of the Tammany Society as a political power. If the men who have undertaken to beat Kelly on his own ground will be guided by that consideration they will receive public support and approval. If the issue of the contest is to be simply a change in those controlling the Tammany machine, there will come with the transfer of power only a change in the objects of public odium.

SUBSIDIZED STEAM-SHIPS OR FREER TRADE?

Mr. John Roach will have difficulty in reconciling the ideas embodied in his interesting talk, as reported in Sunday's Times, with his professions as a protectionist and his claims as an applicant for the Brazil subsidy. He has shown what the ship-building trade of this country was in years gone by. Americans were enabled to build all the ships required for American commerce and to sell ships freely to other nations. "We made such a stride between 1814 and 1825," he says, "that there was hardly a port of the world where the American flag was not found." Again, "from 1825 to 1833 we sold to foreign nations over $25,000,000 worth of ships, and brought the gold to our own country." In 1840 "our clipper ships were monopolizing trade, and the mail service with Europe was principally done in American bottoms." Before 1857 we became "the second greatest carrying nation of the world, and stood abreast even with Great Britain." Mr. Roach explains the reason of this marvelous growth. His words are, "as long as we could build ships more cheaply [than England] we were rapidly gaining on her in the carrying trade; for the nation that can build and man ships most cheaply is certain to become the great carrying nation of the world." The reason assigned is undoubtedly correct. The United States were favorably situated for the building of wooden ships. What England was obliged to carry across the Atlantic, we had at our doors. The skill of our mechanics and the enterprise of our traders enabled the country to turn its resources to the best account. The building of ships was a great and profitable industry. Cheapness combined with excellence gave us the advantage in the markets of the world. Subsidies in no way contributed to this result. We made a good article, undersold foreign builders, and had customers all over the world. Even England bought American ships because her own builders could not produce them, equal in quality, at the same price. Whether he meant it or not, Mr. Roach has supplied a strong argument in favor of a freer trade in ships.

The building of iron ships was the beginning of a revolution in the carrying trade, inuring beneficially to England. And the civil war gave her a still better opportunity of regaining lost ground. A large portion of our merchant marine was sold to the Federal Government, and when Confederate privateers appeared, another portion was transferred to English owners as a precaution against seizure. "Thus," as Mr. Roach remarks, "both merchants and shipowners withdrew from the carrying trade, and their partners and representatives came home from foreign ports." He estimates that between sixty and seventy millions were so withdrawn from the shipping interest. Meanwhile iron steam-ships were acquiring the carrying trade, which passed almost wholly into foreign hands. When the war ended we had neither iron ships nor carrying trade. Remembering Mr. Roach's axiom as to cheap ships as a factor in trade, the obvious remedy would seem to have been to buy ships where they can be cheaply built, at any rate pending the development of iron ship-building as an American industry. For Mr. Roach, who should be an authority, asserts that we have the same natural advantages in regard to iron ship-building which produced signal results in regard to the building of wooden ships. We quote his statement. "From Philadelphia to the breakwater on the Delaware is 100 miles, with the mountains behind teeming with coal and forests of wood, with superior advantages to any country in the world for the construction of iron ships." The odds being in our favor, why are we afraid of competition? If our own people had been allowed, at the close of the war, to replace by purchase ships which the exigencies of war compelled them to sell, much of the American carrying trade would gradually have returned to American hands. And considering what energy and enterprise formerly accomplished in building up a trade, it does not seem unreasonable to suppose that by this time the class of men not unworthily represented by Mr. Roach would have regained the position once held by the builders of wooden ships. Had this happened, we should now be able to sell ships instead of needing to buy them, and a full share of the world's carrying trade would be within reach.

But Mr. Roach shows that besides forbidding the purchase of foreign ships, our legislation prevents the development of the ship-building industry. Heavy taxation has made cheap building impossible. The wants of the Government, during the war, gave rise to fiscal exactions in all imaginable forms, and a protectionist tariff perpetuates many burdens. Raw materials are taxed, and many things required for the equipment of a first-class steam-ship are also subject to heavy duties. When Mr. Roach gets to this point in the case, he is lost in a fog. He sees clearly as long as he retains the character of a practical, pushing builder of ships; but when, to avert any modification of the navigation laws, or any damage to his cause as a petitioner for a subsidy, he upholds the protection which deprives Americans of cheaper ships, his statement limps, and his logic becomes unintelligible. To others, if not to Mr. Roach, the method of escaping one set of the difficulties he describes is quite clear. Relatively cheap ships being the first essential of success in the carrying trade, why uphold a fiscal system which makes ships dear? If the tariff is an obstacle to the increase of our foreign trade, and also to the carrying trade, why should ship-builders be more anxious to maintain it than merchants? So far as the carrying trade is concerned, there is, on Mr. Roach's showing, another obstacle occasioned by our blundering laws. We discourage the investment of capital in maritime enterprises by applying to stockholders the principle of unlimited liability. Does it not occur to Mr. Roach that he could usefully expend upon the amendment of the law with reference to these hindrances a little of the energy that is employed in the effort to obtain the Brazil subsidy?

The argument in behalf of this subsidy printed in our news columns to-day can hardly be considered plausible. What is intended to be a plea for an extravagant payment under the cover of postal service is unintentional testimony in favor of fiscal reforms that would enable this country to acquire a large share of the Brazilian trade. The fallacious assumption is, that the mere running of steam-ships between New-York and Rio Janeiro will develop a commerce profitable to both. Our wise lawgivers, however, have decreed that the United States shall as far as possible exclude from their ports the products of other nations. It is admitted that we have need of them as customers, but we can sell only—we must not buy. We cannot even sell as advantageously as we ought to, because the fiscal system operates against our own industries. The mere sending of steam-ships, then, will not be enough. Barriers constructed as means of protection must first be removed. The South American trade, including that of Brazil, will then grow quickly and legitimately. Freer trade will supply steam-ships with traffic, and American tax-payers will keep the $3,000,000 which Mr. Roach asks Congress to put into his pocket.

MISTAKEN ZEAL.

Mr. Senator Edmunds' reputation for humor is well known, and his pleasantries so often take the form of very subtle irony that we may be pardoned for some doubt as to whether the resolution which he laid before the Senate yesterday was offered in sober earnest, or as a post-holiday jest of dubious point. He submitted it, "in this glad morning of the new year," as "tending to cement more perfectly the good-will and harmony now existing all over the country." But we do not see exactly how it is to subserve that purpose, or any other useful one.

The resolution may be divided into two portions; one consisting of a series of declarations, the other directing the Judiciary Committee to prepare a bill. The declarations are as follows: That in the judgment of the Senate the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States have been legally ratified, and are as valid as other parts of the Constitution; that it is the right and duty of Congress to enforce them by appropriate legislation; that it is the duty of the Executive to execute such laws; that Congress ought to appropriate the money necessary for that purpose; and, finally, Mr. Edmunds' committee is instructed to report a bill for the protection of the rights of citizens and the punishment of infractions thereof.

So far as this resolution is based on Mr. Edmunds' opinion that there is insufficient legislation for the enforcement of what are known as the reconstruction amendments to the Constitution, no fault can be found with it. It is our own impression that there is law enough if it were properly executed. We are inclined to believe that it was quite within the power either of President Grant during the last term of his Administration, or of President Hayes during the first year of his, to have so organized the Federal service in the South that the enforcement of the amendments would have been entirely possible. It certainly would not have been easy. There is no royal road to the successful administration of justice in a badly-demoralized section of the country, where public opinion is violent, if not deep-seated, in opposition to the law, and where the agencies for its enforcement are regarded with jealousy and aversion. But care and skill in the selection of officers, firmness and patience in holding them to their work, absolute impartiality and purity on the part of the Administration, and a hearty appreciation of the value of the rights embodied in the amendments, with a devoted purpose to shrink from nothing which law and justice required to maintain them, would, in the long run, have attained success beyond any reasonable doubt. The Administration of President Grant failed because it was in part badly managed, and in part because it was indifferent; that of Mr. Hayes has failed because it has been weak and sentimental, and has allowed the laws to fall so much into the hands of their enemies. At present, if a strong determination is felt to enforce them, which we doubt, it is interfered with by the lack of money to which Mr. Edmunds' resolution refers. We do not see how the obstacles which exist can be removed by any legislation which it is within the power of the Senate to originate. Mr. Edmunds, thinking differently, is, of course, entirely justified in asking the Senate for authority to report such a measure as he believes will answer his purpose.

But his solemn proposition to reaffirm the validity of the constitutional amendments made after the war appears to us in the last degree uncalled for, misjudged, and, we may add, mischievous. From a man of Mr. Edmunds' well-established reputation for attachment to the Constitution and for clear and cool-headed views of its force and authority, the proposition is inexplicable. As a matter of fact, it may be that the validity of the amendments is disputed by a considerable portion of the Southern people, though we believe that the number is steadily decreasing, while of those who may hold in theory that their adoption was unconstitutional, there are very many who never would think for a moment of making it a practical issue either in law or politics. On the other hand, the validity of the amendments is undisputed by a very large majority of the people of the Union; it is not called in question before the courts, and cases have repeatedly been adjudicated in which objection on this point would have been controlling, but in which it has not been even raised. Why, then, should the question be raised at this moment in the Senate, when an affirmative vote would be of no earthly value, when an adverse vote would be a national misfortune, and when even the recognition of the existence of dispute is mischievous? Mr. Edmunds' resolution, if ever it is called from the table, where we trust it will be allowed to sleep forever, must give rise to a more or less excited debate, in which partisan zeal will compel one side to maintain the invalidity of the amendments, while the ablest and most incontrovertible arguments in favor of their validity (and Mr. Edmunds can easily furnish them by the hour) will also be regarded by a large part of the country as also inspired by party spirit. The precedent, moreover, is pernicious. If a Republican Senate can properly declare that the Constitution is valid, a Democratic Senate cannot be prevented from declaring that it is invalid. The fundamental law of the land, which should, unless formidably challenged, be assumed as of course and incontestably supreme, is dragged down to the level of a doubtful political question. Mr. Edmunds' action seems to be the needless and dangerous introduction of the principle of the South American pronunciamento into the stable and orderly system of constitutional government, of which he has long been one of the most valued and honored defenders.

A BLOW AT POLYGAMY.

George Reynolds, a member of the Church of the Latter Day Saints, Utah, was indicted in the Third Judicial District Court of that Territory for bigamy. He did not deny that he had more than one wife. But he set up in defense, when brought to trial, that the statute of the United States prohibiting bigamous marriages was unconstitutional and void. He also pleaded that, according to the practice of the Latter Day Saints, polygamous marriages were expressly sanctioned as of divine origin, and that a plurality of wives was divinely ordained. It was alleged that the Constitution of the United States expressly prohibited any interference with polygamy, as a religious rite, in the clause which declares that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." The right to engage in polygamous marriages being embraced in the articles of the Mormon faith, George Reynolds, in his defense, claimed that the United States statute of 1862 was in direct contravention of the above-quoted clause of the Constitution. Nevertheless, the District Court found him guilty of bigamy. He appealed to the Supreme Court of Utah Territory, which tribunal affirmed the judgment of the court below. The case was then taken to the United States Supreme Court on a writ of error, the plaintiff Reynolds pleading, as before, the unconstitutionality of the law of 1862, prohibiting bigamous marriages, the justification of religious belief, and various unimportant legal technicalities. The court decided that the act of Congress prohibiting bigamous marriages was constitutional. Therefore the judgment of the two lower courts was affirmed, and George Reynolds must pay the full penalty of the law.

This is the first decided victory for those who have endeavored to enforce the United States statute leveled against polygamy. By various obvious means, the Mormon residents of Utah were long able to prevent any local court from convicting any person of bigamy. It was not until the machinery of these courts had been changed, and the population of the Territory had become largely anti-Mormon, that a conviction was possible. The statute of 1862 was enacted for the purpose of furnishing a weapon with which to beat down polygamy in Utah. It provided that "every person having a husband or wife living, who marries another, whether married or single, in a Territory, or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, is guilty of bigamy, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, and shall be imprisoned for a term of not more than five years." The statute, it will be observed, takes no cognizance of polygamy, or plural marriages. It is confined exclusively to bigamy. The having of two wives is an offense, which, under the law, cannot be aggravated by the having of six or sixteen wives. It is not strictly correct to call bigamy the offense of having a plurality of wives. For, according to the highest authorities, in the canon law bigamy was the marrying of two virgins successively, or one after the death of the other. Nevertheless, in common law, a bigamous person is one who has two or more husbands or wives living, and the name of the offense is not changed when it is proved that the offender has more than two living wives. The statute of 1862, while it was obviously directed at the polygamous practices of the Mormons, merely extended over the Territories the common law in relation to bigamy which exists in every State of the Union.

The Mormons have shown much ingenuity in their management of this peculiar feature of their religious faith and practice. Bigamy, as it is commonly understood among men, they do not hesitate to stigmatize as a crime, if it be practiced by non-Mormons. But when this becomes the act of a person stimulated by a religious belief, it ceases to be bigamy; it is polygamy, or "a plurality of wives," for not even the Mormons have advocated polyandry, or a plurality of husbands. Bigamy, according to their notion, is a crime against good morals, but a plurality of wives is a religious rite, or duty, sanctioned by the usage of the patriarchs, and expressly authorized by a divine revelation to the founders of the Church of the Latter Day Saints. They pretend to advocate a large liberty in the matter of plural marriages, leaving individual Mormons to choose for themselves whether they shall have one, two, or more wives. The divine law relating to polygamy is permissive, not mandatory. But it is notorious that a non-polygamous Mormon is regarded with distrust and suspicion. If the right to engage in plural marriages was of sufficient moment to justify a special revelation from heaven, they argue, it is in the nature of a divine ordinance which cannot be lightly neglected. Being a divinely-revealed ordinance, its observance has become incorporated into the religious faith and practice of the Mormon Church. It is lawful, they urge, to marry several wives, because the law of God, which is higher than human statutes, has authorized it. To enact a statute forbidding plural marriages is to infringe the clause of the Constitution forbidding legislation which "prohibits the free exercise of religion." Similarly, a sect which should pretend, or believe, that incest, infanticide, or murder was a divinely appointed ordinance, to be observed under certain conditions, could set up that the enforcement of the common law, as against either of these practices, was an invasion of the rights of conscience.

The courts, however, have made short work of George Reynolds and his celebrated test case. The decision of the United States Supreme Court, though it has been anticipated, will carry dismay into many Mormon families. To be sure, the conviction of bigamous Mormons is yet encompassed with many difficulties. The necessity of obtaining non-Mormon jurors, and the difficulty of securing evidence of guilt from the homes of those who are most interested in perpetuating this last of "the twin relics of barbarism," will continue to operate against future convictions. But a great gain has been secured in the organized effort to crush out polygamy in Utah. There is now an unbroken line of the highest precedents in favor of the constitutionality of the law of 1862. The highest tribunal in the Republic has decided that bigamy committed in any Territory of the United States is an indictable offense, and punishable by fine and imprisonment. Ways and means for procuring convictions may be found; and, whether Mormonism will be seriously affected by the destruction of polygamy or not, this degrading practice cannot be very long-lived.

EDUCATION IN ART.

We have taken occasion of late to urge the importance of fostering a distinctly American character in art production for the purpose of acquiring a field of our own, in which we may achieve something worthy of our national genius. If we cannot hope to surpass other nations in the excellence of our work, we may, in striving to equal them, present such characteristic differences in the subjects treated and in the spirit of our artistic conceptions and the method of execution, as to stand in a certain sense by ourselves. As Italian art, French art, German art, Belgian art, and English art present certain national peculiarities that give them clearly distinguished characteristics as rival schools, so may American art have a character of its own, if artists and patrons devote themselves to developing and encouraging a proper individuality. But our greatest need has thus far been the means of education, alike for native artists and for the public on which they depend for appreciation and support. We have had men of the highest talent anxious to devote themselves to artistic production, and capable of successfully emulating those of other countries who are employed in the same field of effort, but they have been obliged to go abroad for their training even in the elementary stages of their progress. They have, in many cases, gone so early and staid so long that they have become thoroughly imbued with the spirit of their European schools, and lost all trace of an American bent, which their talent and their ambition might otherwise have had. Some of them have found so strong an attraction in the facilities offered for study, in the congenial atmosphere which the congregation of art students and workers in certain centres produces, and in the better appreciation of their work which they have found abroad, that they have never come back to devote their talents and the results of their education to promoting the development of taste and of art production at home.

This accounts at once for the backwardness of American art as such, the slow growth of æsthetic culture among us, and the European character of much that is done by artists of American birth. But it was not to be expected that the means of education here would outstrip in any marked degree the progress of production. The two must of necessity develop together, and each is largely dependent upon the other. While European schools, whether founded and supported by public or by private munificence, have greatly promoted the excellence and variety of European production, their own development has been stimulated by demands arising from such production. And back of both has been a liberal spirit in the cultivated few, who have had the taste, the means, and the foresight to promote and encourage the progress of art, by bestowing their efforts and their substance to maintain the schools and the artists. In most cases the Governments, both national and municipal, have given substantial aid. With us, art-schools have been almost unknown. We have had very few liberal and intelligent art patrons, and those who have of late years devoted some part of their large fortunes to making collections of pictures have chosen to neglect the work of native artists, and to disregard the demands of a patriotic public spirit, and have spent their money chiefly for foreign works, selected for them by dealers or interested agents. If anything is to be accomplished toward building up a native school of art, which shall win for the country a place among the nations of the world in artistic achievement, it will be necessary for our own people not only to recognize and encourage merit when it is displayed by artists at home, but to do something toward providing the means for home education in this direction.

So far as we have an art centre, it is to be found in this City; but we have not here an art-school worthy of the name. The Cooper Institute School for Women is doing a noble and a valuable work in its way, but it is not making great artists. The Academy of Design furnishes, within narrow limits, the means for artistic study and practice, and the scanty treasures of the Metropolitan Museum are open to students. But the only institution that affords to young artists the facilities for anything like systematic training in the various branches of study pertaining to their chosen calling is that which the Art Students' League has established by the voluntary efforts and contributions of its members. It does great credit to the young men whose energy and enthusiasm have founded and maintained it thus far. It has permanent rented rooms, systematic courses of instruction, with competent teachers, and enjoys, to a limited extent, the facilities and appliances of a school of art; but it is sorely crippled for lack of funds, and is accomplishing little compared to what might be done if it were liberally endowed and furnished with all the means for study and practice that could easily be got together here. It presents an available nucleus for a school which some public-spirited person or association of persons might easily place upon a broader and firmer basis. If such an institution were properly founded and intelligently managed, it would speedily produce a marked effect upon the character of American art and the development of taste among the people. A course of training of about the length of that given in our colleges for the preparation of young men for the "liberal professions," in which we need not be ashamed of comparison with any country in the world, would give our artists of talent that instruction in the principles of their calling and that drill in their application which are the necessary foundation for successful work, and enable them to go forward to such achievement as they are capable of. By a system of scholarships, to be awarded to the most successful and promising students, a supplementary course in the best schools in Europe might also be secured, with all the benefits to be derived from that source and without the danger of losing the American character with which the artist begins his career. A school of this kind, which might well be associated with the Metropolitan Museum of Art, would be of vast assistance to the development of art production and appreciation in this country, and a monument to the memory of any man who might choose to identify himself generously with it, in which his posterity and his countrymen would have a grateful pride.

Alaska has been once more investigated. The Treasury Department sends out a special agent who makes his report while the special agent appointed by Congress is going out to the Territory. It is a bad season which does not see four or five reports on Alaska. Major Morris, the latest explorer and reporter, was sent forth by the Treasury Department. He says that Alaska is rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and silver. No mention is made of pineapples, bananas, and strawberries all the year round, but yellow cedar grows in great profusion, and the fisheries are "simply enormous." The drink of the country is "hoochenoo," a spirit obtained by distilling a fermented compound of flour, sugar, molasses, and potatoes, all run through a still made of coal-oil cans. This cheerful beverage is described by Major Morris as "soul-destroying." Probably the Major meant "sole-destroying," as the action of such a liquid upon leather must be destructive. The great want of the Territory is an armed cruiser to keep the natives in check while the industrious white man collects the gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, yellow cedar, and fish, with which the country abounds. The settlers would also like a little Government of some sort, and Major Morris says that if he could be the means of obtaining this sweet boon for them he would die comparatively happy.

The average grain product of Europe is reported as 5,000,000,000 bushels, of which Russia raises one-third, France and Germany 520,000,000 bushels each, and Austria 500,000,000. The United States produces 1,600,000,000 bushels, (about the quantity that Russia does,) which, in proportion to our population, is a much larger production than any other country can boast of. Counting our inhabitants at 40,000,000, we raise 40 bushels per head, and Europe's inhabitants at 300,000,000, she raises but 16 bushels per head. Russia has 26 and Great Britain only 4 bushels per head. The amount of grain consumed being generally 15 bushels per head, we produce nearly three times as much as we want, Russia almost twice what she needs, and Great Britain not more than one-fourth of her requirement. Thus, it will be seen, that the production far exceeds the consumption, but the excess is absorbed by breweries and distilleries, at home and abroad, which, more than any other cause, keep up the price of breadstuffs. So men have to pay dearer for what they drink than for what they eat, because, perhaps, eating is a necessity, and drinking, for the most part, is much worse than a superfluity.

So far as the general public is concerned, it always is and always will be in a state of hopeless confusion concerning the medals awarded to the different firms that have exhibited at the World's Fairs. Each firm seems, according to circulars and advertisements, to have taken the highest prize for its specialty, whatever it be, so that the community at large is unable to see how or wherein one firm has any advantage over another. Philadelphia, Vienna, and Paris Expositions are mysteries to the many who cannot perceive the benefit of competition if everything exhibited is worthy of the same honor. Although this may appear so, quite the contrary is the fact. Different medals are given, as at the Paris Exposition, for articles of different degrees of merit. There are the grand gold medal, the gold, the silver, and the bronze medals, and honorable mention, which is the regular descending scale. Exhibitors who have gained any prize are ingenious enough to advertise in a way to make people believe that they have carried off the highest honors. It is growing to be a question among merchants and manufacturers whether World's Fairs do any good commensurate with the trouble and cost of exhibiting there; and it is not at all unlikely that these fairs will henceforth diminish in importance and interest. They certainly seem to have had their best days.

In a recent report of the United States Consul at Würtemburg a list is given of the number of young Americans who are now living in Continental Europe for the purposes of study, and the localities they have selected, or that have been selected for them, are also given. It is understood that the facts embodied in this statement were obtained after a very long correspondence with other Consuls of this country stationed in various European cities. The conclusion that Mr. Potter, the Würtemburg Consul, endeavors to enforce is that more than $4,500,000 is annually spent abroad by Americans for educational purposes which might be laid out with far better advantage to the spenders in this country. As this is a question which admits of considerable argument on both sides, we shall not endeavor to sustain or refute it at this time; but, apart from any nationalistic theory, the facts presented are decidedly curious in their way, and if not given upon such good authority, would hardly be accepted as correct. It has been commonly supposed that the German universities drew each year quite a large number of American students, but Mr. Potter's list shows that this is not the case, for the numbers credited to Heidelberg and Göttingen are small when compared with those representing our young countrymen who are studying at Dresden, Hanover, Leipsic, and Stüttgart. But one is still more perplexed to learn that there are as many American students at St. Petersburg, Russia, as at Heidelberg, Göttingen, and Bonn combined. Every one knows that young men go to Freiburg to obtain instruction in mining and engineering, and that there are 15 Americans there is not in the least surprising; but, on the other hand, why should 15 young men leave this country to seek the educational advantages offered at Lisbon, Portugal? or why should a like number go to Palermo, in Sicily, for the same purpose? The desire to gain a practical insight into the culture of grapes may have induced 20 transatlantic youths to pursue their studies at Bordeaux; but what possible object can have called 100 of them to Marseilles? Again, without any obvious reason, except, possibly, the low price of board and lodgings, 250 Americans are getting their education at Stockholm, Sweden, while all the attractions which art can offer at Brussels have not sufficed to draw to it a much larger number. In fact, if Paris, Vienna, Geneva, and Rome are set aside, American students are principally found where they would least be expected, and do not seem to go where one would naturally look for them.

AMUSEMENTS.

ITALIAN OPERA AT BOOTH'S THEATRE.

The début of Miss Maria Litta as Lucia in Donizetti's opera of that name was the event of musical interest last night and drew a full house at Booth's Theatre. The young lady has been so favorably mentioned in the Western cities and has come to New-York with so much prestige that public curiosity was excited to hear her in a rôle which demands the highest powers of the trained operatic singer. "Lucia" has been performed by so many of the best artists in New-York within the memory of some of the present generation of opera-goers, from the days of Sontag, Salvi, and Badiali at Castle Garden to the recent rendering by Mme. Gerster, Signor Campanini, and Signor Galassi, that nothing short of perfection can be successful. It would be simple flattery to say that the performance last night was up to the highest standard in any respect, but it was enjoyable as a whole, and at times was worthy of praise. The audience were apparently well satisfied, and lavished their applause on the principal singers. Miss Maria Litta has a genuine and flexible soprano voice, somewhat cold, however, and ineffective in dramatic quality. She can hardly claim an assured position among the great sopranos, for though she is a promising artist, she has yet to acquire much knowledge of her profession. Her phrasing is crude and amateurish, as the trying scena of the third act particularly showed, but she was always correct, and at times sang with taste. She was repeatedly recalled before the curtain. Signor Lazarini made his début as Edgardo. He is a light tenor who has the merit of singing in perfect tune, and though somewhat unequal in his performance, gave a meritorious rendering of his part, the first portion of the fourth act being the best of it. Signor Pantaleoni repeated his success of the night before, and was a spirited Ashton, singing and acting with vigor throughout the work. The minor parts were acceptable, but the orchestra was not up to the mark, and might have been improved by further rehearsal. The second performance will doubtless be an improvement in this latter respect.

THE PHILHARMONIC CLUB CONCERT.

The first concert of chamber music by this organization last night deserved a fuller house than was present. The audience was, however, a thoroughly musical one, and as appreciative of the excellence of the entertainment as could have been desired. Hummel's septet, op. 74, for piano, viola, 'cello, basso, flute, oboe, bassoon, and horn, was the gem of the performance. Mrs. Morgan, who is a pupil of Mr. William Mason, was at the piano and excited the admiration of her hearers by her beautiful playing. Her technique was admirable, and her conception of the work showed the real musical spirit. The other concerted music was given with artistic finish, and was a delight to all the lovers of chamber music who were so fortunate as to be present. Miss Drasdil added two songs to the programme, viz., Handel's aria, "Bow down thine ear," and an aria of the sixteenth century by Stradella, "O dal mio dolce ardor." Her performance of both was in her best style, but the version of the Handel aria was not that of the composer. Handel with "all the modern improvements" is not desirable at any time, and Miss Drasdil would have done better to give the original text, though she was probably not responsible for the fact that she sang it in a mutilated form. She was deservedly encored for a very beautiful rendering of it, and responded with an aria of Gounod. The second concert by this club will be given on the 4th of February next, with Mrs. Dow and Mr. S. B. Mills as the assisting artists.

GENERAL MENTION.

Tom Thumb may be seen twice every day at Masonic Hall. He will remain here during the present week.

The next concert of the English Glee Club will take place to-morrow evening. Miss Beebe and Miss Finch will, as heretofore, give their services.

It is stated that Mr. Maurice Grau has secured Mlle. Paola-Marié, now the most popular opera-bouffe singer in Paris, for a season in this City, to begin shortly.

The final performance of the amusing burlesque, "Babes in the Wood," will be given to-night, at the Park Theatre. To-morrow evening "Robinson Crusoe" will be substituted.

Mr. Herman Linde, whose reputation as a tragedian is wide-spread in his native country, will appear this evening at Steinway Hall as an English reader. "Macbeth" will be the subject of his recital.

This is the fifth week of "Cinderella" at the Aquarium, and that lucky heroine seems to have made up her mind to stay indefinitely in her present quarters. Mr. Charles Seaty, an amusing jester, appears at each performance.

Mr. Frank Mayo, who was unavoidably prevented from opening at Niblo's on Monday evening, came forward last night in his popular part of Davy Crockett in Frank Murdock's interesting and picturesque play. He was supported by his own company.

Now that "Almost a Life" has been withdrawn, the humorous gentlemen of the San Francisco Minstrels commence the production of "Almost a Death." The programme now in force among these joyous minstrels is thoroughly entertaining.

Messrs. Harrigan and Hart begin the new year with the announcement that the "vaudeville season" has reopened at their theatre—the Comique. The programme this week is full of novelty, and several performers have been added to the regular company.

The third public rehearsal of the Philharmonic Society of New-York is fixed for Friday afternoon, in the Academy of Music, and the third concert will take place on Saturday evening. A liberal programme will be interpreted in both instances. Mrs. Anna Granger Dow and Mr. Franz Rummel are the soloists.

SEVENTY THOUSAND DOLLARS EMBEZZLED.

San Francisco, Jan. 7.—S. W. Hall was arrested in Olympia, Wyoming Territory, yesterday, on a requisition from the Governor of Illinois, charging him with the embezzlement of $70,000 from the County of Macoupin, in that State, in 1872. His real name is said to be George H. Hall; day. He has been a resident of Olympia since 1873.

TRIAL FOR EMBEZZLEMENT POSTPONED.

Boston, Jan. 7.—The case of Royal B. Conant, late Cashier of the Eliot National Bank, who is charged with embezzling the funds of that institution, came up in the United States District Court to-day, but, owing to the great press of business, Judge Lowell postponed it until after the date of March.

BISHOP'S SHAMEFUL STORY.

CONFIRMATION OF MANY OF ITS DETAILS.

CONCLUSION OF THE TESTIMONY OF THE ALLEGED ACCOMPLICE OF MRS. COBB—WHY MANY OF THE WOMAN'S FRIENDS DROPPED HER ACQUAINTANCE—BISHOP'S LONG AND FREQUENT VISITS—A MULTITUDE OF WITNESSES.

NORWICH, Conn., Jan. 7.—Long before the hour for the reassembling of the Superior Court this morning the seats allotted to the public were filled. Some delay in the proceedings occurred after the opening of the court, State's Attorney Waller having missed a train. When he at length arrived, the court, weary of waiting, had just ordered the cross-examination of Bishop to proceed. The witness was not brought in until after Mrs. Cobb to-day, and he was obliged to pass close to her, but a Deputy Sheriff stood between them to preclude any communication or expression of resentment such as was anticipated.

Bishop was first forced to admit that in certain statements he made to Arthur H. Brewer immediately after Cobb's death he had lied. He was asked concerning the confession he had made in jail, but his counsel here objected to his answering, and the witness refused to answer accordingly. The court sustained the objection. Col. Wait then asked him concerning a number of little incidents of their relations, and particularly as to the nights in January, 1878, when Cobb was in Troy and Bishop was at Mrs. Cobb's house, evidently with an idea of confusing him as to dates and hours, but without success. Further queries were directed to showing that Bishop and wife and Cobb and wife met frequently at one another's houses and at Mrs. Waterman's. He remembered the incident of a man taking aconite for liquor, by accident, and killing himself; he could not exactly fix the date of his mother's absence in New-Haven, the last of February or the 1st of March; two meetings by night on School-street were closely scrutinized as to the hour, length, and route by which they were effected; he gave most of his wife's apparel and personal effects to her relatives, but they never asked about the ring he gave to Mrs. Cobb; there had been a social club to smoke and play cards, but never to drink, at the store where Bishop was employed, but Cobb came only twice; they went together in Cobb's buggy one time to a chowder in Church's Grove.

Again the witness refused to answer whether his confession in jail was made under oath. He had occasionally talked with Cobb at Mr. Waterman's about the former's illness; he was discharged from Hurlburt's employ, not for overdriving a horse the Sunday before Cobb's death, going out to Colchester, but because of the rumors that he had a hand in Cobb's death, but Mr. Waller objected to having any queries on this subject pressed, and the court ruled them out as irrelevant. The books given him to return to the Otis Library were hauled him in the back kitchen in the presence of other people; there was no request to destroy the poisons then returned, and nothing to prevent Mrs. Cobb destroying them herself; he had no use for them; he promised to write her the note expressing his sentiments at the time he was with her alone, and gave her the mirror; no one was near when he received her written answer, and nothing to prevent their speaking their feelings; the object of his note was to express his friendship; he preferred to write rather than speak; she answered that she had had feelings which she couldn't explain, but now she knew what they were; Mrs. Waterman removed her residence to the upper floor of Cobb's house about the 1st of May, six weeks before Cobb died; if Mrs. Waterman had any orders for him he would go up stairs; the family supplies he delivered in the pantry, kitchen, or cellar himself.

On redirect examination, Bishop testified that Mrs. Cobb had said in October, 1877, that she had never loved her husband, and was in no hurry to marry him when she did, although she had always respected him; no further particular remark of this sort was made until after Mrs. Bishop died, when she frequently said she dreaded to see him come into the house, and was glad when he went out; Bishop went to Cobb's with his own wife once or twice to play croquet, but remembered that he had some little talk about arranging a room for parlor croquet in Winter; both families had seats in the Central Methodist Church, and several times went together to other churches, more frequently without Mr. Cobb than with him.

The State next called William S. Congdon, who testified that he was a lawyer, and was a member of the Coroner's jury which made an inquest into the death of Cobb, in June; Mrs. Cobb denied, before that jury, any improper intimacy with Bishop; she said that she had thrown away a bottle of bitters which had disagreed with Cobb; she prepared the cup of tea for Mr. Cobb, who was the only one who bought that article, and the only one in the house who drank the beverage; the remainder of the unsteeped tea she said she gave to her mother, as she could not bear to see it in the house, and her mother used it; Mrs. Waterman confirmed this heref; Mrs. Cobb testified that there were no private visits, and no correspondence between them; at that request Mrs. Cobb said nothing, but other witnesses did, about the long time the tea had steeped; she declared that the children never came to their father's side and had a sip of tea from his cup; she distinctly denied having received any letter from Bishop before or after Cobb's death.

Asaph B. Young, a stone mason, living since the Spring of 1877 opposite Cobb's house, was the next witness. The street dividing them was 50 feet wide. The witness was accustomed to watch for Bishop to give him orders for groceries, and thus came to observe that a great many times Bishop would be in Cobb's house for an hour, and would afterward come back within 15 minutes, having been to some other customers; some days he would be there five times. The witness timed him on two occasions, the same day, and he staid there half an hour each time; Mrs. Cobb opened the front door for him before he knocked; these visits seemed to be daily; Cobb at this time would be away from the house. One day, in the Spring of 1878, in the store, Cobb reminded Bishop as he came up to the Cobb house, but did not catch him before he went in, and so walked up and down on the street, waiting for him a full hour before he came out; this repeatedly occurred during the next few months, until Cobb died, in June; Bishop almost daily. The defense did not cross-examine this witness.

Mrs. Daniel Brown said she lived at Colt and Ann streets, two doors north of Cobb's residence; she was out frequently among her flowers in her front yard, and noticed the frequency and length of Bishop's visits; one day last January she went across the street to a neighbor with her work before o'clock, and staid until after 4, and Bishop was at Mrs. Cobb's all that time; Bishop's visits increased in frequency after his wife's death; she had seen Bishop on Cobb's croquet ground only once; she did not know but that Bishop had brought his wife with him on the occasions of the long visits of which she testified.

Four women who had been summoned as witnesses for the State failing to respond at this time, the Sheriff was sent for them with a carriage, and a short recess was taken, which was improved for a consultation between counsel and other witnesses. During this interval, Bishop chatted nonchalantly with the father of the deceased man.

Miss Betsey Gardner testified that she lived on East Great Plain, (a place a mile beyond the "West Side,") and was well acquainted with Mrs. Cobb; she visited her in the Summer of 1877 almost every day, and saw Bishop there nearly every time; often she passed the house in intervals of two or three hours, and saw Bishop's team; when they met there the talk was on amusements and parties, and not groceries and trade; she did not know of any intimacy between Mrs. Cobb and Mrs. Bishop; she did not know of anything unhappy between Cobb and his wife; she was Mrs. Cobb's most intimate friend this Summer, but never heard anything of presents, letters, or poetry being exchanged with Bishop; she cut off her acquaintance with Mrs. Cobb in the Fall from what she had seen and thought of Bishop's visiting.

Mrs. Samuel Manning was sworn, and testified that she lived on Peck-street; in the Summer of 1877 she was friendly with Mrs. Cobb and visited there either with Miss Gardner or without, or passed the Cobb house two or three times a week, and saw Bishop's team there nearly every time she went by; during her visits Mrs. Cobb had always seemed faithful and kind to his wife; she dropped Mrs. Cobb's acquaintance in the Fall by reason of the intimacy with Bishop.

John C. Morgan, who had occasion to pass Cobb's house frequently, going to and from his business, in the Summer of 1877, testified that he saw Bishop's team a great many times in the morning; but on cross-examination said that these appeared to be the business calls common to all delivery-wagon drivers.

George Mills, who had been a clerk in the same grocery store with Bishop in the Fall of 1877, was the next witness. Mr. and Mrs. Cobb came into the store one evening, the former passing on to the office, and the latter remaining out in the front part of the store with Bishop, who passed a note to her around the end of the show-case; Cobb was then standing in the inner office with his back toward his wife. This incident was substantially repeated on another occasion.

In the course of the afternoon the State produced not less than 29 witnesses to confirm a number of little points in Bishop's story, and to show still further the extent to which the neighbors of Mrs. Cobb noticed the intimacy with Bishop. Three women named Cutler, living in the house next to Cobb's, swore to observing Bishop's visits, which numbered from two to seven a day. One of these women remarked that she had timed these visits until she grew tired of it, but, on cross-examination, she was obliged to admit that she had timed a visit but once. Mrs. Jane Merrill estimated the length of Bishop's visits by the length of her baby's naps. Mrs. Elijah Tracy stopped visiting at Mrs. Cobb's because of her sense of the impropriety of Mrs. Cobb's conduct. William K. Sherr, a druggist, sold Bishop arsenic. Eugene Small, a druggist, sold Bishop strychnine. J. M. Pettis, a crockery-dealer, sold Bishop the cup which he presented to Mrs. Cobb. Mrs. John Reynolds was an intimate friend of Mrs. Cobb, but never received from her any hint as to Bishop's visits. This witness met Mrs. Cobb walking with Bishop in Washington-street the Tuesday night before Cobb died. Frank I. Dodge likewise met them at about the same time and place. John Beckus and Eugene B. Armstrong met them in School-street that night. Mrs. Robinson, librarian at the Otis Library, testified that a man brought back some books the day after Cobb died, but she was not sure that it was Bishop, and she was uncertain whether the books came from Mrs. Cobb or Mrs. Waterman.

L. W. Dudley, a druggist, could not remember selling any poison to Bishop, but did sell him a hand-mirror. Charles D. Noyes, a stationer, sold Bishop a gold-tipped, pearl-handled pencil-case. Mrs. Gotthelf, who keeps a fancy goods store, sold him a gold-plated breast-pin and ear-rings. William H. H. Larkin, an engraver, marked the gold tooth-pick which Mrs. Cobb gave Bishop with the word "Fet." Mrs. A. F. Park saw the boy bring Bishop a note as he stood in a livery-stable door, a few days after Cobb died. Mrs. Sarah Bruce and Amelia Stoddard saw a woman steal into Bishop's house on Thursday evening, while Bishop's mother was away. Dr. L. L. Button certified that he had prescribed certain harmless medicines for Cobb a short time before he died. Mrs. Oakley T. Lee lived in a part of Bishop's house after his wife died; during the visit of Mrs. Bishop to New-Haven Mrs. Lee went up to his room one night to leave clean linen; twice she repeated the trip, but without gaining admission, and yet she heard the door open and close twice meantime.

Just before the court adjourned a somewhat amusing incident occurred. Judge Park renewed his injunction to the jury to avoid reading the papers or conversing with any one about this case. Thereupon the counsel for both State and defense arose, commenced the Judge's remarks, and each intimated that they knew the jury had been approached and did not want the thing to occur again. It is suspected that one of the lawyers connected with the case was the person who had risen to call this demonstration, for after court adjourned he was heard to inquire growlingly if a lawyer had not a right to speak to the jury. Good headway was made to-day with the case, the court having sat an hour later than usual. The State hopes to rest the case to-morrow night. Mrs. Bishop, Bishop's mother, is in town, having been away in Madison for several months. She is an invalid, and recently remarked that she only wanted to live long enough to give her testimony in this case.

THE ART STUDENTS' LEAGUE.

DRAWINGS BY WILLIAM BLAKE, OF LONDON, AND JOHN LA FARGE, OF NEW-YORK—PAINTING BY WHISTLER.

The reception given last night by the Art Students' League, in their rooms, on the corner of Fifth-avenue and Sixteenth-street, was not in honor of the work of the students. The guests that packed the two large work-rooms were regaled with pictures by masters in that profession to which the Art League aspires to be a portal. Very little wall-space, comparatively, was given over to frames, but in the small sketches a great deal of thoughtful and thought-inspiring labor had been concentrated. The exhibition was peculiarly fitted to awake interest in artists and connoisseurs; there was no popular element present to reward those who are not devoted to art in its highest and most advanced stage for the trouble of climbing the three long flights of stairs leading to the little loan collection. What could the uninitiated make out of that illustration by Blake to his own composition, The Book of Thel, in which a woman stands looking at flowers, out of whose calyxes blossom little human figures embracing each other? Would they be apt, without some study and reverent attention to Blake's extraordinary genius, to note the difference in treatment between this last exquisitely delicate frontispiece to the Book of Thel, and the brilliantly-colored picture just above it, rough and terrible, of a Titanic form saving two women from the flames, pounding the bar flaming out of hell? The pencil sketches hanging near were not all of them in a finished state. Some were serious studies for a rounded idea; others mere jottings from Blake's eccentric and fertile brain. Among pictures were some of the first editions of Blake's illustrations, such as those to Blair's Grave. Most of the relics of Blake hanging on the wall have never been published, either by Mr. Gilchrist, Swinburne, or Scott. They belong to the family of Mr. Linnell, at present stopping in the United States, who loaned them for this occasion.

A pen-and-ink drawing by Fortuny was one of the points of gathering, but the densest crowd stood in front of the wall devoted to drawings by La Farge. Here were photographs from the powerfully imaginative series of drawings on glass, intended to illustrate an edition of Browning's poems—the "Childe Roland" bent over his horse, which straddles for safe footing in the brook; the majestic triumph of "John the Smith," with Emperor, car, and bishops; the attempt of "Pippa" (she is the Spray the Bird Clings to," containing a lovely female figure; the "Pied Piper of Hamlin," with the enchanted children pressing about him as if blown by a wind; these and more represent the series for Browning about which we ought to have appeared years ago to show what America could accomplish in the way of book illustration. Here were the pencil studies for the great church decorations by Mr. La Farge, which have since been transferred to the walls of Trinity Church in New-York, among which not the least interesting to artists was the hasty sketch made for the purpose of informing the committee of Trinity Church of the manner in which the walls were to be. The preliminary sketches for the figure in the apse of St. Thomas are admirable specimens of draughtsmanship. Imaginative flights of greater scope than any mentioned were the "Triomfo d'Amore," a little drawing on the wood, having the beauty of a classic bas-relief and the pathos of the modern romantic school of France, and the frontispiece to another series of illustrations for Browning, which shows a man pondering over a mask. Here were two pictures, side by side, showing the artist's power of expressing the terrible; one was the man in the Arabian Nights who opens the vessel containing Solomon's seal; the other an ogre appearing to two wayfarers. A half-finished Andromeda reminded one of the little painting shown at the last Academy Exhibition; an original drawing showed the first conception of the "Cupid and Psyche," which drew down oh it so much adverse comment at another exhibition several years ago. It was plain that these pictures impressed the assembly very much, and among them were several conspicuous dissentients from the style of art as practiced by La Farge.

On an easel in one corner of the room stood a portrait of James M. Whistler, taken by himself when much younger and a student in France. He is rigged up in the true painter's guise; his face is thoroughly that of an artist, and wears a sly, laughing expression. The style is bold and rapid. Besides all these there were also Venetian pictures contributed by Mr. William Chase, not belonging to known masters, but unmistakably to the age that bred the masters. Great simplicity and directness, together with not a little positive ugliness, characterized these valuable artistic "finds." Altogether this little reception has not been surpassed for interest and suggestiveness, if it has been equaled, by any exhibitions since the famous show of modern paintings at the rooms of Cottier & Co.

WHY EXTRADITION WAS REFUSED.

GOV. CULLOM'S REASONS FOR RELEASING TWO MEN ARRESTED FOR A MURDER COMMITTED TWELVE YEARS AGO.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

POTTSVILLE, Penn., Jan. 7.—Michael Durkin was killed on March 1, 1865, in a brawl at St. Clair, near this place, and Michael Merrick and Michael Galligan, who were accused of his murder, fled from the State. The Grand Jury indicted them in their absence, and a small reward was offered for their arrest, but there the matter dropped and nothing more was done in it until November, 1878, when it was found that the men were living at Springfield, Ill. Gov. Hartranft issued a requisition for the men, and Gov. Cullom, of Illinois, issued a warrant for their arrest, but after they were arrested changed his mind, petition and argument having been presented in their behalf, withdrew the warrant, and released the men.

His reasons for so doing have just been received here. They are embodied in a long opinion, in which he reviews at the circumstances of the case, and examines the law of inter-State extradition. He says the whole authority for this proceeding rests on section 2 of Article 4 of the United States Constitution, which provides that the persons for whom request is issued must be accused of a crime, and must be fugitives from justice. Gov. Cullom holds that as Merrick and Galligan had resided openly in his State for 12 years, during which time they had been in constant communication with their friends in Schuylkill County, they could no longer be considered fugitives from justice, that he was not bound to accept either Gov. Hartranft's requisition or copy of the Judicial proceedings in Pennsylvania as conclusive evidence that they were fugitives, but was at liberty to exercise his own judgment; that the decision of the whole matter rested with him, and, as they had become good and reputable citizens of Illinois, he was bound to protect them. He therefore assumed the responsibility and released the prisoners.

A PRIZE-FIGHT ARRANGED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 7.—Final arrangements were concluded this evening for the prize-fight which is to take place on Jan. 21 between John H. Clark, of this city, and an unknown. This contest is for $1,000 a side, and the final deposit was made at the New-York Clipper office this afternoon. The final stake-holder was chosen in the person of ex-Alderman McMullin, of this city. Thomas Archer Chambers was named as the unknown, but Clark objected, because Chambers desired to wear a glove to protect a stump of his finger, he having had that useful member shattered. Prof. Jack, a young pugilist of Cohoes, N. Y., was named, and he will fight. The battle is to occur within 500 miles of Philadelphia. Clark was only recently released from the Trenton Penitentiary, where he served two years for being second in a fight between Wardley and Wallace, at Pennsville.

FURBER FOUND NOT GUILTY

ALL THE ACCUSED CHARTER OAK OFFICERS ACQUITTED.

END OF THE CHARTER OAK CONSPIRACY TRIAL—THE CHARGE OF JUDGE HOVEY—HOW THE VERDICT WAS REACHED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARTFORD, Jan. 7.—The Charter Oak case was resumed before Judge Hovey this morning. As the arguments were closed last week, it was generally known that the charge would be delivered to-day, and the court-room was crowded with spectators. Immediately after the calling of the jury Judge Hovey delivered his charge from manuscript, an abstract of which is as follows:

After reciting the allegations in each count, Judge Hovey said it was essential to know what a criminal conspiracy was. It is not defined by statute, he said, but the common law defines it to be a combination between two or more persons for an unlawful purpose, or to effect a lawful purpose by unlawful means. The essence is the unlawful combination and agreement, and the conspiracy is effected when formed, no matter whether any acts are committed under it. The evidence in support of a conspiracy is generally circumstantial. When a combination is formed, men act covertly and secretly, and it is not known, except to those entering into it, unless one or more voluntarily expose it. It is of no importance to prove that the defendants have committed unlawful acts, unless they are shown to have been committed in pursuance of the conspiracy as alleged. To maintain the first count, it must be proved that the defendants conspired to cheat and defraud by one or more of the means set forth. Though it was not necessary to state in the information, yet, having set out the means, the State must prove the same as laid. The attorney claims that the evidence he has introduced furnishes the measure of proof which the law requires; that he has proved by the admissions of Furber and Wiggin that the assets of the company were greatly impaired, and that the Commissioner of Insurance had stopped policy and stock dividends; that in the transfers of stock by which possession of the company was secured there is evidence of the conspiracy, as also in the contract made with Furber that he should have 7½ per cent. of the gross premiums monthly, and 50 per cent. of the saving on purchased policies; and further in the contracts for commissions held by Wiggin and White, though it does not appear that any money was paid under them; and the attorney also claims that Furber sold to the company real estate for $3,800,000 which was in reality worth only $2,250,000, and that this purchase by the company was in violation of its charter. The defendants admit the transfer of stock by which they came into the management, and also the contract with Furber, and say that Furber submitted a list of it to the Insurance Commissioner before he could execute it, and it was approved; and they further say that they came into the company at the urgent solicitation of White after he had failed to obtain the assistance required to increase the assets in Hartford; that White and Wiggin contracts were made with the old management, and the evidence offered is that Wiggin said he should claim nothing until the company was solvent. But the declarations made by Wiggin and White must not be permitted to affect any other of the defendants.

The defendants claim to have proved, continued the Judge, that the purchase of the New-York Mortgage added largely to the assets of the company. The nominal consideration was $3,860,000, though included in the purchase were $1,250,000 of Valley Road bonds, held to have been worthless, and $219,000 in a mortgage of the Kingsdon Company, claimed to be worth little or nothing. But it is shown by the defendants that Furber was advised to make the purchase by Homer Morgan, and the Commissioner of Insurance also advised and approved the purchase. Mr. Bartholomew, the present President of the company, says the property is worth all it cost as an investment, and that the trade was an exceedingly good one; and Mr. MacNary, one of the Directors elected by the policy-holders, concurs with the views of the President. The witnesses on the part of the State put the value at more than $1,000,000 more than the defendants' price, and it is for the jury to say whose judgment is entitled to the greatest credit. It should be considered, however, that in estimates as to the value of real estate men of sound judgment are liable often to differ. The question whether the purchase was a violation of the charter of the company, the court said that the first section of the charter permitted real estate transactions, and, in fact, the company had held a large amount of real estate for years. The Judge said that the Legislature, and he thereupon instructed the jury that the purchase was not a violation of the charter. It is not sufficient in a criminal case, the court further charged the jury, that the acts and the facts may be strong suspicions, nor a preponderance of evidence, but the law requires legal and credible evidence, and the jury must feel a clear, undoubted, and entirely satisfactory conviction of the defendant's guilt; if they fall short of that they must acquit.

The second count, Judge Hovey said, charges a conspiracy to cheat defraud C. M. Capron, E. P. Hutchison, and the Ætna Life Insurance Co., and others; the charge is, therefore, to cheat those persons specially described, and it cannot be sustained unless it is proved that they were policy-holders at the time of the alleged conspiracy. That has not been proved, and the verdict of the jury on this count should be a verdict of acquittal. As to the first count again, the court said he ought to say to the claim in behalf of Mr. Talkley that there should be a distinction in his case, that if the jury should find the claim proved they should so express in their verdict. In conclusion, Judge Hovey said there was no graver or more responsible duty than to sit in judgment upon our fellow-men. No prepossessions should influence the judgment of the jury. They should know the case only as disclosed in the evidence. Whatever was said elsewhere was unfit to be stated here. The jury should be shielded from Solomon's seal; the other an ogre appearing to two wayfarers. A half-finished Andromeda reminded one of the little painting shown at the last Academy Exhibition; an original drawing showed the first conception of the "Cupid and Psyche," which drew down oh it so much adverse comment at another exhibition several years ago. It was plain that these pictures impressed the assembly very much, and among them were several conspicuous dissentients from the style of art as practiced by La Farge.

A JEWELRY STORE ROBBED.

EIGHT THOUSAND DOLLARS' WORTH OF GOODS STOLEN.

Capt. Brogan, of the Fourteenth Precinct, yesterday reported to Superintendent Walling that some time between the hours of midnight and 5 o'clock yesterday morning the jewelry store of HENRY RAUTH & SON, No. 168 Bowery, had been entered by burglars and robbed of watches, jewelry, and silverware valued at $8,000. The details of the robbery show that it was ingeniously planned and executed, and was evidently the work of skillful burglars. The store occupied by Rauth & Son is about 16 feet wide and 25 feet in depth. Immediately in the rear of the store is a sitting-room with a door connecting, the upper half of which is a single pane of glass. From this back room a stairway leads into the cellar, and the staircase is closed by a door at the top of the stairs. This door is secured by an ordinary lock and a common iron bolt. The floor above the store is occupied by the family as a dwelling. The firm have done business for 20 years at the same place, and were never before robbed. This long immunity from loss had made them careless. Only the most valuable portion of the stock was kept in the safe, and when the store was closed for the night the show-window was allowed to remain filled with watches, chains, &c., and the show-cases on the counter contained a miscellaneous stock of rings, breastpins, chains, and silverware.

The store was closed as 10 o'clock on Monday night, as usual. A light was left burning, so that the interior was fully visible to passers-by. At 5 o'clock yesterday morning an officer of the Fourteenth Precinct, while passing the store on patrol, found the front door ajar. He pushed it open, and on looking in, saw that the place had been "cleaned out" by burglars. The gas was extinguished, and trays and boxes which had contained jewelry and silverware, were scattered about the floor. The proprietors were at once aroused, and on making an examination it was discovered that nearly the entire stock of watches and jewelry, except that portion locked up in the safe, had been carried off. The show-window was almost entirely emptied, the only things left in it by the thieves being a number of heavy clocks and articles of silverware too bulky to be readily carried off. From the show-cases all the rings, gold chains, &c., had been removed. The articles of silver had been taken out of their boxes and stolen, but the thieves did not attempt to carry off any of the large quantity of silver-plated ware in the place, and no attempt was made to force open the safe.

Among the articles carried off were 125 gold and plated chains valued at $4,000; 40 silver and 32 gold watches valued at $1,500; 170 rings valued at $1,050; 108 stone cameos, onsets, valued at $325; 18 dozen plain gold rings valued at $108; several sets of sterling silver knives, forks, and spoons, and a lot of bracelets, lockets, &c. The total value of the property stolen is said to be over $8,000. An examination of the premises showed that the thieves gained entrance to the place from the cellar. The descent into the latter from the street is guarded by a trap-door flush with the sidewalk. This trap-door does not bear any marks of force, and it is therefore believed that the thieves concealed themselves in the cellar during the day or evening and remained hidden there until after midnight. A load of coal was delivered at the place during the afternoon, and was taken into the cellar by a young man who had followed the cart from the yard and had begged for the job, saying that he was starving. He did not look like an ordinary coal-heaver, and it is now believed that he may have had something to do with the robbery. The burglars ascended the stairs leading from the basement to the sitting-room, and with a brace and bit bored five holes in the door at the head of the stairs, evidently with a view of lifting the bar which they expected to find across the door. They found, however, that this door was secured simply by a ordinary lock and common bolt, and the door was quickly broken open with a "jimmy." With the same instrument they pried open the door leading from the sitting-room into the store. They then went to work apparently with great deliberation.

All the jewelry was taken out of the trays and boxes in which were thrown aside, and watches were removed with care from the hooks on which they were suspended in the window. It was evident that the thieves were not at all hurried in their movements, and after they had secured all the articles worth carrying off they unlocked the front door and walked away. In the front door was found a large auger-hole, which it is supposed was bored into the door for the purpose of opening a means of communication between the watchers outside and the burglars at work in the store. How the thieves could have worked so openly in daylight and escaped the notice of the policeman on post is a mystery. Mr. Rauth said yesterday that heretofore he had relied for safety chiefly on a watch dog which he was in the habit of locking up in the store during the night. About two weeks ago the dog was poisoned, and was afterward found dead in Delancey-street. About that time two men came to his store and bothered him a great deal in pricing the cheap goods, but finally went away without buying anything. He has given a description of these men to the Central Office detectives who have been detailed to investigate the robbery. Up to a late hour last night no clue to the thieves or the property had been obtained.

Late last night Detectives Dolan and Adams, of the Fourteenth Precinct, arrested two young men, giving their names as George Thomas and William Lee, on suspicion of having been concerned in the burglary.

POLITICS IN COLOMBIA AND PERU.

AN ATTEMPT AT REVOLUTION IN PANAMA—A NEW CABINET IN PERU.

PANAMA, Dec. 28.—A quixotic attempt at revolution was made here last night. The plot was to oust the present Government and place in power one which would be more in accord with the political views of the Government of Gen. Trujillo, who is the President of the Republic. The scheme was exposed by one of its supposed friends; the mine was sprung prematurely, and friend and foe suffered alike. An attack, which was repulsed, was made on the Cuartel, in which two men were killed and several wounded. Subsequently the Governor of the district, Mr. Peña, while parading the streets at the head of a small body of Police, was shot and killed by a party of revolutionists. This is all the loss of life so far as known.

The Lima correspondent of the Star and Herald, under date of Dec. 18, says: "After a delay of several days the President at last succeeded in organizing his new Cabinet, and on Dec. 17 the customary oath of office was administered to the following gentlemen: Don Juan Corrales Melgar, Minister of the Interior; Dr. Don Mariano Felipe Paz-Soldan, Minister of Justice and Public Worship; Gen. Don Domingo del Solar, Minister of War and Marine. Messrs. Drigoyen and Iscue, respectively, holding the portfolios of Foreign Affairs and Finance in the former Cabinet, retain the same positions in the present organization. Mr. Drigoyen having been advanced to the Presidency of the Council of State. Although the selections made by the President do not seem to be generally regarded with approbation, yet it is conceded that at this moment, and acting in accordance with the ideas recently enumerated by Gen. Prado respecting the advisability of a fusion of the two principal political parties, the choice was somewhat difficult. The trial of Don Manuel Pardo's assassin continues with considerable delay."

WATCHING A DEFAULTER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

MILFORD, Penn., Jan. 7.—James W. Quick, Treasurer of Pike County, Penn., who is a defaulter in the amount of from $9,000 to $12,000, is known to be in Port Jervis, N. Y. It had been thought, even by his most intimate friends, that he had gone to Canada. He is closely watched, and as soon as the exact amount of the deficiency is made known, which will probably be to-morrow, and a requisition can be obtained from the Governor of this State, he will be arrested and brought here. The county funds, $7,005, supposed to have been drawn from the Port Jervis banks by the defaulter, are yet on deposit and have been made secure.

A FEAST FOR THE CODE COMMITTEE.

EAST FISHKILL, N. Y., Jan. 7.—A. P. Sprague, the Secretary of the International Code Committee of America, announces that the Association for the Reform and Codification of the Law of Nations will hold its next annual conference the last week of August, 1879, in the Guildhall of London, and will be entertained by the Lord Mayor and Corporation of that city.

WEAVERS GOING TO PATERSON.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 7.—At a meeting to-day of the Kensington Power Loom Carpet Weavers, numbering 450, who have been on a strike for nearly nine weeks against a reduction of wages, notice was given that work has been secured for 100 hands at Paterson, N. J., where the weavers had been successful in a strike for increase of wages. Ninety-three of the strikers registered themselves as willing to go to Paterson.

UNABLE TO DISCHARGE HER CARGO.

PORTLAND, Me., Jan. 7.—The steamer Ontario, at this port from Liverpool, is unable to discharge her cargo in consequence of the manifest, which was sent by mail to New-York, having gone to Montreal by mistake.

PASSENGER TICKETS ON RAILWAYS.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 7.—The General Passenger Agents of the roads running east from this city held a meeting to-day and abolished unlimited second class tickets. The rates action regarding first class tickets will probably be taken at the Spring meeting.

TAMMANY HALL EXCITED.

A FIGHT FOR THE CONTROL OF THE BUILDING.

A STUNNING BLOW GIVEN BY THE ANTI-TAMMANY MEMBERS OF THE SOCIETY—WHAT IS SAID ON THE SUBJECT BY PROMINENT CITIZENS—THE SACHEMS ALARMED.

"Shall a mere hall stand for the Democracy of this City, and decide questions of regularity as to membership in the party?" This question, which has often been agitated by a large number of Democrats, is now being revived in connection with the proceedings taken before Judge Barrett to prevent the Tammany Society from illegally packing its ranks, and securing a majority sufficient to elect Sachems that would be favorable to the rule of Tammany as a political organization. The fact that an injunction had been issued against the society, and that some of its affairs were to be ventilated in a court of law, created intense excitement yesterday, not only among politicians but the public generally. The members of the "regular Democracy," as they term themselves, seemed to feel the blow keenly. You could tell the Tammanyite at a glance by his dejected appearance, lack of interest in his favorite drinks, and a general crushed air. The Anti-Tammanyite on the contrary was jubilant, and he certainly showed it. To his vision the complete control of the Tammany Society was almost within his grasp. No more should he and his friends be black-balled and kept without the sacred portals, but in turn they would place their feet on the necks of their enemies and rejoice in their own success. Among the chieftains of both factions there was similar excitement. Our party kept in the background, refused the pleasures of being interviewed, and some of them affected to sneer at the danger they were supposed to be in, while the other kept open house, as it were, and told the good news over and over again. Ex-Senator Bixby was in a particularly good humor when found by a TIMES reporter. He said Tammany would no longer be in the power of John Kelly after next April. He considered that Kelly had now received the worst blow of his lifetime, for those who had of late been clinging blindly to his waning fortunes, under the belief that he was an honest man persecuted by jealous politicians, would now see him in his true light as a double-faced intriguer, whose sole strength lay in trickery and subterfuge. "The people," said the Senator, "won't forgive a man who tries to save his power by such a dirty trick as holding a secret meeting to elect new supporters of his own into a society, while the majority of the members knew nothing of the meeting. Whether the charter of Tammany does or does not prescribe the paper or papers in which the notices of meetings shall be published, it was the custom to do so in papers that somebody at least read and the publication of the last meeting was plainly made as obscure as possible. John Kelly still controls a majority of the 13 Sachems, but the coming election for Sachems in April rendered it almost a dead certainty that he and Tammany would be beaten. Hence his attempt to crowd in by fraud 147 of his adherents, so that he might have their votes in April. He is beaten in the attempt and has lost a great deal of prestige by it."

Ex-Judge Nelson J. Waterbury said that the opponents of Mr. Kelly were by no means asleep, and were getting stronger each day. They would follow their present attack in the fullest extent possible, and there could be no doubt that Kelly had received a terribly severe blow. He has been caught in low trickery, to which it was supposed many he would not stoop, and he certainly would suffer a great loss of friends and supporters by so doing.

Messrs. Allison & Shaw, of No. 79 Cedar-street, were the lawyers engaged in obtaining the injunction. Mr. Allison said yesterday that there was nothing new in the matter, but that everything was very promising for a successful termination.

Controller Kelly declined to give his views on the subject on the ground that the matter was then pending before the courts, and that he believed the constitution and by-laws of the society were complied with in regard to advertising the meetings of the organization.

Joel Tyler, who has been for seven years past Secretary of the Tammany Society, said that the meeting at which the 147 members had been elected was entirely legal, and was held in strict accordance with the constitution and by-laws of the society. The by-law governing this point reads as follows:

"It shall be the duty of the Secretary to advertise all regular, special, or extra meetings of the society in one or more of the newspapers published in the City at least two days before such meeting occurs."

In accordance with that by-law, which leaves it entirely discretionary with the Secretary as to the papers he shall select, he published the notice for the December meeting in the New-York Journal of Commerce four days before the meeting was held. The men who are engaged in this attempt to restrain the society have, he said, been a long time boasting, openly, that the new members would be admitted into the society until after the annual election of officers, which takes place on the third Monday in April. The reason of this is because they know that, if legal compliance is observed, they would be able to control the election, and in that way get control of the society. "What they are after," said Mr. Stevens, "is to get control of the building, and if we, the living members of the Tammany Society, the control of the society is the key to the control of the building. With the building under their control, of course, they would be master of the situation, and they could exclude or admit whoever they pleased, and those who now constitute the Tammany Society would very soon find themselves outsiders. They have no hope or expectation of excluding these new members by open force, for they know, now do I suppose they care to do so. All they want to do is to stave off the initiation until after the annual election, and this they will no doubt endeavor to do by all the means at their command, even if they have to carry the matter up to the highest courts on appeals."

As an important adjunct of the political forces and machinery of the Tammany Society, and necessarily of the Tammany Hall Democracy, the building in East Fifteenth-street holds a position of no little importance, however, is not in its intrinsic worth as

TUESDAY, Jan. 7—P. M.

The stock speculation was irregular, and failed to afford any special feature of interest, the volume of business being comparatively light, and the fluctuations confined within narrow limits. The uncertainty which prevails in regard to the position occupied by some of the leading operators naturally tends to repress speculation. The majority of the dealers, however, seem to be imbued with the belief in a higher range of values, but their views in this respect are mainly based on the expectation that the immense demand which at present prevails for Government and railroad bonds will eventually be turned toward the stock market. The great bulk of the business to-day was in the Granger shares, particularly North-western, Erie, the coal shares, Lake Shore, and Western Union. The general market declined ¼@1 ₱ cent. early in the day, with the exception of North-western preferred, which was strong throughout and closed at an advance of 1 ₱ cent. The chief demand for this stock came from the shorts. The early decline in the other active shares was during the afternoon fully recovered, in most instances, and the market closed with a fairly firm tone. Investment shares were strong.

The transactions aggregated 149,035 shares, including 34,390 North-western, 28,600 Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, 27,200 Erie, 17,725 Lake Shore, 11,850 St. Paul, 7,350 Western Union, 2,900 Michigan Central, 2,550 New-Jersey Central, 2,000 Ohio and Mississippi, 1,900 Morris and Essex, 1,735 iron Mountain, 1,425 Canada Southern, 1,300 Missouri, Kansas and Texas, and 1,000 Illinois Central.

North-western common declined from 51¼ to 50⅜, but recovered to 50⅞, while the preferred sold up from 77⅛ to 78¼, closing at the highest point. Delaware, Lackawanna and Western fell off from 44¼ to 43⅜, advanced to 44⅝, with the final sales at 44. Erie opened and closed at 22¾, selling in the interim up to 23 and down to 22½. Lake Shore fell from 68 to 67, but in the final dealings recovered to 67⅞. St. Paul declined from 35¼ to 34⅝, and closed at 34⅞, the preferred falling off from 75⅞ to 75¼, and closing at a recovery of ⅛ ₱ cent. Western Union fluctuated between 94¾ and 94⅝, selling at 94⅝ at the close. Michigan Central rose from 75½ to 75⅝, declined to 75, and recovered to 75¼. New-Jersey Central opened at 34¼ and closed at 34, these being the extreme prices of the day. Morris and Essex advanced from 75¾ to 76, sold down to 75⅝, but recovered to 76. Delaware and Hudson rose from 38½ to 38¾. Pittsburg declined from 86⅝ to 86. Illinois Central sold up from 80½ to 81⅛, with final sales at 81. Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph opened at 30¾, and rose to 31⅞. Iron Mountain advanced from 16⅞ to 17¼, but fell off to 16. Canada Southern sold down from 47 to 46, and recovered to 46¾. The other fluctuations were unimportant.

The Money market continues to be characterized by great ease, the extreme rates for call loans being 2½ and 4 ₱ cent., with closing transactions at the lower figure. Prime mercantile paper was discounted at 4@5 ₱ cent. The following were the rates of exchange on New-York at the undermentioned cities: Savannah, buying ⅜ offered, selling par@¼ premium; Charleston, easy, none offering; New-Orleans, commercial ¼@5-16, bank ⅛; St. Louis, 50 premium; Chicago, firm, buying 1-10 discount, selling 1-10 premium; and Boston, 12½ cents premium.

The foreign advices reported Consols at London strong, and ¼ ₱ cent. higher, United States bonds being steady and unchanged, with the exception of 10-40s, which show an advance of ¼ ₱ cent., and 1867s, which declined ¼ ₱ cent. In American railway securities, Erie common advanced to 23¼, and the preferred to 38, against 22⅝ and 37¾ respectively yesterday; New-Jersey Central declined 1 ₱ cent. to 35; Pennsylvania advanced to 33⅜, but subsequently fell off ¼ ₱ cent.; New-Jersey Central Consols sold up to 76½, but closed at 76. The Bank of England gained £95,000 on balance to-day. At Paris, Rentes rose to 113f. 52½c.

In Sterling Exchange the easy working of the money market in London has caused an advance in the rate of 60-day bills to $4 83½, leaving demand unchanged at $4 88. The market is influenced by the Government calls of bonds and a belief in cheaper money in London, which makes 60-day bills the favorite remittance. Cables and demand bills are not especially needed, and are heavy, with no advance in rates. On actual business the rates were for 60-day bills, $4 82½@$4 82¾; fo demand, $4 87@$4 87¼; cables, $4 87¾@ $4 88, and for commercial, $4 80½@ $4 81½.

Government bonds were firm throughout the day, with an active business over the counters of the leading dealers. 1867s were especially weak, in sympathy with the decline at London, and the belief that the refunding operations of the Government will result in further calls for the bonds for redemption at an early day. The dealings in railroad mortgages were large and well distributed, the markets exhibiting strength, and prices, in many instances, recording a further advance. The principal activity was in Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern Firsts and Canada Southern Firsts, the former advancing from 70 to 71 and reacting to 70⅝, and the latter rising from 77 to 78¼, with closing sales at the highest point. C., C. & I. rose from 94 to 95, Ohio and Mississippi Seconds from 75¾ to 76½, Toledo and Wabash Seconds, ex coupon, from 80½ to 81⅝; do. consolidated convertibles from 65½ to 65¾, Chicago, St. Paul and Minneapolis Firsts from 89 to 90, Cincinnati and Springfield Firsts from 74 to 75, Great Western Seconds, ex coupon, from 80¼ to 81½; Rock Island 6s from 103⅜ to 103⅞, and Union Pacific Land Firsts from 106 to 106⅛. Sales of Toledo, Peoria and Warsaw Firsts, Western Division, Purchasing Committee Receipts, were made at 101@100⅞@ 100½. The New-Jersey Central issues were lower for consolidated Firsts assented and convertibles assented, the former declining to 74⅝ and the latter to 74. C., C. and I. C. Firsts declined to 58¾, and do. Seconds to 18. St. Paul Firsts sold at 123½, Long Dock bonds at 111, Chicago and Alton Firsts at 113½, Iowa Midland Firsts at 108, Chicago and Milwaukee Firsts at 110, New-York Central coupon Firsts at 116½, Toledo and Wabash Firsts, ex coupon, at 111¾, Michigan Central 7s at 114¼, and Fort Wayne Seconds at 115½. State bonds were irregular. North Carolinas were strong and advanced 1@ 1½ ₱ cent., old selling up to 19½, new to 14, and do. Funding Act of 1866 and 1868 to 14. Louisiana Consols declined to 97 bid and 67¾ asked, against sales at 69 yesterday. Missouri 6s of 1886 sold at 103½. District of Columbia 3.65s were firm at 79⅞@80.

The exports of domestic produce for the week ending this date were $4,429,575, against $6,477,544 for the corresponding period last year, and $3,981,539 in 1877.

BEECHER STILL POPULAR.

PLYMOUTH'S PEWS AT AUCTION.

A LARGE INCREASE IN THE AGGREGATE AMOUNT OF THE PREMIUMS SINCE LAST YEAR—SOME OF THE PRICES PAID.

The annual auction sale of pews at Plymouth Church took place last evening. The hour for beginning the sale had been fixed at 7 o'clock. At that hour the seats were not all filled, but soon after 8 o'clock the church was crowded. The total amount realized by the sale was $40,721, including the assessed rental of the pews, which amounted to $12,743. The premiums formed an aggregate of $27,978, an increase over the rents and premiums amounted to $63,680; in 1875 to $71,165; in 1874, $59,430. The highest premium paid last year was by H. W. Sage, who gave a premium of $505 for the same pew he got last night for $500 premium. Mr. H. B. Claflin paid a premium of $500 for the same pew which he obtained last year for $300. At a few minutes past 7 o'clock there was a general stamping of feet, to announce that punctuality was desirable, and shortly afterward Mr. Beecher stepped to the front of the platform. He said that he had not been instructed by the Trustees to make a speech, nor did he need to make any, since the occasion was the twenty-ninth on which the pews had been rented, and the gentlemen present were thoroughly familiar with the method. He desired to say, however, that from the beginning the pews had been made, "as a matter of policy and principle, free to bidders." There was no moral lien on any of them, and if anybody wanted Mr. Claflin's pew, there was a way in which they could get it, and he would guarantee them against Mr. Claflin's temper, and if anybody wanted to get possession of Mr. Sage's pew they were at liberty to take it in the lawful way by bidding more than Mr. Sage did. Continuing, Mr. Beecher said: "I am able to make a statement to-night that is without a parallel on the globe. I know that there is not in the City of New-York an institution that can show a business with such a minimum of loss as we can. You will be much surprised as I am to know that the renting of the pews for the last 25 years amounts to about $1,000,000; that is the rentals and the premiums, or to be exact, $955,204, and the loss in the collection amounts to only $6,488." What the percentage of loss—$6,488—was to $1,000,000, Mr. White could tell quicker than he could. Mr. Beecher said he thought that it showed "a continued seriousness of purpose, a continued fervency of zeal, a spirit of religion, and a remarkable fidelity to obligations in regard to the church—a fidelity which, if carried out in every other part of the men's business, would make them eminently men of integrity and honesty." At any rate, it was good fruit for any church to exhibit in 25 years, with a rental of nearly $1,000,000, to lose Mr. Beecher only $6,500, in round numbers, or less. Mr. Beecher concluded by introducing the auctioneer, Mr. E. E. Hoyt, as "a gentleman not skillful as an orator," who was desirous of "making a few remarks." Mr. Hoyt read the "terms of the sale," which were that no bid would be accepted "from those in arrears," and the pews must be occupied at least 10 minutes before the beginning of any service, or they would be assigned to strangers. The bidding then commenced, the first call being $400. Mr. H. B. Claflin got the first choice at a premium of $500, and chose his old pew on the ground floor, about half a dozen seats from the platform. The list of premiums above $200 was as follows:

No.	Name.	Premium.
89	H. B. Claflin	$500

There remained only 10 pews at the close of the sale, and it was announced that they could be had at a premium of $2 each.

A WEDDING AT ST. THOMAS' CHURCH.

The marriage of Mr. Allan Lee Smidt to Miss Grace Lee, daughter of Mr. William H. Lee, of the firm of Lee, Tweedy & Co., dry goods merchants, took place last evening in St. Thomas' Church, corner of Fifty-third street and Fifth-avenue. The church was crowded with friends and invited guests. The toilets of the ladies being remarkably beautiful and varied. The bridal party entered to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, the congregation rising as they approached the altar, where Dr. Morgan stood awaiting them. The groom and bride were preceded by the ushers and bridesmaids, those offices being respectively filled by Miss Moffatt, Miss Howard, of Hartford; Miss Knowlton, and Miss Smidt, sister of the groom, and by Mr. T. G. Lee, the bride's brother; Mr. T. F. Lee, Mr. Walter Bound, Mr. Cooper, and Mr. Bosworth. The bride was given away by her father. She is about 24 years old, rather above the medium height, handsome in appearance, and wore a superb silk dress of light cream color, her coiffure being ornamented with a lace bridal veil that fell in graceful folds over her shoulders. In her hand she carried a large bouquet of fragrant flowers. The groom is a lawyer of social and professional prominence. At the close of the ceremony and while the bridal party were leaving the church the chimes were rung, filling the edifice with melodious echos. A grand reception was subsequently given at the residence of the bride's father, No. 516 Fifth-avenue, which was attended by a very large number of guests.

THE FIFTH-AVENUE THEATRE.

Pasted on the outer entrance doors of the Fifth-Avenue Theatre is a notice, signed by Gunning S. Bedford, stating that the money for all unused tickets will be refunded at the box-office between 12 and 2 o'clock to-day. For the present the theatre is closed, and Rip Van Winkle has literally taken his departure from New-York, Mr. Jefferson having gone South yesterday afternoon. Mr. Bedford stated in course of conversation yesterday that the immediate cause of the closing of the theatre was the action of the stage carpenters, musicians, and other employes, and not of Mr. Jefferson or the actors, who were willing to keep on, while the others refused to perform further duties unless guaranteed a full week's salary. Mr. Bedford thinks that by refusing to work and thus closing the theatre, the employes have made their condition worse rather than better, and that if they had kept on a few days longer the chances were that they would have been paid off in full. Mr. Harkins said yesterday afternoon that he did not expect to have anything further to do with the Fifth-Avenue Theatre, and was undecided as to what he should do, but thought he might again go starring through the country. The book kept by Mr. Hawkins has been turned over to Mr. Bedford, and from them the financial report of the retiring firm will be made up.

SUFFOCATED BY INHALING COAL GAS.

Deputy Coroner Goldschmiedt made an autopsy yesterday on the body of Jennie Schroeder, aged 6 years, who was found dead in her bed at Mrs. McCaffrey's boarding-house, No. 331 East Fifteenth-street, on Monday morning. Her sister, Lizzie, aged 20, a member of Strakosch's opera troupe, lay insensible across her body. The autopsy showed that Jennie died from asphyxia caused by the inhalation of coal gas. The girls, when they retired on Sunday night, left a strong fire burning in a Franklin stove which was in the bedroom. They slacked the fire with fresh anthracite coal and turned off the damper in the stove-pipe so that all draft from the stove was shut off. The room filled with the coal gas while the girls slept, and Jennie was suffocated by the vapor. Lizzie is still in an unconscious and dangerous condition, and, although hopes are entertained that she will eventually recover, it will be some time before she will be able even to speak. She has no idea of the fate of her little sister. Mr. Van Duzen, the step-father of the children, arrived yesterday from Philadelphia, where he resides, and had Jennie's remains removed for burial. Mrs. Van Duzen, the mother of the children, is in Chicago with an opera troupe.

A WOMAN FATALLY BURNED.

An explosion of gas occurred yesterday at 11 o'clock A. M. in the cellar of the tenement-house No. 50 Delancey-street, by which Mrs. Mina Bogert, the housekeeper, was fatally burned. The house is a brick tenement, five stories in height, on the north-east corner of Delancey and Chrystie streets. On the ground floor is the liquor store of John J. Davis, and the upper floors are occupied by a number of German families. Mrs. Bogert took a kerosene lamp into the cellar, and, on opening the door of one of the wood-houses, was met by a suffocating rush of gas. In a moment an explosion followed, the escaping gas having ignited from the lighted lamp. The flame was blown out of Mrs. Bogert's hand, and she was thrown to the floor. Her clothing took fire, and finding herself enveloped in flame, she ran up stairs and into the street. A crowd gathered about her, and one of the bystanders took off his overcoat and wrapping it around her threw her on the ground and rolled her in the coat until the flames were extinguished. It was then found that she was terribly burned on the head, face, arms, and lower extremities. Her injuries are believed to be fatal, and she was removed to the Chambers-Street Hospital in an ambulance. After the fire had been extinguished an examination of the gas-pipes in the cellar was made, and it was found that the gas was escaping from a rent in the service-pipe leading from the street main, caused probably by the frost. Mrs. Bogert is about 38 years of age. She has had charge of the house for a long time, and was always believed to be a very careful housekeeper.

THE CENTENNIAL RIFLE TROPHY.

THE NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION AMENDING THE CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH IT SHALL BE CONTESTED FOR.

The Board of Directors of the National Rifle Association met yesterday afternoon, Judge N. P. Stanton in the chair. The Treasurer's report showed the receipts during December, 1878, to have been $431 31; expenses, $284 76, leaving a balance on hand of $146 56. A communication from the Long Island Railroad Company guaranteeing the running of trains at reasonable hours during the coming shooting season was referred to the committee on changing the location of the range. The special business of the meeting was in reference to a change in the conditions of the international match. Gen. Shaler stated that while the association stood committed against any change in those conditions, yet there was one clause which only referred to the introductory match which took place in 1876. He therefore moved that the following paragraph be substituted for the ninth paragraph in the conditions:

"Prize—The American Centennial Trophy of the last winning team until the year 1884. After that year the trophy to be always held subject to challenging, in the event of a challenge being received from more than one country or province in the same year, the competitions shall take place at one and the same time, and the country or province whose team makes the highest score shall be entitled to the trophy. Such trophy shall be considered for the time being the property of the recognized head rifle organization of the country or province which the winning team represents, and such head rifle organization shall keep the trophy, and take all needful steps to insure its safe keeping, and in the event of its loss or destruction, shall have it replaced by a counterpart as exact as may be, and shall deliver it into the hands of the next successful competitors. It shall be the duty of such head rifle organization to fix the time and place for holding the next competition, and to give at least six months' notice of such time and place to the rifle associations of all countries and provinces. If no entries for the next competition are received by such head rifle organization before the end of the year in which the competition, such organization shall require its team to shoot over the ranges, and have inscribed upon the trophy the name of its country, the total score, and the words, 'No other competitors.'"

The motion was adopted, with the amendment offered by Judge Gildersleeve that "such action shall not deprive the team of 1876 of any and all rights it was entitled to when it won the Palma by its magnificent shooting in 1878." After electing Col. Henry G. Litchfield, United States Army, a life-member of the association, an adjournment was taken.

THE GARBAGE PROBLEM.

A PLAN THAT THE PILOT COMMISSIONERS THINK IS FEASIBLE.

The Pilot Commissioners yesterday ordered the removal of the wreck of the coal barge Morris, owned by W. J. Davidson, which is sunk at the northern end of the gap of the Atlantic Dock. Mr. S. T. Appolonio appeared before the board, by appointment, and explained his machine for destroying the garbage and street refuse of the City. It consists of a large cylindrical boiler, placed in an inclined position, and revolving on its longitudinal axis. During the process it is kept continually filled with flame injected into the bottom, and the heat is described as intense. The garbage is received into the upper end from the carts, and the residue, after burning, is discharged from the lower extremity into a series of buckets working on an endless chain, and by them taken into a receptacle in the scow. The entire affair works automatically. The cylinder is so arranged that it will retain the material until it is properly reduced, and it is claimed that all noxious matters and gases during the process of consumption are effectually destroyed either in the cylinder or in a combustion chamber attached. The capacity of the machine can be increased or diminished by elevating or lowering it, and not being fixed can be readily taken to other out trouble or removed from place to place as may be desired. Mr. Appolonio proposes to construct a machine and test it practically at his own cost, provided that in case the commissioners decide to perform all that is claimed for it he is assured of a contract. The board gave it as their opinion that the machine is feasible and that the City authorities should grant the inventor an opportunity to make a trial of it at one of the dumping grounds now in use.

THE BONDS OF A FLORIDA ROAD.

The case of John Collinson against Sidney Hopkins and others was before Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, upon the question whether the Receivers of the Jacksonville, Pensacola and Mobile Railroad Company, appointed by the United States Circuit Court of the Northern District of Florida, should be admitted as parties defendant. The suit is not now prosecuted by any of the original parties to it, but is conducted by one Thomas B. Coddington, and none of the original issues are now involved. The suit was brought in 1872, and involved the use and appropriation of $1,200,000 of bonds issued in 1870 by the State of Florida in aid of the railroad company. In January, 1873, it was agreed that these bonds should be sent to England, and be subject to certain debts and obligations, and Coddington was to have a lien on 192 of these bonds for the payment of $40,000. A stipulation to this effect was signed only by two of the parties to the record, and it was denied upon the argument yesterday that the railroad company assented thereto or authorized any one to subject the estate to payment of Coddington's debt. It appears that the bonds, after going to England, instead of being appropriated as proposed, became subject to further litigation, and were impounded by the English courts. Meantime a portion of the bonds were sold and put in circulation, and the remainder was pronounced by the Supreme Court of Florida unconstitutional and void. Suits were also brought in Florida to foreclose a mortgage and lease upon the railroad, and the receivers, who now seek to be made parties defendant in this suit, were then appointed. This case is now pending before Judge Van Brunt, and Coddington is seeking to get a decree adjudging him to be a creditor of the company in the sum of $460,000, and to sell the bonds as the property of the company. The Receivers ask to appear and defend, denying that these bonds are the bonds of the company, and denying all liability on the part of the company for their payment. Judge Barrett reserved his decision.

HONORING SECRETARY SHERMAN.

The Chamber of Commerce have begun a movement to carry into effect Mr. A. A. Low's suggestion at the last meeting that Secretary Sherman's portrait should be placed upon the walls of the Chamber alongside of Alexander Hamilton's, in recognition of his services in bringing about resumption. A fund has been raised, and Mr. Sherman is shortly to be invited to sit for his picture to some artist of distinction not yet decided upon. The Chamber's portrait of Alexander Hamilton was painted in 1792 by Trumbull for the Merchants of New-York, as an expression of their appreciation of his services to the commercial and financial interests of the country while acting as the first Secretary of State. He was then 35 years of age.

THE VAN HOUTEN ESTATE.

Judge Barkalow, of the Orphans' Court of Passaic County, yesterday read his decision in the matter of the exceptions to the intermediate account of John R. Van Houten, Executor of Rachel Van Houten, filed by George Post, his co-Executor. In his decision, Judge Barkalow reviewed the entire case. Rachel Van Houten, of Paterson, died in 1863 at an advanced age, leaving a will, which was admitted to probate March 19, 1863. The will was proved by the Executors, George Post and John R. Van Houten, the son and son-in-law of the testatrix. An inventory was duly filed and a first account, by both Executors, was presented and allowed, Jan. 19, 1865. A second intermediate account, purporting to be by both Executors, was presented for allowance May 15, 1866. To this account, on May 25, 1866, George Post, one of the Executors, filed exceptions, and the case was taken into court to test the validity of his exceptions. The only one of importance was an exception to the payment of a legacy of $5,000 to Catharine Van Houten, a daughter of the testatrix, upon the ground that a redemption of the legacy had been made. The testimony taken covers 638 printed pages, and began on Feb. 15, 1867, ending May 24, 1878. Several of the witnesses testified that Mrs. Van Houten stated that Catharine had been given her legacy and used it in building a house, and Judge Barkalow said in his decision, "we believe it to be the truth that Rachel Van Houten did furnish $5,000 for the house, and that she declared and intended it to be a substitute for the legacy," and he allowed the exception.

THE VOLUNTEER LIFE-SAVING CORPS.

The Volunteer Life-saving Corps are progressing famously. Yesterday Capt. Boyton collected on their account, for the establishment of stations, $235 on the Stock Exchange and $150 on the Produce Exchange. Subscriptions were also opened on the Cotton and Maritime Exchanges. A telegram was received from the Receiver of the Long Island Railroad, saying that the 19-foot boat presented to the corps by Mr. Blades had arrived at Hunter's Point, and that with it were two pairs of 10-feet oars. Mr. Frank Miller, of No. 73 Madison, gave the corps yesterday a life-saving raft and a pair of sculls. He says he will have this stationed off Pier No. 8, so as to be ready for instant use in either river.

A BRAVE FIREMAN KILLED.

AND EIGHT OTHERS INJURED.

CRUSHED BENEATH A FALLEN ROOF OF A VESEY-STREET STORE—A FIRE WHICH DAMAGED PROPERTY ABOUT $35,000—NO CAUSE FOR IT ASSIGNED—SCENES AT THE BURNED PREMISES.

Early yesterday morning a private watchman patrolling Vesey-street, near Washington, noticed the dull flicker of fire in the third story of No. 75 Vesey-street, an old four-story building, occupied by Frank W. Bauer as a grocery and provision store. Patrolman Scully gave the alarm from the signal-box. There was some mistake in giving the alarm through which the firemen lost several precious minutes. The men of Engine No. 29, in Fulton-street, say that 72 was struck first, and immediately afterward 52, and they were harnessed up and ready for a start a considerable time before they knew where they were wanted. Within one minute and a half from the time that they obtained the necessary information they had their line of hose laid on and playing. Chief of Battalion Rowe, as soon as he saw the extent of the fire, gave the second alarm, summoning all the companies in his battalion. The firemen all agree that the blaze then seemed to have made most headway in the second story. Ladders were placed against the walls, the windows were broken in, and soon the streams of 12 engines were directed as much on the flames as the obstructions of high-piled packages of goods permitted. There was a large quantity of inflammable material on all the floors, but this was, in a measure, counteracted by the wet nature of most of the merchandise. The fire was discovered at about 3:30 A. M., and it progressed for an hour even after the firemen had laid on all their appliances. The third and fourth stories were blazing vigorously, and the flames had burst through the roof before the water got the advantage. The building had an old-fashioned peaked roof on the front half, and the gable ends joined the roof of No. 77 Vesey-street, occupied by Moses & Co., tea-dealers. Smoke was seen in the upper story of the tea warehouse, and the firemen broke in its windows, and poured in several streams of water. It was afterward found that the flames had made some progress among the tea boxes, having effected entrance at the point where the two roofs joined.

The fire was under control just an hour and a half after the alarm was given, and a few minutes afterward all the engines were dismissed, except No. 29, which, with Hook and Ladder No. 8, was left to do the "wetting-down" as it is called—that is, deluge the burned portion so as to provide against smoldering embers renewing the blaze. Chief of Battalion Rowe, with Foreman Van Horn, then entered the building to look for advantageous places from which to direct their efforts. The stairway, which was near the centre of the building, had been burned away, as well as the hatches of a contiguous hoistway, so that they had an unobstructed view clear up through the burned roof. A ladder belonging to No. 10 Company was elevated through the hoistway, and several firemen, headed by Rowe, sprang to the floor of the second story. A line of hose was carried through the first story and up the ladder. Altogether, at least 15 firemen were on the first or second floor when, without an alarming sound or motion, the roof caved in, and with it a large section of the brick party-wall joining No. 75. The beams of the floors had been so charred by the fire that the heavy weight so precipitated was hardly even checked, but roof, walls, beams, and boxes of merchandise were tumbled together down to the floor of the first story. The sound of the crash was deafening, and it was succeeded by a stillness that was broken by the cries of eight firemen who were buried in the ruins. Robinson, of the hook and ladder company, was about midway of the ladder, handling a section of the hose, when the collision of the heavy timbers with the ladder gave him an impulsion that threw him back beyond the line of the tumbling walls. The men were too much bewildered at first to know where to begin in the work of freeing their buried comrades. An alarm recalled all the engines and companies that had been dismissed, and then all hands began the work of disinterring the living.

Chief Bates and Assistant Shea were speedily on the spot and directing the labors of the men. Foreman Reeves, of the hook and ladder company, soon managed to extricate himself, and had been struck by a falling beam, but another had propped against the wall and shielded him from very serious damage. Chief of Battalion Rowe was found near the hoistway. His head was crushed by the timbers near where the stairway had been. As the firemen walked over the beams a few feet further on, they heard the voice of another imprisoned comrade imploring them to walk easier, as they were under them. "Help me, and quick, too," he cried; "I can't stand it much longer." It proved to be Hope, of the hook and ladder company, who had been standing on the ladder just even with the floor of the second story. He had been struck by a falling billet, and when he recovered consciousness he found his body imprisoned by beams, one of which lying across his breast made respiration very difficult. Only his head was free. His comrades, by propping up the superincumbent beams, succeeded in extricating him. Reagan lay next to him, so closely pinned down that he could not move a hand. Hogan, of Engine No. 29, lay so near to Reagan that, by stretching out the one free hand, he touched the lantern which hung on Reagan's arm. Hogan's leg was doubled up under him and the other was so closely fixed that when he was pulled out his rubber boot was left in the wreck. This was the only loss which was a source of great embarrassment to the rescuers at the commencement of their labors, was supplied by a calcium light. Commissioners King, Perley, and Gorman joined in the work of rescue, and Commissioner Brennan was early on the ground with surgeons and ambulances for the relief of the injured. As soon as one of the men was taken out he was sent to the Chambers-Street Hospital, his wounds dressed, and then taken home if his injuries were not too serious. Foreman John W. Irving was found lying between two packing boxes near the top of the ruins. None of the men were touching him, but a bloody line down the left side of his face showed where a severe blow had fallen. He was dead, and probably had not survived the fall longer than a few minutes. The floor fell in at 5:45, and the last man was not rescued until after 9 o'clock.

The following is the record of the dead and injured:

JOHN W. IRVING, Engine No. 29, killed. Severe contusion of left temple.

WILLIAM ROWE, Chief of Battalion, No. 38 Murray-street, severe wounds and contusions about the head. Wounds dressed at Chambers-Street Hospital and sent home.

FOREMAN VAN HORN, Engine No. 29, crushed on the head and shoulders. Sent home.

JOHN HOPE, fireman, of Hook and Ladder Company No. 8, wounded over right eye by falling timbers; bruised on breast, side, and legs. Doing well at the Chambers-Street Hospital.

DENIS REGAN, fireman, Engine No. 29, residing at No. 230 East Fifty-ninth-street, injured internally; suffering from shock. At Bellevue Hospital. Recovery doubtful.

HENRY JONES, fireman, Engine No. 29. Back injured, shoulder crushed, and scalp-wounds. Sent home.

THOMAS H. HOGAN, fireman, Engine No. 29, residing at No. 25 Rutgers-street. Contusions of head and eyes. Bellevue Hospital, doing well.

FOREMAN MICHAEL REEVES, Hook and Ladder Company No. 10., No. 42 North Moore-street. Scalp wounds and contusions. Sent home.

JOHN MCKOWEN, fireman, Hook and Ladder Company No. 10. Scalp wounds. Sent home.

Irving's body was sent to the engine-house in Fulton-street. His father, ex-Assemblyman James Irving, was informed of his sudden death, and with the mother of the young man called at the engine-house. The grief of the parents was very affecting. Irving's wife was also brought to see him. He was laid out on a rude bench in the reading-room of the engine-house. His wife was overcome with grief on seeing her husband. Kneeling beside him she gave herself up to an abandonment of grief that forced his hardy comrades to mingle their tears with hers. Irving leaves also three young children. He became a fireman about a year ago, and served in the same companies before he was transferred to Engine No. 29, about two months ago. Brief as had been his service he won great credit for daring and efficiency. "I knew that he'd never stay with us long," said a comrade of Engine No. 29. "He was not very strong in health, but that wasn't the reason. He never found any place too hot or too dangerous for him."

Coroner Woltman and Deputy Cushman took the steps preliminary to an inquest, and gave the burial permit. Dr. Cushman ascertained by superficial autopsy that Irving's skull was not broken, and as far as could be ascertained no other necessarily mortal injuries were sustained by him. He attributes his death to concussion of the brain and shock. F. W. Bauer, proprietor of the burned store, did not learn of his loss until late in the afternoon. He is a member of the Council of Elizabeth, N. J., and waited there yesterday morning to attend a caucus. When he arrived and saw the wreck of his property he was for a time too dazed to be able to give intelligent answers to questions. He says he and his clerks closed the store according to custom at 7 P. M. on Monday. The keys were left with Wellbrock, who keeps a saloon at Vesey and Greenwich streets. Mr. Bauer says that there was only two gallons of oil in the stock of the building. One large heater in the store-room he knows was in safe condition when he left. Another small stove stood in the third story, where he bottled his liquors. His clerks say that there was more than half burned out when they left for the night. The origin of the fire is something for which Mr. Bauer is unable to offer a plausible theory, and the investigation of the Fire Marshal has not elucidated the mystery. Bauer was unable to even approximate his loss. Until a few weeks ago he was carrying $17,000 insurance. He then reduced it to $10,000, distributed as follows: Park, $3,000; Firemen's, $3,000; Hope, $2,000; Ulmen, $2,000; Continental, $2,000.

The reports of a commercial agency give Frank W. Bauer a poor record, on account of his failure in August, 1877. At the death of his father-in-law considerable real estate came to him, which he endeavored to carry, and up to a short time previous to his failure claimed to be worth $50,000 net. The schedules filed on the time of his failure showed only $7,191 real assets, while the liabilities were $15,114. He obtained a compromise at 50 cents on the dollar, but since then he has had no credit. He started the business in 1866, with a capital of $700.

C. D. Blackburn & Co., dealers in butter and cheese, occupied the basement of No. 75, and lost by water damage $4,000, on which they had $1,500 insurance in the Phœnix, of Brooklyn. Moses & Co., of Nos. 77 and 79 Vesey-street, were damaged considerably by water, as their tea stock was chiefly in the upper story. They were unable even to approximate their loss, which was amply covered by a total insurance of $30,000. The buildings Nos. 75, 77, and 79, belong to A. B. Wetmore, whose loss on No. 75, is not more than $4,000, and $500 will cover that sustained by the building occupied by Moses & Co. Richardson's stock of groceries in No. 73 was damaged to the extent of $1,000, on which he has $5,000 insurance. The total loss will not exceed $35,000.

THE MUTUAL LIFE COMPANY.

ACTION OF THE PROTESTING POLICY-HOLDERS—A WAR TO BE WAGED.

The Executive Committee of the protesting policy-holders of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of this City, were busily engaged yesterday in forwarding to all the policy-holders of the company whose names they could obtain, a printed copy of the preamble and resolutions passed at a meeting held at the Fifth-Avenue Hotel on the evening of the 24 inst. Mr. H. A. Johnson, a banker at No. 98 Broadway, is President of the committee; Mr. C. N. Jordan, at No. 20 Nassau-street, the Treasurer, and Mr. J. W. McCulloh, one of the Receivers of the New-Jersey Midland Railway, at No. 93 Liberty-street, is the Secretary. These officers were chosen at a meeting of the Executive Committee held on Monday, and their purpose is to march, if possible, every policy-holder, so as to get them to revoke their proxies, which they have given to officers and others connected with the company, and thus take away from the latter much of the power they now possess. The preamble and resolutions will also be served on the President and Trustees of the company. The preamble sets forth the grievances which the protesting policy-holders believe themselves to be sustaining by the action of the company in its new departure in life insurance. It is followed by eight resolutions, as follows:

First—That we condemn the whole of this new plan and device, from its very inception, as a violation of the fundamental principles of mutuality upon which the institution is founded; as a practice which, if not absolutely illegal, yet runs so near the verge of illegality that no faithful Trustee should jeopard his trust by venturing to tread the path; as a method founded on unjust treatment of the retiring members, from whose necessities this so-called "special fund" has been wrung; as a deviation from that straightforward course which we should ever characterize the company in all its acts; as a transaction which has neither compensation nor justification in the "surplus" it is alleged to create; into the company or in the increased business which it attracts; and as an injustice to the old policy-holders, to which they should not submit.

Second—That we firmly believe this new practice did not receive that full and thoughtful consideration before its adoption which its serious character and consequences demanded; and we hope that, upon a careful reconsideration of the subject, the Trustees will be satisfied that a grave error has been committed, and would be promptly corrected, and this objectionable new plan forever abandoned.

The third instructs the Executive Committee to mail a copy of the resolutions to the Trustees of the company, with the request that they immediately discontinue the new plan, and return to the old and uniform rates. The fourth is as follows:

Fourth—That for the purpose of ascertaining what injury, if any, has been inflicted upon old policy-holders, and determining what remedy, if any, is available to redress such injury—having proper regard to any equitable or moral rights of innocent participants in this new plan—the Executive Committee are instructed to obtain from the company a statement of the amount of insurance issued upon this new plan; the amount of the rebate allowed to parties thereunder; what entries relating thereto have been made upon the books of the company; what amount has been paid, or agreed to be paid, to agents as commissions on this new business, and what amount has been spent, or obligations incurred, for advertising, printing, and other expenses connected with this new plan.

The fifth recommends to the policy-holders to accompany their future payments of premiums with a protest against the continuance of the new system until its practice has ceased.

The sixth appoints Messrs. Cyrus W. Field, M. B. Fielding, C. L. Perkins, and the President, Secretary, and Treasurer, or any seven of them as an Executive Committee, who are instructed to open communication with their fellow-policy-holders throughout the country, and to invite and procure their co-operation in the steps they may deem best to take, so as to concern the rights and interests of the old policy-holders of the company, and for that purpose to obtain from the company their names and addresses. And should the Trustees decline to abandon the practice against which they protest, the Executive Committee are instructed to procure such legal advice, and to take such legal steps as may be necessary and proper in the premises, and to give public notice that they will regard the policy of death claims which may occur under policies issued upon the new plan. The other resolutions are:

Seventh—That this meeting recommend to the policy-holders to revoke their existing proxies, and that an effort be made to secure legislation which shall prevent the use of proxies issued for a longer term than 60 days preceding an election, and that no proxies shall be valid if in the hands of any officer or employe of the company, and such further legislation as may secure a thorough audit and inspection of all the affairs of the company.

Eighth—That a subscription list be opened, and the policy-holders be invited to send to the Treasurer, C. N. Jordan, at No. 20 Nassau-street, New-York City, such sums as they may subscribe thereto.

Mr. J. W. McCulloh, the Secretary, is constantly in receipt of letters from those policy-holders who wished to join in the movement against the company, and their numbers are increasing rapidly. Mr. F. S. Winston, President of the Mutual Life, said that the company believed their action to be right, and in the best interests of all the policy-holders, and that they were prepared to thoroughly contest the matter if a fight should be forced upon them.

NEW-YORK HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS AND ANNUAL REPORTS OF THE ASSOCIATION.

At the annual meeting of the New-York Historical Society last evening a paper was read by Mr. William Allen Butler on the life and literary labors of the late Evart A. Duykinck, a member of the society. Mr. Frederic A. De Peyster, the President, occupied the chair. A number of reports were submitted on minor subjects. The annual report showed that among the contributions to the library during the past year were 619 bound volumes, 1,300 pamphlets, 4 maps, 27 volumes of newspapers, and 27 objects of history. The name of Hon. William E. Gladstone was proposed among others for honorary membership. The Treasurer's report showed that the total receipts for the year were $44,799 60, including a balance on hand in January, 1878, of $11,425 27, together with some large investments. The total disbursements in the same period were $44,035 39, leaving a credit balance of $764 11. The total of invested funds is $46,900; balance to the credit of the publication fund, $3,935 62, and to the credit of the John D. Jones fund, $2,088 06. There were 32 deaths and 65 resignations of members during the year, resulting in a diminution of the membership. The new officers elected last evening for the current year are as follows:

President, Frederic De Peyster; First Vice-President, Charles O'Conor; Second Vice-President, Benjamin H. Field; Foreign Corresponding Secretary, Erastus C. Benedict; Domestic Corresponding Secretary, Edward F. De Lancey; Recording Secretary, Andrew Warner; Treasurer, Benjamin B. Sherman; Librarian, Jacob B. Moore. The new names on this list are those of Messrs. O'Conor, Benedict, De Lancey, and Jacob B. Moore, who succeed, respectively, in their offices, the late William Cullen Bryant, George H. Moore, Evart A. Duykinck, and J. Austin Stevens.

IMPORTANT SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

HOUSES ON THE LINE OF THE ELEVATED RAILROAD BRINGING FANCY PRICES.

One of the most important sales of real estate that has taken place in some time was held in the Exchange Sales-room yesterday forenoon. The sale was in partition of the Tonnele estate, under an order from the Supreme Court, and included the five four-story brick buildings Nos. 209 to 217 Sixth-avenue, and the four-story brown-stone-front building No. 103 West Fourteenth-street, adjoining. The Sixth-avenue buildings included a plot of land 103 feet 3 inches by 78 feet, or an average per lot of 20 feet 7 4-5 inches front by 78 feet deep each. The other lot is 22 feet front by 103 feet 3 inches deep. Great interest was attached to the sale for many reasons, but for none more than as an indication of the effect of elevated railroads upon avenue property. There was the largest attendance in years, and the competition was more spirited than has been known since the panic. The corner house, No. 209 Sixth-avenue, was purchased by F. G. Watmore for $52,000; No. 211 by L. G. Tonnele, one of the heirs, for $53,000; Nos. 213 and 215 by Owen Jones, for $25,000 and $25,050 respectively, and No. 217 by F. W. Mitchell for $25,200. The Fourteenth-street house was purchased by Marshall O. Roberts, who owns the Lyceum Theatre next door, for $23,000. These are all superlatively good prices, and will, dealers say, impart a buoyancy to the market which it has not felt for a long time past. There were also sold on account of the same estate a four-story brick house, with lot 25 by 98, No. 227 East Tenth-street, north side, 125 feet west of First-avenue, to Joseph Fox for $9,700; three three-story brick houses, with lots each 25 by 113.6, Nos. 253, 255, and 257 Tompkins-place, east side, 200 feet north of Degraw-street Brooklyn, to N. G. Wemore, H. Gardner, and John Chaffey for $4,950, $4,000, and $5,250, respectively, and 10 acres of land in the City of Oswego, N. Y., to John Tonnele, one of the heirs, for $1,100. By the terms, 50 per cent. of the purchase money may remain on bond and mortgage at 6 per cent. interest per annum. The proceeds accounted $309,850.

ALVORD CHOSEN SPEAKER.

A HARMONIOUS REPUBLICAN CAUCUS

THE HALL OF THE ASSEMBLY CROWDED WITH MEMBERS AND SPECTATORS—EULOGISTIC SPEECHES IN FAVOR OF THE CANDIDATES—MR. ALVORD NOMINATED BY 52 TO 43 FOR SLOAN—GOSSIP ABOUT THE MAKE-UP OF THE COMMITTEES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 8.—At last the contest is ended. Thomas G. Alvord, of Syracuse, has won the fight for the Speakership, after one of the bravest, most careful, and most stubborn contests for the place that has ever been made in the capital, and yet one of the best-tempered and quietest of canvasses, free, in a remarkable degree, from intemperate speech on either side.

From the moment the Assembly adjourned at noon until 7 o'clock, the Alvord men went about declaring confidently that their work was ended, and that they were sure of receiving 55 votes for their candidate in the caucus. They would not admit a doubt about the result. While they were confident, they were not so boisterous as they had been. Their change of manner, and perhaps the discovery at a late moment by Mr. Sloan's friends that the Oswego candidate would really need more votes than he had been able to count or gain promise for, sobered all the adherents of Mr. Sloan and gave countenance to the declarations of their opponents. During the afternoon an incident occurred that did not at all encourage Mr. Sloan. Mr. J. Theodore Sawyer, of Tioga, who had expressed his intention of voting for Mr. Sloan, went to his room and told him frankly that his views had changed; that he could not vote as he had intended to do, and that he had decided to vote for Mr. Alvord. Among the Sloan men it was asserted that Mr. A. B. Cornell, whose presence had been accounted for here by the fact that he was invited to the reception at the Capitol, had not been an indifferent and impartial observer, but had used his influence among Assemblymen and Senators to further Alvord's interests, and had assisted in completing the number of votes necessary for a choice. This assertion was stoutly denied by Alvord's friends.

At 7 o'clock to-night the Assembly Chamber in the new Capitol was brilliantly lighted, and Republicans were pouring up the stairway and into the seats. Many of the Democrats came as spectators. Among the early arrivals was Mr. Alvord, who climbed the long stairway without evincing weakness or fatigue. He took the seat he had occupied during the morning session. Mr. Sloan came in some time afterward, and he also took the seat he had occupied at the 12-o'clock meeting. Gen. Husted was on the left in the neighborhood he has always preferred. Hayes and Strahan were behind him. Gen. Sharpe was on the extreme right; Hepburn was on the left, and the members generally were distributed all over the hall without much regard to arrangement. The galleries were black with spectators, and the whole space behind the members' seats was filled.

At 7:30 precisely Mr. Husted, as Chairman of the caucus committee, rapped sharply, in his own characteristic way, and the caucus was in order. He nominated for Chairman Mr. J. Theodore Sawyer, of Tioga, and the nomination having been approved, Mr. Sawyer was escorted to his place by Mr. Wadsworth, of Livingston, and Mr. Hayes, of New-York. Charles P. Ingersoll, of Chautauqua, and William Leslie Noyes, of Cayuga, were made Secretaries, and Titus Sheard, of Herkimer, and Harvey J. Husd, of Erie, were selected as tellers. The roll was then called, when it was found that all the Republicans were present except Mr. Curtis, of Chenango, the number present being 96. The Chairman then asked the further pleasure of the caucus.

Mr. Strahan, of New-York, rose and said that, with pride and pleasure, he proposed for speaker of the Assembly, the oldest and ablest legislator in the State, Hon. Thomas G. Alvord, of Onondaga. As to the speaker, he had presided with great honor for two years; he had twice been Lieutenant-Governor, and his legislative career was begun when the Speaker was scarcely more than born. There had never been a more prominent or potent figure in the State than he. They should remember that the man of wisdom is the man of years. Gov. Alvord, though venerable, preserves a force and vigor which are exceptional. He possesses, in a remarkable degree, that which should accompany old age—love, honor, and troops of friends. Mr. Strahan spoke of the vital importance of selecting a Speaker at this time who could conserve the interests of the Republican Party, and that Republicans in the Assembly should proceed so as to escape the criticism of the weak and exercise the power of the strong. He set forth at length Gov. Alvord's experience and capacity, and claimed that it would be a fitting thing to crown his years of service by making him Speaker in the new Capitol. The people of the State looked for it, and the choice of Gov. Alvord will meet their approval.

Mr. William H. Steele, of Oswego, followed Mr. Strahan. He presented the name of Mr. George B. Sloan, in a long and very uninteresting speech, full of sound and trite proverbs. He was much too long in coming to the point. He alluded to Mr. Sloan as free from trammels, did faint justice to his able services in the Speaker's chair and on the floor, and paid a passing tribute of respect to the opposing candidate. His closing sentence, in which he spoke of the spotless record of Mr. Sloan, was applauded by many of the members, but the nomination was not received with more noise than that of Mr. Alvord.

The Chair called for the tellers to take their places, but as Mr. Hepburn, of St. Lawrence, rose, he was recognized, and he went on to second Mr. Sloan's nomination. He dwelt eloquently upon Mr. Sloan's record as legislator, his sterling character, and known ability. He spoke also in enthusiastic terms of Mr. Alvord, from whom he acknowledged he had received his first lessons in politics. No man would go further to defend and help him, but the Assembly would fail to comprehend the magnitude of the occasion if it were controlled by personal considerations. Sympathy, with the poetic propriety of the occasion, might dictate that the veteran legislator should be elected Speaker, but the question was, Shall the State be kept by the Republican Party next Autumn. From the seeds sown here will be largely reaped the harvests of 1879 and 1880. He praised Mr. Sloan for his services as member and Speaker, and ended by declaring that he did not believe the Republican banner could be placed in purer or safer charge than that of George B. Sloan, of Oswego.

Mr. William D. Brennan, of Franklin, a new man, supported the nomination of Mr. Sloan, whose election he looked upon as desirable, in order that the Speaker might be an exponent of the intelligence, integrity, and purposes of the masses of the people.

Just as the tellers were about to advance, Gen. James W. Husted, of Rockland, called out: "Mr. Chairman," and stepped out into the aisle with a spring. The two gentlemen in nomination, he went on to say, were well-known to all the Assembly. They needed no eulogy. Each had made his own social and political record. The man does not live who dares question the integrity of either of them. He had served with both of them on the floor. He had served with both of them in the chair. He was surprised that a criticism of the character of either had been made; that a parallel should be drawn. This was neither the time nor the place for such remarks. What are the qualities that we require in a Speaker? They are accuracy, courtesy, knowledge of parliamentary law, and above all things, knowledge of human nature. He seconded the nomination of a man who, in the last respect, was peerless. He seconded the nomination of Hon. Thomas G. Alvord, "the old man eloquent of Onondaga."

The House was awakened by the speech of Mr. Husted, which was delivered in such clear and ringing tones, that it was heard in the remotest corner of the great stone room. No acoustic difficulties prevented it from reaching everywhere, and when he concluded there was a burst of warm applause.

Mr. Jonathan Ogden, of Kings, a man of pleasing aspect, with gray hair and side whiskers, a bright complexion, strong voice, erect frame, and ready address, seconded Mr. Sloan's nomination, expressing the high regard which he entertained for him when they had associated in the Legislature of 1876.

The speeches here ended, the tellers took their stand before the Clerk's desk, and the roll was called. As it proceeded the members advanced with their ballots and dropped them into the box. Curtis, the member who had been absent at the first roll-call, came in. While the tellers counted the ballots they were surrounded by an anxious crowd. Before the result was announced the crowd scattered right and left. "Alvord has it," "It's Alvord," "The old man wins," and other expressions were heard passing down the rows of seats. The report reached the mass of spectators at the back of the room just as the tellers announced the result. Ninety-five votes had been cast. Of this number, Alvord had received 52, and Sloan 43, and Alvord was the choice of the caucus.

From the midst of the spectators a yell arose. Alvord tried to restrain it by waving his arm, but it continued until Mr. Sloan stepped upon the floor, just at the foot of the centre aisle. He was seen quickly, the applause ceased, and, in his clear, firm voice, he said he desired to return his sincere thanks to the gentlemen who had so warmly and ably assisted him in his canvass. They had shown a degree of constancy which he deeply appreciated and which merited a gratitude it was difficult for him to find words to express. After a contest warm and exciting, but entirely free from bitterness or ascerbity of feeling, the caucus had decided to confer the honor of the Speakership upon his distinguished friend from Onondaga. "and from the bottom of my heart I heartily concur in that decision." He assured his recent opponents that he and those who had supported him would feel it a pleasure to assist the distinguished veteran in making the session of 1879 a successful one. The motion that the nomination be made formally and by acclamation. The nomination was so made, and immediately there was a rush of Mr. Alvord's friends to shake hands with and congratulate the veteran. Strahan, Husted, Hayes, and Brennan were among the first to take his hand.

The nominations now in order were those in interest thereafter. Mr. Edward M. Johnson was nominated for Clerk by acclamation, Gen. George H. Sharpe taking the opportunity of making his first speech by seconding the nomination. Charles A. Orr, of Erie, was re-elected Sergeant-at-Arms. Henry Wheeler, of Rensselaer, was elected Door-keeper. Harrison Clark, of Columbia, was made First Assistant Door-keeper; Francis Maher, Second Assistant Door-keeper, and Worden E. Payne, stenographer, the nominations being made on motion of Mr. Husted. The Chairman was request d to appoint a caucus committee of five, and the caucus then adjourned.

The usual gossip about the formation of committees began immediately. The Sloan men were inclined to be indifferent about what course is pursued in making up the committees. Defeat was too fresh upon them to permit them to think with patience about anything else. While Mr. Alvord was congratulated, Mr. Sloan was also visited by his firmest friends, who took hand with him and congratulated him upon the warm support he had received. Mr. Alvord was not prepared to say anything about the probable make-up of his committees. It is understood, however, that the Cities Committee will go to Husted; the Ways and Means, as a matter of course, to Sloan; the Judiciary to Husted, if he prefers it to Cities, and to Strahan, if Husted should decline it. Hayes, it is reported, is set down for Canals, although Hurd, of Erie, is known to desire it. The Committee on Railroads i said to be intended for Gen. George H. Sharpe. The apportionment committee will probably be led by Husted. Sawyer, of Tioga, is to have Banks. Villages goes to Doyce, of Saratoga; insurance to Knowles, of Albany, and commerce and navigation to Talmadge, of Brooklyn.

Of cours , it is impossible to learn exactly who voted for Alvord, but from a Sloan list in the possession of one of his friends, his vote was as follows, with one name omitted: Messrs. Allen, Bradley, Brennan, Bridges, Brundage, Case, Chase, Chickering, Clark, Evans, Fish, Grant, Hepburn, Mann, McAllister, McNaught, Millspaugh, Munson, Noyes, Ogden, Palmer, Peck, Pitcher, Pendergast, Reynolds, Robson, Sang, Saunders, Sharpe, Sheard, Sherman, Skinner, Steele, Stephenson, Terry, Titus, Tozier, Varnum, Wadsworth, Warner, O. Wheeler, W. F. Wheeler—42.

For Alvord—Ackerman, Arnold, Braman, Cady, Curtis, Deane, Deyoe, Duguid, Eidman, Gentsch, Glidden, Greer, Griggs, Halsey, Hayes, Hoysradt, Hurd, Husted, Ingersoll, Johnson, Knowles, Langbein, Low, Marean, McKeel, McQueen, Mooers, Peek, Perry, Pool, Roberts, Sanders, Sawyer, Shult, Simmons, Simmonson, Stegman, Strahan, Stewart, Sullard, Sutherland, Swift, Talmadge, Thomas, Travis, Trowbridge, Van Valkenburgh, Wakely, Wells, Weston, Willis, Young—52.

ENGLAND'S UNSETTLED TRADE.

DISQUIETUDE ON THE LONDON STOCK MARKET — RAILWAY STRIKERS RESUMING WORK—THE THREATENED COAL MINE TROUBLES.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—The feeling of disquietude regarding banking credit continued to form a feature of business in the stock market yesterday. Discussions of a doubtful character were heard respecting two or three establishments which are believed to be tried a good deal by the pressure of the times. The speculative movement in Erie made further progress. Other United States railways were dull. Canadian railways show some recovery on recent prices, on a renewal of the amalgamation rumors regarding the Grand Trunk and Great Western lines. The Times, in its financial article this morning, says: "These rumors are only traceable to speculative sources."

The goods guards of the Midland Railway have resumed work at Rowsley and Kettring. These are two of the most important shunting places on the road, and as work has been resumed there the strike is considered by the railway officials as broken up. The men have also resumed work at Carlisle, Skipton, and several other places. Applications for work are being made by the men at Leicester.

The strike among the seamen at Sydney, New South Wales, against the employment of Chinese sailors, has terminated.

The dock-yard laborers at Hull have returned to work on their employers' terms.

The coal masters of Sheffield have telegraphed the delegates of their workmen that it will be unnecessary for them to attend Thursday's meeting, as the determination of the men to resist is already known to the masters. The men have now been asked to consent to arbitration, but have not yet given an answer to the proposal.

BARNSLEY, Jan. 8.—The decision of the colliers on Monday not to submit to a reduction of wages has already sent up the price of coal, and in the event of a strike it is expected that prices will rise rapidly, because the stocks are very low. It is generally believed that the masters, at their meeting on Thursday, the 9th inst., will offer a compromise on the question of wages.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—The railway signal men in London have decided not to strike until after the interview with the Directors on the 14th inst. On the other hand, great disorganization of traffic is reported.

IN MEMORY OF MORTON M'MICHAEL.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 8.—A large meeting of the citizens of Philadelphia was held at noon to-day in the Common Council Chamber to take action relative to the death of Hon. Morton McMichael. Mayor Stokley presided, and Daniel M. Fox and George H. Boker acted as Secretaries. Addresses were made by Hon. Eli K. Price, Gen. Robert Patterson, William D. Lewis, Col. John W. Forney, and Daniel Dougherty. Resolutions, expressive of regret at the loss to the community in the death of Mr. McMichael, were adopted, and the meeting adjourned.

THE CUSTOM-HOUSE CASES.

A NEW COMPLICATION LIKELY TO ARISE.

INDICATIONS THAT GEN. MERRITT'S NOMINATION WILL BE REJECTED—PRESIDENT HAYES SAID TO BE CONTEMPLATING HIS REAPPOINTMENT AFTER THE ADJOURNMENT OF THE SENATE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—The Senate Committee on Commerce will meet to-morrow, and it is expected that the New-York Custom-house cases will be considered, and possibly disposed of. Senator Conkling is still exceedingly reticent regarding the action which he proposes to take in the matter. It is generally understood here, however, that the committee, at his request, will report in favor of rejecting the nomination of Gen. Merritt and the other gentlemen whose names were sent in with his. The contest will thus be transferred to the Senate, and there are indications that it will result in a refusal to confirm Merritt. Should this be the outcome, the position of Collector under the Tenure of Office act would remain vacant until the 4th of March next; at least, that is the construction put upon the law here.

The portions of the Revised Statutes bearing upon the subject provide that during any recess of the Senate the President is authorized in his discretion to suspend any civil officer appointed by and with the consent of the Senate, except Judges of the courts of the United States, until the end of the next session of the Senate, and to designate some suitable person, subject to be removed in his discretion by the designation of another, to perform the duties of such suspended officer in the meantime; and if the Senate, during such session, shall refuse to advise and consent to an appointment in the place of any suspended officer, then, and not otherwise, the President shall nominate another person as soon as practicable to the same session of the Senate for the office. It is generally accepted construction of this law it is believed that if Gen. Merritt is rejected the President will be obliged to send to the present Senate, some time before its adjournment, the name of another person to be Collector. On the other hand, however, it can now be definitely stated that the President and his advisers believe that he can judge himself of the "practicability" of sending in another name before the 4th of March, and that he will decline to do so, reserving the right, after the end of the session, to designate Gen. Merritt again to perform the duties of Collector. Some of the best jurists here hold that such action would be clearly in opposition to the law, but there can be no doubt that the President holds the view of the case stated, and that he will do everything in his power to prevent Gen. Arthur from returning to the Collector's office.

AN ATTACK ON THE BURNSIDE BILL

A CONVINCING ARGUMENT AGAINST THE ABOLITION OF THE NATIONAL ARSENALS—THE GOVERNMENT MAKING ARMS AT A CHEAPER RATE THAN PRIVATE MANUFACTURERS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8—Senator Burnside was unfortunate to-day with his Army bill, which was fixed for a special order, but which was driven over—first by the Patent bill, and next by the announcement of the death of Representative Hartridge. That portion of the bill which practically abolishes the manufacture of arms and munitions of war by the Government has received a vigorous attack from the Ordnance Department of the Army, through a report made by Col. Benton, commandant of the Springfield Arsenal. The Association of Manufacturers of Arms, Ammunition, and Equipments, of the United States, in a memorial presented to the Burnside Commission, stated that the cost of manufacturing arms at the Government Armory at Springfield was largely in excess of the average cost of manufacture by private firms, and presented figures to show that the average cost of each Springfield rifle made at that armory during the year 1877 was $115. The memorialists said there were private arms-manufacturing companies in this country which would contract to make Springfield rifles, identical with those made at the National Armory, for $15 each. In making up their figures to ascertain the average cost of manufacturing a rifle at Springfield, the memorialists placed the reserved value of the Springfield Armory at $7,000,000, and assumed that that amount of capital is invested for the special purpose of manufacturing arms. The injustice of such a calculation is pointed out by Col. Benton in his paper, which shows that the figures given include the stock of field artillery, small-arms, munitions, &c., now stored at the armory, some of the small-arms stored being those which were purchased during the rebellion from the manufacturers who join in the memorial. Col. Benton also shows that the year 1877 does not fairly represent the production of arms at the armory. He gives the aggregate production for the five years ending June 30, 1878, which shows an average yearly production of over 18,000 stand of arms, instead of 7,000, as stated by the memorialists, which would place the cost of each rifle at $38 61, instead of $115 as calculated by the memorialists.

Col. Benton furnishes tables showing the number of rifle muskets produced at the armory during the rebellion, and the average cost per rifle, which was $11 70. He also furnishes tables showing the number of rifles of the Springfield pattern purchased from private parties during the same period, the average price of which was $20. As the Government manufactured over 800,000 muskets during the rebellion, the saving to the United States from 1861 to 1865 was about $7,500,000, or a sum more than twice the entire cost of the Springfield Armory since its establishment. In the face of such facts and figures as are presented by Col. Benton the Burnside Commission will find it difficult to convince the country that the public arsenals should be dismantled and the privilege of equipping the Army with ordnance stores be given to private firms.

MORTALITY AMONG CONGRESSMEN.

THE THIRD DEATH OF THE PRESENT SESSION—SEVERAL OTHER REPRESENTATIVES SERIOUSLY ILL—PROBABLE RETIREMENT OF JUSTICE HUNT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—Both houses adjourned at an early hour to-day on account of the death of Representative Hartridge, of Georgia, who died at his rooms in this city this morning at 6 o'clock. He had been sick for several days with pneumonia, but until yesterday morning was not considered ill enough to demand the presence of other friends than were here. Early yesterday morning, however, his disease took an unfavorable turn, and his wife was telegraphed for, but was stopped on her way at Wilmington, N. C., by the announcement of his death. Mr. Hartridge represented the Savannah district, and was the youngest, as well as the most prominent member of the Georgia delegation in Congress. He was a member of the House Judiciary Committee. Both the Senate and House appointed committees to accompany the remains to Savannah, and they will leave for that point to-morrow afternoon. The death of Mr. Hartridge is the third that has taken place among the members of the House this session. Several other members are now ill, some of them dangerously so. Alexander H. Stephens is again very sick. Mr. Schleicher, of Texas, is also seriously ill with pneumonia.

Justice Hunt, of the Supreme Court, who was stricken with paralysis a few days ago, is somewhat better to-day, and has partially recovered his power of speech. He may get much better, but will never be able to assume the active duties of his position again, and it is expected that David Davis, of Illinois, will, in a day or two, present a bill providing for his retirement. Justice Hunt was appointed in 1872, and it will, therefore, take a special act to give him the benefits of the law which provides that a Judge, after holding his office for 10 consecutive years, and being 70 years of age, may resign, and for the remainder of his natural life receive his salary the same as though he were in active service. Justice Hunt is 68 years of age, and has served only six years.

The funeral services over the remains of the late Representative Hartridge will be held in the hall of the House of Representatives to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock. The two houses of Congress will attend the services, and the Chaplains of the House and Senate will both officiate. At the conclusion of the services both houses will follow the remains to the depot. The committee to convey the deceased to Georgia will leave this city on the 5:30 P. M. train.

THE REFUNDING OPERATIONS.

A PROPOSED INVESTIGATION BY THE BANKING AND CURRENCY COMMITTEE—ANOTHER CALL FOR 5-20 BONDS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—It is understood that at the next meeting of the Committee on Banking and Currency, which will be held on Friday, Mr. Hartzell, of Illinois, will present a resolution to investigate the methods of conducting the operations for the refunding of the 6 per cent. bonds, and particularly to investigate the coin balances reported by Secretary Sherman in his reply to the resolution of Judge Kelley, as being on deposit with the First National Bank of New-York, and other national banks. Mr. Hartzell claims that under a resolution of the House, passed at the last session, authorizing the Committee on Banking and Currency to ascertain the amount of gold and silver coin and bullion held and owned by the United States, that committee has full authority to make the investigation proposed by him. The report made by Secretary Sherman in response to Judge Kelley's resolution was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and that committee having been given jurisdiction of the matter, it was expected that any investigation that might be made would be conducted by it. If, however, the Committee on Banking and Currency should determine to make the investigation, it is not likely that any objection will be interposed. Secretary Sherman, in view of the controversy that has occurred over this matter, is anxious for an investigation, and believes that such an investigation would result in removing the misunderstanding which prevails in the public mind touching the funding operations of the Government and the relations of the Treasury Department with the national banks.

The Secretary of the Treasury this afternoon issued the seventy-ninth call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds of 1865, counsels of 1867. The call is for $10,000,000, of which $6,000,000 are coupon and $4,000,000 registered bonds. The principal and interest will be paid at the Treasury on and after the 8th day of April next, and the interest will close on that day. The following are descriptions of the bonds:

Coupon bonds dated July 1, 1867, namely: $50, No. 18,001 to No. 23,000, both inclusive; $100, No. 18,001 to No. 24,000, both inclusive; $500, No. 16,001 to No. 22,000, both inclusive; $1,000, No. 20,001 to No. 27,000, both inclusive; total coupon, $6,000,000.

Registered bonds, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of July, 1872, as follows: $50, No. 551 to No. 800, both inclusive; $100, No. 4,401 to No. 5,900, both inclusive; $500. No. 2,851 to No. 3,800, both inclusive; $1,000, No. 11,001, to No. 13,500, both inclusive; $5,000, No. 3,551, to No. 4,300, both inclusive; $10,000, No. 2,801 to No. 3,500, both inclusive; total registered, $4,000,000; aggregate, $10,000,000.

The subscriptions to the 4 per cent. loan today amounted to $7,113,600.

THE CAMPAIGN IN AFGHANISTAN.

SUCCESSFUL MARCH OF THE QUETTAH COLUMN ON KANDAHAR—RUMORS THAT YAKOOB KHAN IS PREPARING TO FOLLOW HIS FATHER—FIGHTS WITH MARAUDING BANDS.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—The Daily News' dispatch from Lahore says: "Gen. Stewart's occupation of Kandahar will mark the conclusion of a definite period of the war. All will then have been done that the Quettah column can possibly do before Winter. It is true that unlimited discretion is given to Gen. Stewart, and possibly he may project the occupation of Girishk, which is an important strategic position, but, unless something unforeseen occurs, the Army of Afghanistan will furnish no further intelligence of importance before the beginning of March.

The Viceroy of India telegraphs that Major Cavagnari reports rumors that Yakoob Khan is preparing to follow Shere Ali in his flight to the Russian frontier, finding himself powerless in Kabul. The Ghilzai chiefs, with the exception of Azmatullah Khan, have all sent in friendly messages.

In the action with the Suliman Khol marauders the British lost 2 killed and 10 wounded.

CALCUTTA, Jan. 8.—The band of Mahoud Waziris, who recently made an incursion into British territory, plundered the inhabitants, burned a tank, and retreated to the hills, have been cut off, with heavy loss. The Khybar Pass is now quiet. The British attacked the Suliman Khol marauders and killed 70 of them. This important operation will, it is expected, produce quiet on the frontier.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 8.—The Agence Russe (semi-official) for the first time admits that Shere Ali has entered Russian territory, saying it believes the news is correct, but that it does not believe that he was accompanied by his troops.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—A dispatch to the Standard from Hazaraplr, announces that Gen. Roberts visited the principal fort of Khost on Monday, and was saluted by the Afghan garrison. The attitude of the marauding tribes around his camp, however, is so threatening that his force passed all of Monday night under arms. The garrison at Peiwar, which was also threatened, have requested Gen. Roberts to send them reinforcements.

AFFAIRS IN GERMANY.

BISMARCK ADVOCATING PROTECTION—SATISFACTION WITH THE FRENCH ELECTIONS—THE EMPEROR WILLIAM'S HEALTH.

BERLIN, Jan. 8.—Prince Bismarck appears to be taking every opportunity for declaring himself in favor of protection. He recently wrote a long and favorable reply to a letter condemning free trade sent him by the agriculturists of the District of Stormoan.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—The Berlin correspondent of the Daily News says the German press shows, generally without distinction of party, great satisfaction with the result of the Senatorial elections in France.

The North German Gazette intimates that the Republic can reckon on the sympathy of Germany so long as its policy reflects the moderate and reasonable views of Gambetta.

A Berlin dispatch to the Times says: "The Emperor William is wonderfully well, though still obliged to carry his arm in a sling. He drives out daily with the Crown Prince or with an equerry."

LONDON, Jan. 9.—A Berlin dispatch to the Times says the Protectionists intend sending a deputation, shortly, to congratulate the Emperor on his restoration to health, and will take the opportunity of complaining of the financial policy hitherto followed by the Government.

The Emperor and Empress have given notice that they do not desire personal gifts at their golden wedding, which will be celebrated on June 11, but that they would rejoice if money instead be devoted to charity.

A DISAPPOINTING BANQUET.

THE DEMOCRATIC GATHERING AT COLUMBUS A FAILURE.

NOT THE GRAND AFFAIR THAT WAS EXPECTED—GEN. EWING'S SPEECH ON THE PRESIDENTIAL QUESTION—HEARTY RECEPTION OF GOV. BISHOP.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Jan. 8.—The long-anticipated Democratic banquet took place this evening, but the immense throng expected from distant parts has failed to appear, and the crowd falls far short of meeting the expectation of the organizers and all those present. The loudly-heralded Democratic gathering, which was expected to be of national interest, results in the meeting together of a number of Congressmen and State politicians to have a good time. Aside from the comparing of notes and the arrangement of the campaign for the Governorship, little can be said. As soon as it became generally known that Senator Thurman would not be present the great interest taken in the affair at once commenced to wane.

The attendance was less than 300. Those possessed of sufficient funds to accept the invitation of the managers, at $3 each, met at the Neil House this evening and, surrounding the banquet tables, were called to order and welcomed, on behalf of the Young Men's Democratic Club.

Gen. Ewing responded to the toast, "The next President of the United States," as follows:

We are met to commemorate the public life of one who, next to Jefferson, best represented the fundamental idea of democratic government—"equal rights to all, special privileges to none." Our Republic at its birth cast off the more obvious devices of government by which aristocracies through all time have subjugated the masses. Orders of nobility, laws of primogeniture and entail, life-tenures of political office, exemption of classes or interests from taxation—all were swept away. But in Washington's first term our forefathers unfortunately transplanted here the germ of the Bank of England, incorporated as the Bank of the United States, and sold to that private corporation the sovereign power to make money, and thus to rule the business of the people by changing at pleasure the values of their labor and property. Old Hickory struck down the bank and vindicated the vital principle of democracy that the Government should have no private corporation for a mistress to share or usurp its sovereign power. Near a half century has passed, and the people are confronted with the same question, greatly magnified in dimensions and importance. We find now a confederation of 2,000 United States banks instead of one. They are the arms of a Briarean money power, reaching every quarter of our land, and holding every business man and business interest in their grasp. The representative of the Treasury Department timidly crouches in a seat in their clearing-house, while they insolently nullify the laws.

To complete the work of degradation and subjugation of the masses, the man under whose Presidency this infamous legislation was accomplished—the worshiper and worshiped of the millionaires—is to come back to us in 1880, anointed by the corruptionists of every crowned head of Europe, to give us a strong and profligate Government, such as becomes the transition from a real to a sham Republic. Let us meet him, or whoever else may be nominated by his party, with an opposition composed of all citizens who want to preserve a Government for the people and by the people, and who can unite on a few fundamental propositions in opposition to the aggressions of the money power—the substitution of greenbacks for bank notes, the unlimited coinage of the old silver dollar, and the prompt and absolute stoppage of all increase of the bonded debt for resumption purposes. Let us postpone further question about resumption until the day arrive, and all shall see that no other distracting questions not of instant and supreme importance. Let us settle them when, by a united and gigantic effort, we shall have broken the political sceptre of the money power. If there be Democrats who are devotees of bank money, who are hostile to unlimited coinage of the old silver dollar, and who would plunge the country yet deeper in bonded debt to fasten on it the slavery of gold prices and payment, let them go, and their desertion, emphasizing our sincerity, will draw to our ranks two where we lose one. If we should lose New-York, New-Jersey, and Connecticut, which I do not believe, we will gain Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin. And even if, after having secured a united and homogenous Democracy, devoted to great and lasting principles and measures, we should lose the first battle, it were far better than to win it by a false union of discordant elements on a deceitful platform.

Shall we shall our leader be? No man who expects to win the Presidency by a suit in chancery, or an Electoral Commission, or by money. Let us have a pure and brave man, on a plain and candid platform. Let it be resolved that the result shall be ascertained and declared according to the immemorial usages of the Government, no matter what powers of force or fraud may attempt to defeat the verdict. It is to be a fight for political supremacy between manhood and money—between the people who bore the heat and burden of the war and an aristocracy which grew and fattened on their sacrifices. Let our leader be one who is with the people, heart and soul—who has a back-bone—and who, if duly elected, will be the President. Modest Ohio has sons fit for the occasion. She grows Presidential timber. Her woods are full of it. I see before me the able and distinguished leader of the Western Democracy in the memorable struggle of 1868 for the payment of the public debt according to contract. Here, too, sits a Greenbacker of national fame, a soldier of two wars, with the blood of the Revolution visiting his big heart. Nor can we forget, though he be absent, the farmer statesman, who would have won the Governorship of Ohio in 1875, and consequently the Presidency in 1876, but for that godsend to the Republican Party—the bugaboo plot between Geghan and the Pope. If we could roll 10 years off the old hero's back we would elect him President, and he would be present at the inauguration. Yet at three-score years and ten he is more vigorous than half the Presidents, and his age, like a lusty Winter, is frosty but kindly. But uppermost in the general thought, in Ohio and throughout the United States, stands Thurman—the Fabius Maximus of the Ohio Democracy. Strong in mind, rich in experience, sage in judgment, no one need fear that he, who but yesterday seized the two greatest railway corporations of the earth and made them submit to the just demands of the people, lacks either the nerve or the strength to wield the battle-axe with which Jackson clove the helmet of the money power.

The letter of Mr. Thurman was then read, but much dissatisfaction was apparent when it was found that no reference was made to the Governorship, the general impression having gone out that his letter would in some way explain his reasons for declining to become the Democratic standard-bearer next Fall. Hon. George H. Pendleton responded to the toast, "The Ohio Idea."

Gov. Bishop responded to the toast, "Our Governor." His address was mainly historical, tracing the growth of the State in wealth and influence. Of Jackson he said: "The principles he advocated with such stern and unflinching devotion have formed the foundation-stone upon which Democracy built its temple, and which has led the party victorious through the strife of many years with untarnished honor and undiminished glory. The celebration of to-day is therefore properly the celebration of the birth of our party. Its career has been long and honorable; its future aims are exalted and praiseworthy."

In conclusion he said: "Ohio's great influence is felt nowhere so much as in the political world. We may well claim Ohio as a Democratic State. The instincts of her people are true to the principles of that party, and if we will but drop all differences between ourselves, lay aside all selfish and interested aims, and work hard, and work altogether, for the interest of the party, totally ignoring and disregarding all things else, Ohio will certainly cast her lot with the great Democratic Party, and poll such a vote as will place a true, sterling Andrew Jackson Democrat in the White House in 1880."

"Gen. Jackson," was responded to by Gen. George W. Morgan; "National Democracy," by Gen. Durbin Ward. Speeches were also made by Hon. George L. Converse, and other members of the Legislature. The enthusiasm at a late hour was as exuberant as could be desired. The Democratic heart beats with renewed vigor, and confidence in future victories is declared. The reception of Gov. Bishop was one of marked respect, and, at the conclusion of his speech, he was greeted with a most spontaneous outburst of applause, surpassing that accorded all others in fervency. It is apparent that "Uncle Dick" is the most formidable candidate in the field.

THURMAN'S ADVICE TO HIS PARTY.

A LETTER INSTEAD OF A SPEECH—COUNSELING STRICT ADHERENCE TO THE PRINCIPLES OF THE JACKSONIAN DEMOCRACY.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—Following is the letter sent by Senator Thurman, and read at the Columbus banquet:

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 6, 1879.

Messrs. John D. Sullivan, A. D. Hafner, and others, committee, Columbus, Ohio:

MY DEAR SIRS: I fully expected to attend the banquet on the 8th inst., at Columbus, and to enjoy the reunion of political and personal friends on a day so memorable in the history of the Republic, and so much cherished by its Democracy, but at the last moment, and to my great regret, I find that it will not be in my power to have that pleasure. I am just beginning to recover from a severe cold that has afflicted me for a week or more, and I cannot but recognize the fact that it would be imprudent for me, in such extremely cold weather, to make a trip requiring 800 miles travel and crossing the mountains twice.

Permit me to offer a few reflections upon the toast, "Jacksonian Democracy," the theme on which I was appointed to speak. Of course, other speakers will take my place and do justice to the subject, but the privilege may be accorded me of jotting down some very brief and pertinent observations. I wish to recall attention to some of the most marked characteristics of the Democracy of the time of Andrew Jackson. I refer to the time when he was a candidate for the Presidency, and when he filled the Presidential chair.

First—The Democracy were then eminently, if not pre-eminently, distinguished by their devotion to the union of the States, South and North, East and West. That sentiment was cherished by every true Democrat. Subsequent events chilled, and at length for a time suspended, it in the South; but the happiest circumstance of our present condition (thanks to the influence of Democratic principles) is that the love of the Union is everywhere restored, and that its preservation is a fixed principle of the Democratic Party in the South.

Secondly—The party was equally distinguished by its love of the Constitution. It sought to preserve it in all its vigor and beneficence by giving to it a national and rational interpretation; and it battled, manfully and constantly, against those latitudinarian constructions that threatened to convert the Government into an unlimited, centralized despotism; and, on the other hand, against all the vices that menaced the existence of the Union. And permit me to say, that the principles of Jacksonian Democracy, in this respect, are as important to-day as they ever were at any period of our history.

Thirdly—The Jacksonian Democracy were the determined foes of monopoly. They could not be otherwise, for the very foundation of the party was the doctrine of equal rights. By whatever names they may have been called there have been, and, perhaps, ever will be, but two great parties in America, the Democratic Party, asking nothing but equal rights, and an opposing party, whose leaders have ever sought, and ever will seek, special privileges created by law. Who can forget the great battle fought by the Democracy, under the lead of Jackson, against the Bank of the United States, and who can fail to see that a desperate struggle against a far more powerful combination of capital and privilege than was presented by that institution is now pending? Will the Democracy of to-day follow the example, set by their fathers, of inflexible opposition to special privileges, or will they prove recreant to the principles, the history, and the traditions of their party? This is a question that must ere long be answered. My own belief is that it will be answered as it ought to be, and that the Democrats of to-day will prove themselves to be, what their fathers were, true men. They will be earnest, but not rash; determined, but not unreasonable; destructive of wrongs and abuses alone, and conservative of all that should exist in a free republic.

Fourthly—The Jacksonian Democracy were a party of economy. The ordinary annual expense of Jackson's Administration, (that is, the expense of the Government exclusive of payments in discharge of the public debt,) were but $15,000,000 or thereabouts. Now our ordinary annual expenses are nearly 10 times that sum. What a contrast! While our population has increased but a little more than threefold, our expenses have increased nearly tenfold. Is it not high time that we should return to the economical principles and practices of Jacksonian Democracy.

These points, few in number, but transcendent in importance, I have thought it proper to note for the consideration of our friends. Others might be stated, but these must suffice for to-day. Gentlemen, I know that the banquet will be enjoyed by those who attend it. I trust that it will prove beneficial to others as well. I trust that its influence will be felt in reviving Jacksonian Democracy and in combining the opponents of the Republican Party in a grand effort to free the country from misrule and corruption. I have the honor to be yours, truly, A. G. THURMAN.

THE TWO HOUSES IN SESSION.

A BILL IN THE SENATE TO SECURE THE RIGHTS OF LIFE INSURANCE POLICY-HOLDERS — THE ASSEMBLY ADJOURNS UNTIL AFTER THE REPUBLICAN CAUCUS.

ALBANY, Jan. 8.—During the session of the Senate this morning Postmaster-General Key and Major-Gen. Daniel E. Sickles were admitted to the privileges of the floor, and took seats beside the Lieutenant-Governor. Very little business was transacted, and the session did not last more than half an hour. Mr. Sessions introduced a bill fixing the amount to be paid in policies of life insurance, and also a bill repealing the statute of 1875, requiring State taxes to be paid in gold. Senator Pierce introduced a bill to secure the rights of policy-holders in life insurance companies. The following is the text of the bill:

SECTION 1. Relative to mutual life insurance companies. Whenever any mutual life insurance company created under the laws of this State, which has a capital stock or guaranteed capital stock, shall have assets sufficient to reinsure all its outstanding risks, calculated according to the American experience table, at 4½ per cent. interest, and in addition thereto a sum equal to at least double the amount of said stock, the said company may, by a vote of three-fourths of its Board of Trustees, elect to pay off to the stockholders the amount of their stock aforesaid; such election to be the approval, in writing, of the Superintendent of the Insurance Department.

SEC. 2. After the resolution of the Board of Trustees for the payment off of the stockholders shall have passed, and shall have been approved in writing by the Superintendent of the Insurance Department, it shall be the duty of the officers of said company to pay the stockholders in said company the amount of their stock aforesaid, and all interest or dividends on said stock shall cease immediately upon the passing of the resolution aforesaid.

SEC. 3. Immediately after the passing of the resolution aforesaid, and its approval by the said Superintendent of the Insurance Department, the officers of such company shall give a printed notice to such policy-holders in said company, informing them of the action of the company, and that a meeting of the policy-holders of said company will be held at the office of the said company or other convenient place within the city where the said company has its head office, upon a certain day, which shall not be longer than 30 days and not less than 20 days from the giving of the notice aforesaid, at which the said policy-holders shall elect a Board of Trustees to manage the affairs of the said company until the next annual election of the company provided for in its charter or by-laws, and at such election, and at all subsequent elections for Trustees of said company, each policy-holder in the said company shall be entitled to vote in person or by proxy for Trustees of said company, and such persons as may by a majority vote at said election be designated by the policy-holders as Trustees of said company shall act until the next annual election and their successors are elected, and said Trustees shall elect officers to take the places of the officers of said company who shall be retired.

SEC. 4. From and after the election aforesaid the company, on paying off its capital stock in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall remain a purely mutual life insurance company, and each policy-holder in said company shall be a member of said corporation, and shall be entitled to all the rights of membership, and also to vote at all elections for Trustees of the company.

A resolution of Senator Harris, continuing the Apportionment Committee of last year, with its clerks and messengers, gave rise to a short debate.

Mr. Ecclestne moved an amendment that the committee be requested to report an Apportionment bill within 30 days, which was accepted by Mr. Harris, whereupon Ecclesine branched out into a buncombe speech on the subject of the failure to apportion the State as required by the Constitution, and said that the verdict of the people had been against the policy heretofore pursued on that subject by the Republican majority.

Mr. Harris desired to know where and when this "verdict of the people" had been rendered. He had been unable to discoverit, and it certainly could not be found in the last election.

Mr. Pomeroy said he stood ready to defend the action of the Republicans in the Legislature in this matter of reapportioning the State, and could show that the blame, if any, of the failure to pass a bill did not rest with them. They had always been ready to pass a just and fair bill, and the Senate had actually passed two such bills, but the Democrats would not accept a bill of this kind, or any bill that did not satisfy their partisan wishes.

Mr. Goodwin did not think there was any necessity for clerks and messengers of this committee, as it had done nothing heretofore, and was not likely to do anything hereafter.

Mr. McCarthy went further, and declared that there was no necessity for the committee itself. The people of the State, in his opinion, were perfectly satisfied with the apportionment as it stands, and all attempts of the Democrats to make political capital out of the failure to reapportion the State would fail hereafter as they had done in the past. After some good-natured remarks by Senator Hughes, the resolution was passed, and the Senate adjourned for the day.

It was believed, late last night, that a caucus could be held this morning before the Assembly met; that the organization would be arranged, and then, at 12 o'clock, that the Governor would be prepared to go into the House and perfect it. The notice of a caucus was given, and there was no meeting of the Assembly until 12 o'clock, when the Clerk called the body to order, and the galleries were this morning thrown open to all visitors who wished to enter them, and they were packed solidly with men and women, who stood in order to make all the room possible, and yet were unable to make places for all who desired to enter. In the gallery over the Speaker's desk was George William Curtis, while on the floor were A. B. Cornell and many of the well-known persons who had been at the session the last few days. The members were now all present, as it was known that the meeting would be brief. Rev. Dr. Magee made a prayer, Journal Clerk Barker read the minutes of the session of 1878, and after they had been approved, Mr. Sloan, who was sitting in the front row of seats, next to Robert H. Strahan, caught Mr. Johnson's eye, and offered a privileged resolution calling for the adoption of the rules of the last Assembly as a guide for the Assembly until the old rules should be formally adopted.

The resolution was adopted, and then Mr. Alvord, who sat this morning in a seat corresponding to that occupied by him in the old Capitol, renewed the motion made by him yesterday that the Assembly be in recess until after this evening, when the Republican caucus would be held. Erastus Brooks, looking dark and angry, seized the first opportunity to display his vigilance. He asked that the gentleman from Onondaga amend his motion so that the Assembly could appoint a temporary Chairman, and go on with some business that seemed to demand attention. The Governor's Message, he said, was strewn broadcast through the State, and the newspapers were desirous of publishing it. The course he desired to pursue was not novel; it was frequently pursued in Washington, and he thought it could be imitated with advantage here. Mr. Alvord, was up instantly in reply. He spoke more firmly and loudly than he did yesterday, and there was no difficulty in hearing him in the gallery. He explained that he was not yet used to the ways of the new Capitol, and not being inclined to infringe on the custom of the old Capitol, he objected to the proposition to appoint a temporary Speaker. The motion for a recess was adopted unanimously.

Clerk Johnson gave notice that the Republicans would meet in caucus at 7:30 o'clock.

MAINE'S GOVERNOR INAUGURATED.

A MESSAGE ADVOCATING STRICT ECONOMY IN STATE EXPENDITURES.

AUGUSTA, Me., Jan. 8.—In the convention of both branches of the Legislature this forenoon Hon. Alonzo Garcelon, the Governor-elect, attended by ex-Gov. Connor and his Council, took the oath of office, which was administered to him by J. Manchester Haynes, President of the Senate. The Governor then delivered his inaugural address, which occupied about 25 minutes in the delivery. The House was crowded with spectators. The Executive Councilmen also qualified in the joint convention.

The following is an abstract of Gov. Garcelon's Message: Under the head of State expenditures, after deploring the fact that there had been an increase of four-fold, exclusive of bounties, during the past 20 years, he urges the most rigid economy in all the departments of the State's service. He recommends biennial sessions of the Legislature; a revision of the tax laws, whereby a more equitable system of taxation may be enforced; a return to the former rate of interest fixed by law at 6 per cent., and the reorganization of the Judiciary. The present system of State bounty to high schools he declares to be impracticable and unfair in its apportionment, while the course of instruction is not such as is demanded of such schools. He recommends also submitting to the people the propositions adopted by the Constitutional Commission of 1875 to prevent bribery in elections. He discusses the finances briefly, and congratulates the nation upon the return to resumption, expressing the hope that it may never again be led into so plain a violation of the Constitution as the passage of the Legal Tender act.

THE SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 8.—The Legislature assembled to-day, and the Senatorial campaign was opened. The selection of a candidate for Speaker by the Republicans had little significance, though James, the nominee, will vote for Logan. None of the candidates are sure of a majority of the caucus. Logan has more pledges than Oglesby or Farwell. Farwell's prospect of election is poor, and when the proper time comes he will help Oglesby. The contest between Oglesby and Logan will be close. The election will not take place until Jan. 21, and the caucus will not be held until late next week.

GOV. HARTRANFT'S MESSAGE.

HIS LAST ANNUAL ADDRESS TO THE LEGISLATURE — THE LABOR TROUBLES OF PENNSYLVANIA PRACTICALLY CONSIDERED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARRISBURG, Jan. 8.—Gov. Hartranft's last annual Message was sent to the Legislature to-day. It is a document of 25 pages, and touches on all the important public questions of the day in Pennsylvania. The Governor gives particular attention to the labor question and the education of the masses. In beginning his Message, Gov. Hartranft says: "As the first Legislature holding a biennial session, you will have many difficult and delicate matters to adjust. As all the existing legislation has been passed in view of annual sessions, it will be necessary to make a careful examination of the various laws regulating the departments, and particularly those concerning the management of financial affairs. Without attempting a specification of all the changes rendered necessary by the new system, it will be sufficient, as an indication of the importance of the work, to point out that, unless an amendment of the law requiring the votes for State Treasurer to be counted as the votes for Governor are now counted, is passed, an extra session of the Legislature must be called in 1880 to leave a fair balance to meet the February interest of this year. The revenues of the general fund, being very much less than was anticipated, and as there was no power to apply the large amount in the sinking fund used to redeem the debt in excess of the constitutional amount to the general fund, the State Treasurer was unable to meet, promptly, all the demands made upon him." He presents a series of tables, however, showing that with proper economy in appropriations and a diversion of surplus revenues from the sinking fund to the general fund, both the unpaid appropriations of last year and the expenses of the next two years can be met without additional taxation. The Governor devotes a great deal of space to the subjects of municipal government and education. Discussing the last-mentioned topic, he says: "Nothing, it seems to me, will so much extend the sphere of activity as a system of industrial education. Such a system would be costly, but the return to the State, in the extension and elevation of its industries, and the diffusion of greater comforts and content among the people, cannot be accurately measured in dollars and cents. When we consider that in the last eight years the State has expended $832,905 30 over and above the ordinary Militia expenses, in the suppression of riots, which are not to be counted as the result of the mere exercise of lawless disposition, but rather as the desperate struggles of ignorant men to cut the Gordian knot of a difficulty that only the utmost skill and patience will ever enable society to untie, it will be acknowledged that the gain in that one item alone would go a considerable way toward the support of the system. In this connection, as a preparation for the work, it would be well to continue your patronage to the Pennsylvania Museum and School of Industrial Art, and make some provision for the exhibition and preservation of the valuable scientific library and collections of the Second Geological Survey.

"The great question of the day is the so-called conflict of capital and labor. The Mollie Maguire murders, like the agrarian murders in Ireland, and the trades-union outrages, arsons, and machine-breaking in England, were not the work of the so-called criminal classes. They were essentially class murders; and as is always the case in the bitterness engendered by such contention, their criminality was ignored by many of the class and nationality outside of the guilty circle of the order. If some of the leading spirits of the class had been members of a board of arbitration as representatives of labor, with some of the employers or their agents as representatives of capital, it is not unreasonable to suppose that most of the disagreements that have kept the coal regions in a state of turmoil might have been amicably adjusted, and many of those who were assassinated and of those who have been hanged living to-day, if spared in the ordinary course of nature, the life of the average citizen, with all its undeveloped possibilities of good and evil. In England, the system of arbitration and conciliation originated with the manufacturers and operators, and has changed, wherever fairly tried, the old feeling of bitter hostility between the employers and the employed into one of mutual respect and confidence. With the same class in Pennsylvania lies the responsibility of the initiative; with the Legislature, the responsibility of education.

"Deeply impressed with the importance of bringing about, if possible, a mutual understanding of the two classes, and creating an arrangement for the amicable and rational settlement of all disputes and controversies, I gladly availed myself, in the early part of the year, of the services of a gentleman, a student of industrial questions, who visited England to investigate the form, practical workings, and results of the various systems of arbitration in operation there, and accumulate data. By a special agent, under the seal of the State, to examine and report the same on behalf of the Commonwealth. His report, which is the fullest, clearest and most satisfactory presentation of the subject I have ever seen, I have the honor to transmit herewith. Wherever the system is established, an intelligent co-operation between employers and employed has been effected, and steady employment secured at those rates of wages which the industrial conditions of a competitive market enabled capital to pay, and maintain a steady production. Strikes, riots, outrages, and trades-union murders have become things of the past. The generous times labor has shared in the increased profits of capital, and in periods of depression each has mutually supported the other, with the minimum of loss and suffering."

CONNECTICUT LAW-MAKERS.

TECHNICAL VIOLATION OF THE CONSTITUTION—A RESOLUTION PASSED CONGRATULATORY OF RESUMPTION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARTFORD, Conn., Jan. 8.—In the proceedings of the General Assembly to-day there was an accidental omission to take formal action in the preliminary steps, necessary under the Constitution, to proceed to the election of a Governor and State officers. The Constitution provides that there shall be a canvass of the votes cast for Governor and State officers on the first day of the session, and if no person has received a majority of the votes cast, the two houses shall, on the second day of the session, proceed in joint convention to ballot, without debate, for the two persons having the highest number of votes. Acting in strict conformity to the directory provision of the Constitution, the Legislature should have canvassed to-day the returns, but it only went so far as to appoint a committee, and thus, in what follows in the proceedings for an election, there must be a technical violation of the Constitution. The precise condition of affairs was not discovered until both houses had adjourned, and then it was proposed to call the Senate together again and accept the returns, but after consultation it was decided that such a course would not be in accordance with parliamentary law, and it was abandoned. Of course, the result will not be affected by this careless performance, as the legislative power is supreme, and with it Gov. Andrews and his associates will be elected to-morrow. But ware the Legislature closer politically than it is, it would be possible, under a similar state of things, for a mischievous minority to make some trouble, particularly by filibustering to prevent a joint convention, which is necessary to secure an election.

The organization of both houses to-day was carried out according to the caucus programme arranged last night. Wright, on taking the Speaker's chair, made an excellent address, and alluded forcibly to the question of specie resumption. Just as he had finished speaking, Hon. Vincent Colyer, of Darien, offered the following resolution, which was referred:

Resolved, That we cordially unite with our people and Government in their congratulation over the successful resumption of specie payments and the signs of returning prosperity which everywhere accompany it, and we request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to continue their efforts to resist all attempts to debase our currency.

The excitement over the Senatorial election increases, and there is a strong force of politicians here. There are Harrison, Jewell, Platt, and Minor head-quarters at the Allyn House, and members are drifting about from one to the other. The United States Hotel lobbies are thronged with a promiscuous crowd, all worked up to a high state of political fervor on the question. The result is still problematical, notwithstanding the tremendous pressure brought, which exceeds anything before known in Senatorial contests here. The indications increase that fewer members are pledged on decisive ballots than many suppose, and that the caucus next Wednesday evening will show this fact.

SENATOR CAMERON RENOMINATED.

CAUCUS OF THE REPUBLICAN MEMBERS OF THE LEGISLATURE—HIS ELECTION CONSIDERED SURE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARRISBURG, Penn., Jan. 8.—The Republican members of the Legislature holds caucus in this city this evening for the purpose of nominating a candidate for United States Senator, to be voted for on Jan. 23. Senator Cameron was nominated on the first ballot, receiving 98 votes, to 13 for Major A. M. Brown, of Allegheny, and 4 for Senator James B. Everhart, of Chester. The nomination of Senator Cameron was made unanimous.

The party strength in the Legislature is 139; 107 in the House, 32 in the Senate. There were 24 absentees from the caucus—5 Senators and 19 Representatives. It requires 136 votes to elect, 11 more than were present in caucus. If the absentees were all anti-Cameron men, the prospects of the Senator's re-election would be slim, but of the 24, not more than half a dozen are pronounced in their opposition to him, and these were elected as anti-Cameron men, and were, therefore, debarred from going into caucus. Senators Kauffman and Everhart are both in this list. A number of letters from absentees were read in caucus explaining the absence of the writers, and expressing their determination to support the nominee of the caucus.

The Greenbackers very unexpectedly held a caucus this afternoon, and nominated Judge Daniel Agnew, as their candidate for United States Senator.

VOORHEES CONFIDENT OF ELECTION.

THE PROSPECTS OF THE SENATORIAL CONTEST IN INDIANA.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 8.—The Democrats, to-night nominated Hon. Henry S. Canthorn, of Knox County, for Speaker of the House. Fifty-four votes were in caucus, a majority of eight over all in that body. There may be some difficulty in the organization of the Senate, in which body two Nationals hold the balance of power; but if Democrats fail to secure these votes by some bargain, they will decline to admit one Republican Senator whose seat is contested, and this will give them a majority of one and the control. Seventy-seven votes were in two Democratic caucuses, and as three or four Nationals will vote for Voorhees, there is no doubt of his election. The Chairman of the State Central Committee states that Senator Voorhees will not come here at all, regarding his calling and election sure. The Legislature will convene at 10 o'clock to-morrow.

WEST VIRGINIA'S LEGISLATORS.

WHEELING, West Va., Jan. 8.—The West Virginia Legislature met at the Capitol in this city to-day. Gen. D. J. Johnson, of Tyler County, was elected President of the Senate, and Hon. George H. Moffat, of Pocahontas County, Speaker of the House of Delegates. Several important measures will come up in the present session. Among others, an entire change will probably be made in the Judicial Department of the State.

THE WISCONSIN LEGISLATURE.

MILWAUKEE, Jan. 8.—The Legislature met at Madison at 12 o'clock, noon. The Senate was called to order by Lieut.-Gov. Bingham. Charles E. Bross was elected Chief Clerk, and Senator Price, President pro tem. D. M. Kelly was elected Speaker of the Assembly, John E. Eldred, Chief Clerk. Only the routine business incident to the organization was transacted.

ARIZONA LEGISLATURE ORGANIZED.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Jan. 8.—A Prescott dispatch says the Arizona Legislature met Monday and organized yesterday. The Council stands five Republicans to four Democrats, and the House ten Democrats to eight Republicans.

THE ELEVATED RAILROAD NUISANCE.

ITS MISMANAGEMENT AGAIN ILLUSTRATED.

The mismanagement of the New-York Elevated Railroad, which has been constantly apparent since the road was first opened, was well illustrated at the Ninth-street Station early last evening. The engineer of a crowded train failed to slack up in time as he approached the station, and when the train was finally stopped the rear platform of the forward car was beyond the station platform. There were several persons in the car who wished to get out at Ninth-street, but the middle car was too densely packed with people to enable them to pass through to its rear platform, which was in front of the station. The conductor therefore pulled the cord to signal the engineer to back up the train, but the bell was rung to "go ahead," and the impatient passengers were carried to the Fourteenth-street station. One of them demanded a ticket from the brakeman, so that he might ride down to Ninth-street, where he considered the company was bound to carry him. The brakeman refused to give up the ticket, and at Fourteenth-street the gentleman explained the circumstances to the station ticket agent, and again asked for a return ticket. This was refused, and all the angry passengers were compelled to walk back to Ninth-street, after having paid the company to be carried there, and losing a great deal of time.

A CORRESPONDENT'S OPINION.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your correspondent C. A. M., in his remarks this morning on the management of the New-York Elevated Railroad, appears as an apologist for that corporation, in which position not one of the premises taken can be sustained. In the first place, from the running of the trains to Forty-second-street, then to Sixty-seventh-street, and finally to Harlem, the management have done nothing to effect the rapid transfer of passengers from one point to another, but, on the contrary, have allowed the trains to be run by the engineers at times holding passengers between stations, and keeping them suspended until just in time to be late to get the Harlem trains at the Grand Central Depot. The same delay was of common occurrence when the trains were running to Sixty-seventh-street, and now that they run through to One Hundred and Twenty-ninth-street, it is a daily occurrence for passengers to be detained between One Hundred and Twenty-fourth and One Hundred and Twenty-fifth streets anywhere from 15 to 40 minutes. These statements, unfortunately, are such stubborn facts that it needs inquiries only to have them established by numerous authorities, as in many instances passengers from Harlem to the City are compelled to take the boats for safety, comfort, and speed, or certainty of being delivered according to running time.

As to that much-abused body of men, the conductors on the New-York Elevated Railroad, there is not one grain of candor in the statement, for, as a whole, I challenge any employing capacity to show in the like number of employes such a want of intelligence, and such profound ignorance of the simplest detail with which they should be familiar, also such a total absence of the most primitive code of civility, so uniformly extended by all employes of well-managed ways of transit. I give the following: On Saturday morning, Jan. 4, I put myself out of the way so as to have a proper place to wait, and walked to One Hundred and Sixteenth-street station. Upon passing to the platform, the first approaching trains, carrying a red flag, I knew to be Franklin-square trains, which fact the conductors announced. The third train carried a red flag, but as the conductor said nothing about stopping at Franklin-square, I put the simple question, "Does this train go all the way through?" which he replied, "All the way through." I got on, and in a few minutes he came in and said, "This train does not go all the way through," but he would transfer to a train that did. To another passenger who wanted Fulton-street, and another for Hanover-square, the same answer was given. On two instances that I can recall, when there were very few (not 20) passengers in the car, the rudeness of the answers returned to questions was indescribable. I go up and down every night, and I have never seen a single instance of a passenger that was anything but civil, except the night before Christmas there was a chum of the employes so drunk that it required two of them to carry the man down to the street. And yet these are the men that your correspondent says are maltreated and subjected to all sorts of indignities. I could cite numerous other instances of disobedience of the regulations, but will do so at another time. I ride on the road, not because it is what it claims to be—"rapid transit,"—but because it is quicker than the Third-avenue surface road, and takes me nearer my place of business. I have gone from One Hundred and Sixteenth-street to Hanover-square in 33½ minutes, and I have occupied 85 minutes in completing the same distance. To conclude, in all departments of the running time, rolling stock, and changing of trains, it is the best mismanaged road in the world, and will continue so until there is a man of brains, and a manliness in that, placed in control or the Superintendent.

J. R. J. B.

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, Jan. 7, 1879.

ORGANIZATION IN MISSOURI.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Jan. 8.—Both houses of the thirtieth General Assembly of Missouri met at Jefferson City at noon to-day. Lieut.-Gov. Brockmeyer called the Senate to order, and, after electing Daniel Able, of St. Louis, temporary Secretary, and swearing in new members, an adjournment was taken until to-morrow. The House elected Samuel Davis temporary Speaker, Daniel Boone, temporary Clerk, and after new members were sworn in, adjourned until to-morrow.

Gov. Phelps' Message is a long document, and treats a number of subjects in an exhaustive manner. It reviews the condition of the Treasury; the relations of the Governor with the State Treasurer, and the connection of the latter officer with the suspended Martin Bank, which was one of the State depositories. The Governor directs attention to the great cost of criminal cases, the amount being over $900,000 for the past four years, and the great expense of the Penitentiary, the sum paid by the State to support that prison being $388,000 for the same time. The cause of education is gaining firm ground and is being supported by the State to the utmost. The State University and Normal Schools are in a flourishing condition, and nobody thinks of reducing the taxes for the public schools.

A RECEIVER GRANTED MORE TIME.

ALBANY, Jan. 8.—Willis S. Paine, Receiver of the Bond-Street Savings Bank, has been granted an extension of time in which to make final distribution of the assets in his hands among the depositors and creditors of the institution. He has paid 70 per cent. in dividends, and has on hand about $41,000, besides several parcels of real estate which he has been ordered to sell.

TAMMANY SOCIETY'S BALL.

ONLY A FEW PROMINENT MEN PRESENT.

THE LEADING TILDEN DEMOCRATS CONSPICUOUSLY ABSENT—HOW THE HALL WAS DECORATED—THE TOASTS AT THE BANQUET.

The anniversary of the battle of New-Orleans was celebrated last night by the Tammany Society by a ball at Tammany Hall. As the entertainment of such a pretentious organization of politicians it was a failure of the most pronounced character. The President and Vice-President of the United States, members of the National Senate and House of Representatives, Gov. Robinson, and the members of the State Legislature, the Judges of the State courts, and all local officials were invited, but most of them sent declinations. Of those who accepted the invitations, a great many did not appear at the ball. At 9 o'clock it looked as if the ball would have a slim attendance. The front of the building was deserted except by two policemen, who stood within a canopy that led from the curb up the steps to the entrance to the hall. As the evening wore on the guests began to arrive in considerable numbers. At 10 o'clock the ball-room, the corridors, and particularly the barroom, were well filled. The most prominent persons then present—and none more prominent arrived during the night—were Judges John R. Brady, Larremore, Freedman, Van Hoesen, and Donohue; Assemblyman Erastus Brooks, Louis C. Beach, of the Democratic State Committee; State Senators Wagstaff, Ecclestne, and Hogan, Commissioner of Jurors Thomas Dunlap, and Emanuel B. Hart.

Although there was considerable tinsel and tawdriness in the decorations, the appearance of the ball-room was pleasing. The poor materials at the hand of the decorator were used with taste and artistic skill. Each of the windows at the northern side of the room, reaching from the floor almost to the ceiling, was divided into two parts by having its middle tier of shutters closed and sealed with the broad seal of a State. Each of the two sets of windows thus made was draped with lace curtains, and a lambrequin made of the national colors prettily folded and plaited. On the wall between and at the sides of the windows were seals of the States. The alcove at the rear of the platform was concealed by folds of crimson silk, framed with gold-embroidered scarlet silk, shaped into a pointed arch. Within this arch, and pinning the crimson curtains, was the broad seal of New-York. In a niche above the arch was a bust of Jackson on a pedestal, covered by a blue silken banner, on which was inscribed, in golden letters, the legend: "The wise, the brave, the good." The niche was draped with scarlet, embroidered with gilt tinsel. The front of the gallery at the southern end of the room was adorned in the same manner; and a fringe of the gilt-embroidered scarlet material hung in front of the capitals of the columns supporting the gallery. From each of a series of pendants, gilt cut here and there from the base of the gallery curtain, hung a gilt cage, inclosing a lusty-throated canary. In the intervals of the music these songsters saluted the ear with a rival chorus. In front of the gallery swung the battle-torn flags of the Forty-second New-York, known as the Tammany Regiment, and as the organization which Sam Tilden did not equip, though his friends said he did. A series of wax angels, wearing silvered cuirasses, suspended from the ceiling by wires, were utilized to uphold long streamers of blue gauze, which, after being entangled about their arms and legs, were allowed to droop gracefully over the floor, and were then attached to the gallery front. The entrances to the ball-room were curtained with crimson silk, and at either side of each entrance was a vase of green plants. The platform was almost concealed from view by potted plants, palms, ferns, a few rose-bushes, and intricate designs of greenery.

On the east side of the ball-room are 10 private boxes, raised about six feet above the floor. There are a like number on the west side of the room. The occupants of these boxes last night were:

East.	West.
2—Gen. Ferrero.	1—
4—Com. S. P. Nichols.	3—Henry Woltman.
6—Henry A. Gumbleton.	5—John F. Gantz.
	7—John Reilly and P. Gillespie.
8—	9—J. T. Cuming.
10—Augustus Schell.	11—Richard Croker.
12—Henry L. Clinton.	13—W. J. Croft.
14—John Kelly.	15—James F. Wenman.
16—E. D. Gale.	17—William L. Cole.
18—Edward Kearney.	19—John D. Townsend.
20—Bernard Reilly.

The music was furnished by Grafulla's Band, which was divided into two parts, one stationed at the west end of the gallery to play promenade music, and the other at the east end to play for the dancers. At 10 o'clock, the brass band played Suppe's "Pique Dame," and followed it with the performance of Lecoq's "La Petite Duke." Meanwhile, the Sachems and other officers of the Tammany Society were forming in procession to escort their guests from the reception-room on the first floor to the ball-room. At 10:30 they entered the ball-room to the music of the Grafulla band's "Grand March." The lack of distinguished guests was made apparent in this march. Leading the procession was the jovial-looking Wiskinskie, John D. Newman, gray-haired, and Judicial Sachem Donohue, his arm-in-arm companion, carried, ungracefully poised upon a wand, a red liberty cap. One of the Tammany lookers-on called it a temple of liberty, thus showing that a very confused idea of architectural design obtains in the Columbian Order. Following the Wiskinskie was Grand Sachem Augustus Schell, upon whose left arm ex-Senator Doolittle, of Wisconsin, leaned gracefully. Father of the Council, Henry L. Clinton, came next, supporting Clinton City editor of a morning newspaper, and following this couple was John Kelly, by whose side was that veteran Democrat, manager of many well-fought primaries, and notorious chieftain of the Empire Club of evil memory, Capt. Isaiah Rynders. Then followed the other Sachems of the society, Henry D. Parroy, Nathaniel Jarvis, Jr., County Clerk Henry A. Gumbleton, Edward Kearney, Police Commissioner Sidney P. Nichols, Sheriff Bernard Reilly, Charles H. Haswell, Menze Diefendorf, and Fire Commissioner John J. Gorman. Secretary Joel O. Stevens, Treasurer Arthur Leary, Sagamore Wilson Small, and the Scribe, Augustus Schaerty. Each of these members of the Reception Committee escorted a guest. None of these guests, however, were persons of importance, and most of them were known to the average Tammanyite who gazed upon the procession. After circling the room, the officers of the society ascended the platform and sat among the plants until the first dance, the Lancers, was finished.

The banquet did not commence until 1 o'clock this morning, and after justice had been done to the good things before them, Grand Sachem Schell made the opening address.

The following toasts were given and responded to: "The President of the United States," Chauncey M. Depew; "The Day we Celebrate," Col. Edward L. Gaul; "The Union," Senator Wagstaff; "The Congress of the United States," ——; "Americans, the Land of the Free," John Kelly; "The Army and Navy," Major Williams H. Quinby; "The Governor of the State of New-York," ——; "The Tammany Society," Henry L. Clinton; "Andrew Jackson, the Jurist, Soldier, and Statesman," United States Senator Doolittle; "Woman," Recorder B. Perkins; "Departed Brothers, Warriors, Chiefs, and Absent Friends," Isaiah Rynders; "Sister Societies," Dr. Merkle.

Mr. Clinton, having eulogized Jefferson and Jackson, concluded as follows:

"As the names of Jefferson and Jackson have been and ever will be indissolubly united as the great apostles of American Democracy, so may the associations interwoven in the history of the Constitution of our country and of the Society of Tammany never be dimevered. The Constitution of the United States, and of this society, were in the same year born of the exigencies of the times and the necessities of the people. Although neither is perfect, each has done its share in securing the rights and preserving the liberties of the nation. Thus they together have journeyed in the pathway of national prosperity and renown. Together let them ever continue their progress. In the language of the immortal Jackson, their 'union must and shall be preserved.'"

After the banquet dancing was renewed, and kept up for some hours later.

RAISING A TILDEN BANNER.

INDIANA DEMOCRATS REPORTED TO HAVE CONCLUDED THAT THEIR LAST PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE WOULD BE AVAILABLE AGAIN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan 8.—The following appeared this afternoon in the Sun—the National organ: "At a meeting of Democrats at the Bates House this morning, when the Presidential question was the leading topic, it appeared to be the predominant sentiment that as the financial question was now settled, and while they entertained sentiments of the highest regard for Thomas A. Hendricks, as a reliable and representative Democrat and a favorite son of Indiana, yet Samuel J. Tilden was the only man that could carry New-York in the next contest, and as that State was absolutely essential to victory, Mr. Tilden should be the next Democratic candidate. It was also asserted, almost unanimously that in view of the fact that the financial question would be left out of the next campaign, Mr. Voorhees should not give any pledges to the Nationals to secure their vote. If he is made Senator for the next six years, he could find better work to do for the party and the country hereafter than to make inflation stump speeches, or to cater to people on dead issues."

When it became known on the streets much excitement ensued, and Gov. Hendricks and his friends showed much feeling over the publication. At the meeting were Senator Leeper and Ex-Lieut.-Gov. Wordsworth, editor of the Laporte Argus, and Rufus Magee, of Logansport, the last two members of the State Central Committee.

THE MISSING PIKE COUNTY TREASURER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

MILFORD, Penn., Jan. 8.—James W. Quick, Treasurer of Pike County, is still at large. Yesterday it was officially stated that he was seen in Port Jervis, N. Y., and that when the proper time came he would be arrested. It is reported here to-day that he is not in Port Jervis, and has not been since Saturday. The last seen of him by his family was on the night of Dec. 31, when he left his home at Matamoras to attend a temperance meeting at Port Jervis. Their theory is that he has been robbed and murdered. The Board of Auditors are now examining the missing officer's books, and will probably finish to-night. It is believed that his deficiency will be less than at first reported.

MARYLAND REPUBLICANS ACTIVE.

MEETING WITH A VIEW TO A REORGANIZATION—THE STATE CENTRAL COMMITTEE ASKED TO CALL A CONVENTION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 8.—A large meeting of Maryland Republicans was held in this city to-day, with a view to reorganizing. Nearly all the counties in the State were represented and a number of colored delegates were present. Ex-Postmaster-General Cresswell was one of the prominent leaders present. R. Stockett Matthews, Chairman of the State Central Committee, was asked recently to call that committee together, but he refused on the ground of inexpediency. Hence the present meeting. Much opposition was manifested toward him yesterday and his action in issuing a circular characterizing those who favored reorganization as revolutionists and ex-Confederate soldiers, was severely criticised. This accusation was leveled, no doubt, at C. Irving Ditty, who was sent down by the President to Louisiana as one of the committee to investigate the frauds there, and who has consistently fought that wing of the party to which Mr. Matthews belongs.

Resolutions were presented yesterday declaring that the discord in the party rendered it almost useless to take part in elections; recommending that the State Central Committee be called together at an early day; that the members of that committee should hold office only for two years, and that in all State conventions of the party, each legislative district of Baltimore City, and each county of the State, should be entitled to the same number of representatives as it may possess in the two houses of the General Assembly. It was finally decided to request the Republican State Central Committee to call a State convention, not later than Feb. 22, with a view to a general reorganization of the party in this State.

COAL MINES CAVING IN.

DAMAGE ABOVE AND DAMAGE BELOW—THREE HOUSES DEMOLISHED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SCRANTON, Penn., Jan. 8.—Port Griffith, a mining village about nine miles below this city, on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, is the scene of another of those extensive cavings-in of the surface so frequent in mining regions. The premonitory signs of a disturbance in the bowels of the earth were audible at about 9 o'clock this morning. The sounds were as of subterranean thunder, accompanied by a crushing, grinding noise, with a trembling of the earth, approaching the tremors said to accompany the birth of an earthquake. These alarming noises were followed by a gradual sinking and settling of the surface, carrying with it to a much lower level three houses, which were demolished. The inhabitants, who are more or less used to this sort of thing, were not slow in discovering what was going on, and quickly sought other and safer ground. The area disturbed is quite extensive, and, beside the surface damage, much loss will ensue to the operators. The scene inside the mine is somewhat chaotic. The stable-boss was in the mine when the disturbance was published at first. It is said that the force of the wind caused by the great compression was driving every obstruction before it. The cave took place in a part of the mine where there was a valuable plot of top coal. There were 14 mules in the mine, only eighteen of the bottom coal was worked out, and all this valuable coal is supposed to be a total loss, owing to the mass of superimposed rock. The mines belong to the Pennsylvania Coal Company. The loss will fall on the owners of the damaged property. The amount of inside damage has not yet been ascertained.

AN ANNUAL MEETING DISTURBED.

TWO STOCKHOLDERS OF THE NEW-HAVEN ROAD WHO WANTED TO MAKE INNOVATIONS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 8.—The annual meeting of the stockholders of the New-York, New-Haven and Hartford Railroad here to-day was very exciting, owing to the efforts of two or three stockholders, including H. L. Goodwin, of East Hartford, who has been a sort of thorn in the flesh of the company for years. There was no business anticipated beyond the acceptance of the Directors' report and the election of Directors. The report was accepted and the old Board of Directors was re-elected. President Bishop opened the meeting, but was too ill to remain in the chair, George H. Watrous taking his place. Goodwin, who annually makes objections to the road's management, was reinforced by Franklin Buckley, of Hartford, who offered a resolution instructing the Directors to reduce fares. It would be economical in the end, he said, for the receipts would increase, and it would be better to have 8 per cent. dividends than 10. If thereby the road's popularity was increased. Other stockholders ridiculed the idea and said it was a matter for the Directors to attend to. Buckley got angry and claimed that he had been insulted. The resolution was indefinitely postponed, and then Goodwin offered one, calling for two low-fare trains each day. This also was indefinitely postponed. It was then stated that the Legislature would be appealed to, and at once Buckley offered a resolution that the Directors be instructed to spend no money in the Legislature to defeat the movement. Confusion then arose, and some urged that the Police be called in. Goodwin tried to continue, and argued that he did not appeal to the people at Harlem, to avoid paying heavy rents for track and depot to Director Vanderbilt. He was ruled out of order, and the meeting was adjourned.

A BITTER SENATORIAL CONTEST.

DEMOCRATS IN NORTH CAROLINA DIVIDED UPON A CANDIDATE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

RALEIGH, N. C., Jan. 8.—The Legislature met in biennial session to-day. Lieut.-Gov. Jarvis presided over the Senate. W. H. Furman was elected Principal Clerk. In the House of Representatives John M. Moring, of DECAY OF BRITISH TRADE.

ENGLAND PASSING THROUGH A SEVERE CRISIS.

STRIKES AND LABOR TROUBLES—HARDSHIPS OF FARM LABORERS—EMIGRATION AS A RELIEF—FREE TRADE AND RECIPROCITY—UNSETTLED OPINIONS—AMERICAN COMPETITION—IS ENGLAND ENTERING ON A DECLINE?

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Thursday, Dec. 26, 1878.

The decay of British trade is the engrossing topic of the hour. The cable message from America that Mr. Evarts has pronouced in favor of free trade is regarded as a streak of light in the darkness, though from such a declaration to the realization of the hopes it excites is a long step. There are Americans in England, however, who believe that the United States is marching on to the goal which the Cobden school still considers the commercial paradise of nations. Mr. Shepard, the courteous Consul of Bradford, evidently believes that America can afford to make a distinct advance on that flowery highway of peace and plenty. Statistics may be said to confirm this belief. American consumers would certainly benefit largely by an abolition of duties on special English goods which are used by the poorer classes of citizens. The prospect of an agitation for free trade in America, with a movement in England to restore protection, are curious phases of the great commercial question which is being discussed all over the world. Nothing could better illustrate the wonderful progress of the United States than the fact that she is overproducing in regard to home consumption, and seeking for new markets abroad. British politicians who address public meetings about England's commercial supremacy will not look the situation squarely in the face. They refuse to see that Christendom no longer relies on English manufactures, while England cannot do without the agricultural products of Christendom. We have had a monopoly. The progress of other countries has destroyed that monopoly, and the only thing to be considered is how best to compete with our competitors. It is clear that to alleviate the present strain the workman and the employer must labor harmoniously together and in sympathy with each other. That is the first condition of success; and at present there seems but little chance of such a combination. Every day, notwithstanding its record of distress, sees us further from the realization of this happy condition. Strikes right and left; strikes in every trade; strikes in every county; the newspapers might have a standing heading for the various battles in this great war of capital and labor. At the same time they might print a daily column of the announcements of wages reductions. Not alone in the great manufacturing centres, but in all the various offshoots, there are constant notices of reductions in wages. In some cases the laborers submit, in many instances they strike. It is stated on good authority that the miners' union of Yorkshire and Derbyshire have resolved that if the present rates are reduced by the masters in one locality, the miners in the colliery districts of these two counties will strike in a body. That would give a lock-out of 100,000 men, the most serious of modern trade disaffections.

AGRICULTURAL TROUBLES.

The present upheaval of all the old relations between employer and employed goes down to the very root of things, and encompasses all the area of labor. The peasant toiler, who still wears some of the chains of the vassalage in which his forefathers were born, is up in arms. Even the dull plodder whom the artisans in the towns and cities call "clod" and "Joskins"—even this peaceful slave of the soil has risen against his master. In Essex and Kent the fight between the farmer and his men has become a bitter one. "The Laborers' Union," formed on the same lines as "the trades-unions" of the mechanics, has given offence to land-owners and their tenants. The fight on the part of the masters is not only against wages but against the union. Recently they reduced the pay of their laborers. A large majority of the men gave way. When they had succumbed, they were further requested to retire from "the Laborer's Union." Met with a refusal, the masters have ejected the laborers from their cottages. In trade disputes this is a strong grip which many large manufacturers as well as farmers have upon their men. The master builds or buys cottages for them; they become his tenants; and after proper notice to quit, he has the right to turn them out. This is the thumb-screw, the rack, and the boot, to many a married man who loves his home and his family; but now and then the torments of eviction are endured with Roman courage. I have seen in the North of England, half a township in the snow, with its goods and chattels, calmly watching the locking up of the cottages out of which they have been turned into the highway. If the cause for which the poor people suffer on these occasions were only as good as their conduct in the supreme hour of their trouble, what a noble exhibition it would make, an entire community calmly establishing a fireside under tents in a wilderness of snow. The managers of the Laborers' Union are giving their members every encouragement to hold loyally by the society. A few days ago one of the chief officers sailed to New-Zealand with 500 of the peasants, under arrangements for placing them in situations, made with the New-Zealand Government. The colonial authorities are wise in their generation. These earnest agricultural laborers, saturated with the rural wisdom and obedience to orders of Essex and Kent, will be a great boon to their new employers; for farming is thoroughly understood and practiced in many profitable branches down in the salubrious counties from which the emigrants hail. While Germany is putting all manner of jealous restraints upon emigration, the English Government is rather inclined to encourage people to leave the country than to stay in it; and supposing trade looks up in America next year, as everybody thinks it will, the tide of emigration will once more set in from England to the United States. What is more, we shall also experience an emigration of capital, a circumstance which will have special advantages for America. Large accumulations of money are still seeking employment, and trade will now take what would under other circumstances have gone in foreign loans. A healthy manufacturing progress in America will see capitalists as well as laborers emigrating to the United States.

Emigration has often relieved Great Britain in times of trouble similar to the present, and an English exodus is always a good thing for the world. The people carry with them their law-abiding habits, their intelligence and industry, their love of liberty, their religion, their native endurance. We are so large a community on so small a piece of land, our rate of increase is so great, that we have always a surplus population. If it is intended that we should, for ever hold India, it is a pity we do not colonize at least a portion of it. There are districts where Europeans can live happily, and the only way for a dominant power to maintain its supremacy over an alien people is to live among them and combine their home life. The English emigrant has every climate to choose from. His Government has possessions everywhere. The recent annexations in the Transvaal comprise abundant resources for capital and labor. Australia, New-Zealand, the Cape, Canada, have millions of acres unoccupied.

COMPETITION AND RECIPROCITY.

While the leading journals support Sir Stafford Northcote, the Conservative Chancellor of the Exchequer, is absolutely declining to even up the question of free trade or protection, there is, nevertheless, an active and influential party in the State anxious and determined to force on the Legislature the consideration of retaliatory tariffs as an incident of British competition with foreign countries. Talking with traders and manufacturers of all classes, I have scarcely found an exception to the opinion that the severe restrictive duties of America should be met by similar measures, and when Spain, Italy, and Russia are talked of, the producers are virulent in their criticisms of these countries. It is curious to note the difference of the feeling excited by the competition of America. There is no hostility to Americans. On the contrary, men speak with a certain wondering admiration of American industrial progress. At the same time, they don't hesitate to declare the terms of Anglo-American competition grossly unfair, and the more specious of them point out to me that the hardship of the protective tariffs is, after all, greater upon the American citizen in the States than upon Englishmen. But I know that one of their chief hopes of the future is that America will wake up some morning, and, believing herself strong enough to adopt free trade, will open her ports free to England, and that British supremacy will then enter upon a new lease. The majority of the British Chambers of Commerce, while they pathetically call the attention of foreign countries to the injustice of their tariffs, steadily cling to the principles of free trade. An exception to the rule is worth pointing out. At the annual meeting of the Exeter Chamber there was a majority of speakers in favor of the imposition of retaliatory duties, with a view to compelling other nations to abandon their heavy imposts. The members who advocated this policy confessed that it would be a retrograde step, but they believed it necessary as a temporary measure to save English commerce from complete ruin. The Morning Post, the organ of aristocratic Whiggism, the supporter of the present Ministry, sees in our stagnant trade "the reaction which, in the natural order of things, is likely to follow a period of national inflation." The editor says free trade has nothing to do with it. "On the contrary, it has exercised a beneficial influence in enabling the country to bear the depression of its industries. No one could for a moment think of imposing duties on the importation of food. Nor could a proposition be entertained for a return to the system of protection in any other direction. No doubt it would be better for us if other countries were to adopt the principles of free trade, as it would also be better for themselves. But the fatal step on our part if we were to retaliate on their protective duties by adopting the plan of reciprocity." Mr. Ashworth, an authority on trade questions, writes to the Times, and is about the only one who touches the heart of the trouble when he says, "it is absurd to argue any longer that we are not suffering from competition." He says the depression arises from the fact that "our wares are not so cheap or so good at the price as those of foreign manufacturers. Labor is cheaper abroad and men work longer hours." I find this point also insisted upon in an editorial in the Mercantile Gazette, which says, "the hours of English labor are restricted by parliamentary legislation to 56½ hours per week. The Continental workman gives 72 hours for a week's wages, which places the Continental master at an advantage of 15½ hours per week over the English employer, supposing the rate of wages to be the same. But this is not so. On the wages of 1,000 workmen for a year the excess of payment by an English master amounts to £15,000." Notwithstanding this advantage, the English manufacturer still "rules the market of the world," and will hold this supremacy by "a further development of machinery" to meet the desertion of the laborer and the mechanic and fight the cheaper work of other countries. The Gazette seems to forget that increased mechanical appliances are also weapons in the hands of foreigners, and that America in particular is a great creator of labor-saving machines and tools. Mr. David MacIver, member of Parliament and ship-owner, of Liverpool, speaks the sentiments of the growing body of protectionists of whom I have previously spoken, when he says that he is in favor of free trade, but he objects to it all being on one side, and he would bring other nations to an understanding of the matter by retaliatory tariffs. His views are shared by some of the largest manufacturers of Sheffield, Birmingham, Leeds, and Bradford, with whom I have recently conversed. It is held as a maxim of free trade, in reply to arguments of this class, that if in spirit of retaliation we interfere with imports on our side, we either force the English consumers to pay higher prices for what they receive or destroy the trade we have with the country upon which we retaliate.

ENGLAND'S REAL DANGER.

What Englishmen refuse to consider, except when, like Mr. Gladstone, they wish to spite a formidable opponent, is the possibility that England, having reached the height of her prosperity, begins, like the classic nations, to descend the hill. Playfair has an apt illustration, it seems to me, when in one of his philosophic treatises he discusses the mighty events that have removed Babylon and compare it to the Euphrates and the Nile to the Thames and the Texel. The sun rises and the seasons return to the plains of Egypt as they did 3,000 years ago; the principles of vegetation have not altered; the subordinate animals do not refuse to assist man in his labor and supply him with food. But in one nature that is less bountiful, and man has more knowledge and more power than ever he had; "but it is not the man of Syria or of Egypt that has more knowledge or more power. There he has suffered his race to decay, and, along with himself, his works have degenerated." May it not be that the present falling back of English trade, the universal distress, the little prospect in the future, the failing banks, the dishonest practices of financiers, the growing wealth of lawyers, the increase in the consumption of luxuries, the profligacy of our cities, the loading of our cottons, the inferiority of our once splendid hardware and cutlery, the divisions in our councils, the selfish partisanship of our statesmen, and the legalization of Exchange gambling and joint-stock bubbles, are all details in the general aspect of a great nation that is suffering its race to decay and his works to degenerate? If this view of the situation would only take hold of the public mind it might lead to reformation in a race famous for its native vigor, that triumphs over difficulties, and its broad-minded-ness. Look at comparatively modern days, and see from what a height the Dutch have fallen. Except that the distance from Europe places America at a disadvantage in the race, there is something not unlike in the English competition with the Dutch in the old days and America's competition with England in the new. First there were fisheries questions, including English jealousies, which resulted in the revocation of Dutch licenses to fish in English waters; then there was the whaling business, and next the fight for the carrying trade of the seas; and it may be mentioned as an argument for the protectionists that Cromwell did a great deal to break down foreign trade to England and Dutch shipping, which was largely employed by English traders, by imposing heavy Customs upon foreign produce, and making the employment of home-built vessels compulsory. Then the Dutch, just as England has done, went into stock-jobbing and foreign loans. In 1700 the Dutch were the bankers of Europe. They had claims upon foreign debtors to the amount of 3,000,000,000 guilders. At the height of their prosperity their decline began. During the wars with France and Spain Holland lost much of her trade to France, and England progressed in industrial work and commerce. England presently challenged her trade with other countries, just as America is now challenging England. First the English got hold of the Dutch trade with Russia; then they secured most of her Swedish and Danish trade; then they imposed fierce duties on foreign fabrics and shut out Dutch linens; they fought her for the commerce of the Mediterranean; France and England beat the Dutch in their competition for the Indian trade. Oriental linen came to Europe and still more reduced the demand for Dutch; the West Indies yielded to English and French enterprise, sugar, coffee, and spices overtopping the Dutch imports from Java. The Dutch did not retaliate with heavy duties; neither will the English. Holland continued to be rich on account of her accumulated wealth; England will never be poor. Where is Holland now? The comparison which I have merely suggested might be followed up, if not profitably, at least as an interesting and possible parallel between the competition of America and England; more particularly, as even in those early days the United States was a factor, for she appeared as a rival to Holland, sending to Spain, Portugal, and Italy, in exchange for the commodities of those countries, great store of fish and flour. Whatever England's future may be, she is passing through a supreme crisis; I ought perhaps to say she is in the midst of great national troubles. Whether she will "get through" is a problem which time alone can solve.

THROWN FROM A BRIDGE BY A TRAIN.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 8.—An eastward-bound passenger train on the Cleveland, Columbus and Indianapolis Railroad struck the scaffolding on the new bridge near Springfield, Ohio, yesterday, throwing off four workmen. William Ferren, living in Cleveland, fell 30 feet into the stream, and had his shoulder and thumb broken, and was badly cut in the head. Another man, whose name is unknown, was also badly injured.

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

THIRD SESSION—Jan. 8.

SUMMARY.

In the Senate several communications from the Secretary of War were submitted and referred to the appropriate committees. Mr. Booth introduced a bill to reduce the price of public lands. Mr. Windom offered a resolution, which was adopted, calling on the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for information regarding the taxation of churches, schools, &c. Mr. Edmunds submitted a joint rule providing that no bill which shall pass either house on the last three days of the session shall be sent to the other for its concurrence, and it was referred to the Committee on Rules. Mr. Grover made a personal explanation, denying certain newspaper charges against his administration as Governor of Oregon. The Senate then took up the bill amending the Patent laws, but its consideration was interrupted by the announcement of the death of Representative Hastridge, of Georgia. A committee of three Senators was appointed to attend the funeral, and the Senate adjourned.

Representative Hastridge's death was announced in the House, and after the appointment of a committee to take charge of the funeral that body adjourned.

SENATE.

COMMUNICATIONS FROM THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a number of communications from the Secretary of War, showing the expenditures at the Springfield National Armory during the past year; recommending legislation to authorize him to turn over to the Secretary of the Interior the Fort Abercrombie and, Seward Military Reservations in Dakota Territory, they being no longer needed for military purposes; inclosing a letter from Gen. Irwin McDowell, suggesting a change in the One Hundred and Fourth Article of War, which provides that no sentence of a court-martial shall be carried into execution until the whole proceedings shall have been approved by the officer ordering the court or by the officer commanding; also, transmitting the report of Capt. Robert M. Scott relative to the manner and cost of publishing the rebellion war records, all of which were referred to the appropriate committees.

THE ANTI-DISCRIMINATION BILL.

Mr. WALLACE, of Pennsylvania, presented a resolution of the Pittsburg Chamber of Commerce, urging the early passage of the House bill known as the Anti-discrimination bill. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THE PRICE OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. BOOTH, of California, introduced a bill to reduce the price of public lands within railroad limits. Referred to the Committee on Public Lands. It provides that all public lands within railroad limits which have heretofore been subject to pre-emption entry at $2 50 per acre are hereby reduced to $1 25 per acre, and all bona fide settlers under the Homestead laws on said lands shall be allowed to enter 160 acres thereof.

THE TAXATION OF CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS.

Mr. WINDOM, of Minnesota, offered the following:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be directed to inform the Senate what churches, colleges, school-houses, and educational institutions have been exempted from taxation and the payment of taxes for general or special improvements since June 17, 1870, and what sums of money, if any, have been remitted or refunded on account of taxes assessed on churches, colleges, school-houses, and educational institutions since June 17, 1870; and what taxes, if any, have been remitted or refunded in respect of colleges, school-houses, and educational institutions, the amounts so remitted, and the authority under which such remission and repayments have been made.

Agreed to.

A PROPOSED JOINT RULE.

Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, said there were no joint rules for the government of the two houses of Congress, and what he wished to accomplish by the resolution which he proposed to offer was to declare that on the last three days of this session no bill passing either house could be sent to the other for its concurrence, and that on the last day of the session no bill shall be sent to the President for his approval. The old joint rules, adopted 60 or 70 years ago, at a time when there was little or no business before Congress was light such rules were necessary. Unfortunately, they had been suspended during late years. He therefore submitted the following:

Resolved, by the Senate, the House concurring, That no bill that shall have passed one house shall be sent to the other for concurrence after 12 o'clock midnight of the last day of March of the present session.

Resolved, further, That no bill or resolution that shall have passed the Senate and House shall be presented to the President of the United States for his approval after 12 o'clock midnight of the 24 day of March of the present session.

Resolved, further, That the foregoing orders shall not be repealed or suspended except on one day's notice, and by a vote of three-fourths of the members of each house present.

Referred to the Committee on Rules.

HON. GEORGE BANCROFT ACCORDED THE PRIVILEGES OF THE FLOOR.

Mr. THURMAN, of Ohio, submitted a resolution instructing the Committee on Rules to consider the propriety of so amending the rules as to confer on the privileges of the floor the ex-Cabinet Minister whose appointment was earliest in date of those now living. He said this was a gentleman distinguished for his learning as well as his patriotism; who was Secretary of the Navy under President Polk, and who could not now come upon the floor to meet his friends who were prominent in the Government the history of which he had written. It was indeed time for him to say that the resolutions referred to George Bancroft, the historian. The resolution was agreed to.

A PERSONAL EXPLANATION BY MR. GROVER.

Mr. GROVER, of Oregon, rose to a question of privilege, and read a telegram recently published in the New-York Tribune in regard to $97,000 of the funds of the State of Oregon having been appropriated and not accounted for during his administration as Governor, and said it was a duty he owed to himself as well as to the Senate to notice these charges. As to the charge of $27,000 having been paid out by order of the Board of School Land Commissioners, of which, as Governor, he was President, covering a period of seven years, it was entirely false. He quoted from the public lands legislation, and stated that the rates to be paid to agents was fixed by law (2½ per cent.). No member of the board was interested to the amount of one cent in the payments nor in the land surveyed. He denied, seriatim, the charges that $77,393 had been paid to the late Sheriff, and $13,200 for Quartermaster's stores in the Modoc war, $3,600 overpaid to Chadwick, Secretary of State, &c. As to Sheriffs' fees, he never heard any question in regard to their legality but this one, the charge in regard to fraud in purchasing Quartermaster's stores in the Modoc war, he quoted from a report of the late Inspector-General, James A. Hardy, United States Army, to show that all the stores were properly purchased and accounted for. He characterized the charges as false throughout, and having originated with his enemies, who were attempting to ruin him. He quoted at great length from Oregon State laws and records to show that he acted justly and in accordance with law.

THE ARMY REORGANIZATION BILL.

The morning hour having expired, Mr. BURNSIDE, of Rhode Island, said the bill for the reorganization of the Army had been made the special order for to-day. He now moved that the Senate proceed with its consideration.

Mr. WADLEIGH, of New-Hampshire, said the unfinished business was the bill to amend the patent laws, and he could not consent to its displacement.

THE BILL AMENDING THE PATENT LAWS.

The Senate then proceeded with the consideration of the bill to amend the patent laws, and Mr. WADLEIGH, in charge of the bill, took the floor to speak in favor thereof.

THE DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE HASTRIDGE.

Just after beginning his remarks a message was received from the House announcing the death of Hon. Julius Hastridge, of Georgia, and the adoption of a concurrent resolution by the House providing for the appointment of a committee of Representatives and Senators to arrange for the funeral and accompany the remains to Georgia.

On motion of Mr. GORDON, of Georgia, the Senate unanimously agreed to the resolution, and the VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Messrs. Gordon, Booth, and Beck as the committee of arrangements on the part of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, the Senate, then, at 1:10 P. M., as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, adjourned until to-morrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THE DEATH OF MR. HASTRIDGE.

In the opening prayer, the Chaplain alluded in a feeling and solemn manner to the death, this morning, of Mr. Hastridge, of Georgia; and immediately after the reading of the Journal the official announcement of the death was made by Mr. CROSS, of Georgia, who offered a resolution expressing the regret of the House, and providing for a special joint committee of seven members and three Senators to take order for appropriate funeral services and to escort the remains of the deceased to his late residence in Georgia. The Speaker appointed as such committee on the part of the House Messrs. Cook of Georgia, Felton of Georgia, Cox of New-York, Caskey of Virginia, Stone of Iowa, Davidson of Florida, and Hanna of Indiana.

The House then adjourned.

DECISIONS IN THE COURTS.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

By Justice Bradley.

Elliott vs. Coles.—This application must be denied. There is no evidence that the third party is indebted or has property belonging to the judgment debtor. The statement that Mr. Webb, Trustee, was about to pay over to the judgment debtor $700 is irrelevant and inconsequential. Further, the judgment debtor had no notice of the supplementary proceedings, and the notice of this application was entirely insufficient.

King vs. Terry.—The Clerk's taxation is affirmed.

Wagner vs. Zahn.—Bill of particulars ordered.

Brooks et al. The Continental Insurance Company.—Motion granted for second Friday.

National Bowdoin Bank vs. Ford.—Motion to amend summons and complaint granted, without costs.

Shafer vs. Colver.—Motion to restore cause to Special Circuit calendar denied. The cause must go back on the general calendar in the regular place.

Bushnell vs. Hackett.—Reference ordered to compute.

Keeler vs. McGovern.—Motion granted.

National Bowdoin Bank vs. Ford.—Motion to place cause on Special Circuit calendar dismissed, with $10 costs, and without prejudice to renewal, and also without prejudice to a motion, if plaintiff is so advised, to strike out the amended answer.

Dresden vs. Fitch.—Plaintiff would doubtless be entertained for the defendant to have an immediate trial, but there is no rule which entitles him in an action for fraud and deceit to have the cause on the Special Circuit calendar thereby, because the plaintiff's case has been shorn of every element upon which they can hope for success. It would only impose costs and a long delay. Motion and such motions upon the court, but that the plaintiff has not appeared.

In the Matter of Cowan.—Writ de lunatico inquirendo granted.

Knickerbocker Life Insurance Company vs. Patterson et al.—Motion granted.

Society for the Reform of Juvenile Delinquents vs. Lubbe.—Injunction continued until the hearing, with $10 costs.

Pennoid vs. Brinkerhoff.—Referee ordered to compute.

Turner vs. Brumhall.—Motion granted upon the terms specified in the case reported in the Daily Register of Dec. 30, 1878, and on one day's notice.

Radford vs. Radford et al.—Report confirmed and judgment granted.

Matter of Hennessy.—The circumstances of the case are such as to repel all suspicion of collusion. Report confirmed; judgment of divorce granted, and custody of the children given to the petitioner.

Urban vs. Keith.—Motion to vacate judgment denied, but the defendant to have leave within 10 days to interpose an answer, and to come in and defend upon payment within the like time of all plaintiff's disbursements in the cause, including Sheriff's fees and expenses of advertising and $10 costs of this motion, the judgment executing, and leave to stand as security.

Anderson vs. Kent.—It would, I think, be rather severe to impose as a condition the payment of an allowance, or, indeed, of all the costs in the cause to the plaintiff, however, should pay all the disbursements to date, the December term and trial fee, and $10 costs of this motion within 10 days to be fixed by me, and may amend as he desires, the amended and supplemental complaint to be served, and defendant to have 20 days to answer if so he may be advised.

Almon vs. Hamilton.—Leave to amend granted.

Riggs vs. Waydell.—There is no material distinction between this case and McFarren vs. St. John, (14 Hun., 397.) The defendant in showing a meritorious defence must set precisely as though it had not been served. There is no such thing as creating an offer by waiver; either there was an effective offer or there was not. The plaintiff could not waive it into validity as against the defendants. True, he called it the defendants' offer, and used it for his own purposes. It cannot be denied, however, this: If the defendants desired the benefit of the statute they were bound to do just what the statute pointed out. This they did not do, consequently the cause proceeded without a statutory offer. To talk of amending so as to alter the present legal status is to misconceive the office of amendment. Besides, that would be to make new and for the first time a good offer. That being so, by what authority would we deprive the plaintiff of his statutory right to accept within 10 days from the present date. The motion to amend by adding the plaintiff's offer to the answer and by adding the plaintiff's authority required by section 960 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and for an allowance must be denied, but under the circumstances without costs.

Schneider vs. Low.—The judgment in this court was had as against the defendants on the joint property. It could have been entered against the party contesting alone. The Marine Court judgment is, properly speaking, bad, and equally collusive. It cannot, however, be impeached in this action by the plaintiff in the Marine Court. Motion to this court must, therefore, be vacated as a judgment against the defendant, but may stand as a judgment against the plaintiff. The judgment in the Marine Court must be directed to restore the moneys in his hands until a proper application can be made to the Marine Court for the same. Motion granted, and until the further order of this court. It will probably be in the interest of justice that both judgments should be set aside, and the parties remitted to the position in which they stood before they attempted to use both courts to obtain preference through one partner in the one case and another in the other.

By Chief-Judge Davis.

Wells vs. Quick.—Let this order be settled on two days' notice.

Kiesthaar vs. American Mercantile Agency.—Order must stand as entered.

By Judge Van Vorst.

Orders Granted.—Moore vs. Leonard; in the matter of Adams vs. Richardson.

By Judge Donohue.

In the Matter of Goldstein.—I think there is enough for a stay, but do not think it a case for bail, pending the stay.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—PART I.

By Judge Donohue.

Mandel vs. the Knickerbocker Life Insurance Company.—Extra allowance of $200.

SUPERIOR COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

By Judge Speir.

Fairchild vs. Townsend.—The plaintiff is entitled to judgment, with costs. Opinion.

Leland et al. vs. Carnegie et al.—I see no good reason for modifying or adding to the order already entered in this cause on the 31st of December, 1878, and filed on the 2d day of January, 1879.

By Judge Freedman.

In the Matter of the Application of the Bowery Savings Bank.—Order settled.

By Judge Sedgwick.

Orders of Substitution.—Jaffray vs. Stahlnecker et al.; Murray vs. Stahlnecker et al.

Thornston vs. Hiss.—Order granted.

Reference Ordered.—Lortillard vs. The Philadelphia and Baltimore Central Railroad Company.

Johnson vs. Donnell.—Interrogatories settled.

Whitcomb vs. Gosling.—Order granting motion.

Gallahan vs. Rogan.—Order granted and undertaking approved.

Fatman vs. Hemshimer et al.—Commission ordered.

Orders Granted.—Campbell vs. Gilsey; Cruse vs. Bentley; Cook vs. Platt; Goddard vs. Sherwood; Butler vs. Mazzam.

COMMON PLEAS—SPECIAL TERM.

By Judge J. F. Daly.

Rabbi vs. Stauch.—Appeal dismissed.

In the Matter of the Final Accounting of Bellows et al.—Counsel will attend in court.

Annis Churchill vs. Walter S. Churchill.—Divorce granted.

Burby vs. Gardner.—Motion for a new trial denied, with $10 costs. See opinion on file.

MARINE COURT—CHAMBERS.

By Judge Sheridan.

Motions Granted.—Tara vs. Moyarg. Boyle vs. Conner; Mignaye vs. Hulme; Williamson vs. Williamson; Fulton vs. Gray.—Motion denied, with $10 costs.

Receivers Appointed.—Coyle vs. McCool; Scheible vs. Murphy.

The Signal Service Bureau reports indicates for to-day in this region, south-east to north-east winds, falling barometer, stationary temperature, cloudy and rainy weather.

The election of Mr. ALVORD as Speaker can hardly be considered a triumph for the better elements of the Republican Party, although a good many personal considerations contributed to the result which are hardly within the pale of criticism. The desire to see a long career of legislative service crowned by the position of presiding officer of the Assembly was a perfectly laudable one in Mr. ALVORD, and one which a good many of those who voted for him thought fit to humor without necessarily implying a thorough commendation of the public career of the caucus nominee. The conflict of individual ambitions in regard to places on committees was, evidently, more successfully reconciled by Mr. ALVORD than by his more conscientious and less skillful opponent. The new Speaker has emphatically disclaimed any obligation to railroad or insurance interests in bringing about his election. It will be in his power to prove that no pledges adverse either to the welfare of the party or the people have entered into his successful canvass, and it is to be hoped that the composition of the committees which it will be his duty to appoint will demonstrate the entire independence of sinister influences which his friends claim for him.

Mr. EWING'S speech at Columbus yesterday compares curiously with the dry and lifeless letter of Senator THURMAN. It is full of energy, and shows that the champion inflationist is no more depressed than he is instructed by the course of events. His programme is still aggressive. "The substitution of greenbacks for bank-notes, the unlimited coinage of the old silver dollar, and the prompt and absolute stoppage of all increase of the bonded debt for resumption purposes," these are the "few fundamental propositions" on which he asks all "citizens who want a Government for the people and by the people," to "unite in opposition to the aggressions of the money power." Then he adds with refreshing coolness, "let us postpone all further question about resumption until it shall have had its day of trial." If Mr. EWING can get the majority of the people of the United States to unite on either of his first two propositions, he may spare himself all uneasiness about resumption; it will have been "postponed" forever.

The letter of Mr. THURMAN is, not to put too fine a point on it, very dull. His recital of the elements of the belief of the original Jacksonian Democracy contains much that is meant to be attractive to the uninformed, but though it is disingenuous, it is not skillful, and there is not a word in it to carry conviction to an impartial mind or to awaken partisan enthusiasm. He talks about the opponents of the Democracy as being always those "whose leaders have ever sought, and ever will seek, special privileges created by law." This is mere rubbish, and comes with a bad grace from the leader of a party which sought to intrench the most monstrous special privilege known to history—that of the ownership of labor—in the law of the country. Another reference is to the comparison between the expenses of JACKSON'S Administration, and those of the present, based solely on population, and ignoring the pensions and the expense of collecting a revenue made necessary by a Democratic rebellion. Mr. THURMAN prudently ignores all allusion to the "forced resumption," against which he has so long labored only to be put to confusion by its result.

Mr. EDMUNDS' proposed rule governing the action of the two houses of Congress at the close of the present session is an extremely proper one. It provides, in substance, that no bill shall be sent from either house to the other during the last two days of the session, and that no bill shall be sent to the President for his approval during the last day of the session. This leaves two days for action on bills pending between the two houses, and one day for the proper preparation of bills on which action has been completed before going to the President. Had such a rule existed last year, it is not likely that the unseemly scandal concerning the engrossing of the Hot Springs Reservation bill would have occurred; but, then, it must also be remembered that we should not have had the exposure of the tactics of the Treasury Secret Service agents, which has produced the effect of bringing that bureau directly under the supervision of the head of the department—an arrangement which ought to insure the correction of its present loose management, and which at any rate will concentrate responsibility.

Our special dispatches from New-Orleans give still further particulars of the evidence taken before the Teller committee concerning affairs in Tensas Parish, La. They confirm the testimony of which an abstract was given yesterday morning. The most remarkable feature of the Tensas case is the relentless manner in which the regular Democratic managers practiced their pernicious tactics against men of their own race and party. The outrages can no longer be explained by unconquerable aversion to negro supremacy, or by fears of Republican misrule. They are now placed in their proper light as the violent and corrupt devices of lawless and unscrupulous political adventurers, with no higher or more exceptional motive than vulgar greed of power. It is becoming plain that animosity to the negro now, as before the war, is often used as a cloak for the most narrow and selfish personal ambition.

THE FEELING ABOUT RESUMPTION.

The drift of business opinion on the subject of resumption is indirectly shown by the efforts of public men who opposed it now to reconcile its accomplishment with their own views. Judge KELLEY'S eagerness to advertise his change of position was one of many illustrations of the fact that professed leaders of public opinion usually are its servile followers. They were Anti-resumptionists as long as that attitude seemed to be popular; they are now anxious to prove that their objections were confined to particular methods, and that these having been modified, they are in harmony with the Treasury policy. The circumstance really has no significance except as confirmatory of the impression produced upon the classes that care little for ordinary politics. In this light it is useful. When the financial demagogues moderate their tone, and try to find excuses for an abandonment of aggressive tactics, we may be quite sure that popular feeling runs in the right direction.

And a mass of concurrent testimony, reaching us through the mails, justifies this conclusion. From various important centres, we have newspaper reports of interviews with resident business men of all shades of politics. Nearly uniformly the utterances are brief. The merchant, the banker, the lawyer pauses a moment to catch the inquiry of the ubiquitous reporter, and concentrates his answer into a single sentence. To say that there is unanimity would be to overstate the case. We should doubt the fidelity of the news-gatherer if all the sayings he records were conceived in the same vein. It is not discouraging, therefore, to find a Cincinnati druggist remarking that he "does not believe in resumption; does not like the idea of going to New-York for gold,"—for the exception adds strength to the rule. That rule is as marked as it well could be. In all forms of business we trace, as the prevailing characteristic, a hopeful spirit, and a reliance upon resumption as an indication of the recuperative forces almost everywhere at work. Among Republicans there is a not unreasonable inclination to rejoice at the triumph of what to all intents and purposes is the Republican policy; but we must do the interviewed Democrats the justice of admitting that, speaking generally, they do not allow partisan considerations to blind them to the improved aspect of the financial situation.

A few general ideas pervade all the interviews. The business of the country, it is alleged, had reached "bed-rock." There had been a turn in the tide of affairs, partly as a natural result of the elimination of evils which culminated in 1873, partly in anticipation of the change which has now occurred. Resumption is welcomed, then, not only as the culminating stage of a process which in its course occasioned hardship, but as the precursor of the confidence whose gradual development will show itself in the revival of industry and trade. In this hopeful estimate we have one of the pledges of improvement. Excitement is not apparent anywhere. But the despondency which long hung like a cloud over the business community disappears, and faith in the future takes its place. The faith is all the more welcome because it appears to be rational. Resumption is not expected to work wonders. Growing confidence made it possible, and in turn it will foster confidence. On this basis, so far as we can judge, the traders and financiers scattered through the country build the expectations which predominate in the reports supplied by contemporaries.

Here and there, an incidental allusion suggests a good deal. Thus a Zanesville lawyer, being asked, "Do you see any practical good in resumption?" replied, "Yes. Some large money-lenders, for whom I do business, have ordered me to execute loans for them on mortgages at 8 per cent., who have for years demanded and received 10, and suits to collect loans are not prosecuted with the same vigor in our courts as they were six months ago." Another lawyer, also in Ohio, sees in the confidence which resumption inspires in his own circle of clients, ground for believing that abandoned enterprises will be resumed and new ones entered upon. Bankers and private capitalists mingle with their congratulations quiet hints as to financial possibilities if the present Resumption law be accepted as a finality. "Resumption will be all right so long as the balance of trade is in our favor," says a Western man who, though having opposed resumption, would now like to see it a success. "I see danger in unlimited silver," says a more conservative financier, "and though I hope for the best, I shall not feel entirely safe until something like HEWITT'S bill is enacted." There are others who speculate on the possibilities of conflict between the national banks and the Government, so long as the latter retains banking functions. But it is noticeable that the majority of those who frankly point out considerations inimical to the permanence of resumption, express the belief that before the influences now favorable to resumption are exhausted, its beneficial results will be sufficiently obvious to overcome opposition to the amendments yet required. The support thus acquired will undoubtedly be valuable. The fight in behalf of sound finance is not ended, however, and we risk too much when we depend on the unaided effects of experience to bring about acquiescence in necessary reforms.

Meanwhile the constant linking together of resumption and the sale of the Four per cents can hardly commend itself to thoughtful observers. From one point of view, the remarkable progress in refunding the debt among our own people is a cause of honest satisfaction. It indicates faith in the integrity of the Government as regards payment in gold or its equivalent; and, of course, the attainment of resumption tends to fortify this confidence. But the subject has another and a less favorable aspect. The millions of which we hear, day after day, as being invested in the Four per cents are a rather disheartening proof of the continued unwillingness of moneyed people to invest in property or in the industries and enterprises whose restored vitality is of infinitely greater importance to the country than any gain accruing from the reduction of interest. Confidence will grow slowly, and one sign of its growth will be an unwillingness to rest satisfied with 4 per cent. as a return for capital invested.

THE CENSUS OF 1880.

The bill introduced into the House on Tuesday by Mr. COX, of New-York, brings before Congress none too early an important subject which should be attended to this session, if the ends which the proposed legislation has in view are likely to be reached. The next Federal census must be taken under the existing law unless a new statute for that purpose is passed before the 1st of next January. To leave the subject for the hasty consideration which it must necessarily receive between the meeting of Congress in December and the adjournment for the holidays will be too great a risk to incur in a matter of such importance. The defects of the law of 1850 under which the last three censuses have been taken, are notorious, and its repeal or radical amendment have been urged repeatedly and forcibly. Some of its evils were avoided in the taking of the last census by the efforts of Gen. FRANCIS A. WALKER, whose vigilant and skillful supervision secured for the results of that enumeration a degree of completeness and accuracy far beyond that of any preceding census. But no one was more frank than Superintendent WALKER in admitting and pointing out the shortcomings of the ninth census, which were chiefly due to the defects in the existing law, which nothing but legislation could remedy. It now becomes the duty of Congress to see that another census shall not be taken under the old system, which has been so generally condemned by those who best understand the subject, and to pass a law which shall embody the best features of European censuses and the suggested improvements on which publicists agree.

One of the worst features of the present law is that of protracted enumeration. In 1870 the canvassers were allowed from the 1st of June until the 10th of September in which to make the returns of population, and the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to extend the time until the 1st of October. The enumeration, therefore, might be prolonged through about 100 days. It is absurd to suppose that anything like the real number of inhabitants can be ascertained under such circumstances. At best but an approximation to accuracy can be expected, which, in many cases, will be about as valuable as a guess, for statistical purposes. Especially in large cities, where a large proportion of the people live in boarding-houses and are constantly moving from one place to another, and where frequent removals of private families are common, a protracted enumeration will give but an estimate of the population. In Great Britain, and in most Continental countries, the enumeration is made in a single day by the use of "prior schedules," or printed blanks, which are distributed among families, and, after being filled out on a named day, are collected by the census agents. This plan not only effects a great saving of time and money, but experience has proved that it is the only method yet devised by which a satisfactory degree of accuracy can be attained. It has led to the best results in Europe, and publicists and statists are all but unanimous in their approval of it. Its adoption has been urged upon Congress, but as yet without success. The chief argument brought against its use in this country has been that in the Territories and some of the more sparsely-settled States it is impossible to make an enumeration of the inhabitants in one day. But even if this is true, the fact that a good system will not work in exceptional cases is no reason why it should not be adopted throughout the country at large. Gen. WALKER has said that the plan of a quick enumeration can be successfully applied in the United States to 99 per cent. of the population, thus limiting the evils of a protracted enumeration to the inconsiderable fraction of 1 per cent. The same high authority has expressed the opinion that, under a proper law, "it would be possible to take the census of every city and manufacturing town in the United States in a single day, and to complete the enumeration of all properly agricultural sections in a period not exceeding three days, allowing, if need be, for the completion of the purely mining States and the Territories, and perhaps for some portions of Texas, California, Kansas, and Nebraska a longer period of time, not to exceed thirty days. Such an enumeration could be accomplished in the present condition of the settlement of the United States. It would cost little if any more than a census taken according to the present methods, and it would be inexpressibly more satisfactory."

Another feature which has heretofore vitiated the system of taking the census is the provision of the act of 1850 which vests in United States Marshals powers and duties in connection with the census which as a rule they are not qualified to exercise and perform. Not only does the discharge of the legitimate duties of their office leave little or no time for the proper supervision of taking the census, but it is obvious that they cannot be expected to bring to the latter work those special qualifications which are absolutely necessary. The collection and tabulation of social and industrial statistics require trained and experienced supervisors, and on the care and thoroughness with which the details are worked up depend the value of the final results. But this is only one, and not the most serious, objection to this feature of the existing law. Another is that it makes the judicial and the census districts coextensive, when, in many cases, there are imperative reasons why they should not be so. Thus, when the last census was taken, Southern Florida, with less than 6,000 inhabitants, was at once a judicial and a census district. The enumeration was made by a single Assistant Marshal, under the supervision of a United States Marshal. The Judicial District of Northern New-York, which was also a census district, contained nearly 2,500,000 inhabitants, who were enumerated by more than 600 Assistant Marshals, under the direction of one man. In like manner, Delaware and Massachusetts, Idaho and Indiana, were each a census district. Such inequalities in the supervision of census work can be productive only of mischief. Moreover, by the present law, the formation of census subdivisions is left to United States Marshals, subject only to the limitation that no subdivision shall contain more than 20,000 inhabitants. It is the opinion of the highest authorities that no subdivision should exceed 10,000 inhabitants, and that only in cities and large towns should they reach this limit. This important matter should no longer be left in the hands of United States Marshals, who are too often influenced by personal or political considerations to make the subdivisions as large as possible. The bill introduced by Mr. COX is intended to prevent the abuses which are likely to arise from this source. By providing for the appointment of one or more general supervisors of the census in each State and Territory, it will properly strip the United States Marshals of the powers and duties hitherto vested in them.

Another important provision of the proposed bill is that which is intended to secure, as far as possible, the advantages of a quinquennial census. Some States of Europe take censuses every five years, and others as often as once in three years. The advantages of enumerations at short intervals are acknowledged. But in the United States there are serious obstacles in the way of taking Federal censuses oftener than once in ten years. Nearly all of the States, however, make enumerations more or less complete in the intervals between the national censuses. If every State will adopt the schedules of the General Government, and collect and publish the same classes of statistics every fifth year after the Federal enumeration, the results will be comparable with those of the Federal census, and will practically afford a quinquennial census. For the advantages which will be secured in this way to the country at large, Mr. COX proposes that the General Government shall bear a part of the expense of taking the census in each State.

CITY AND COUNTY DEBTS IN NEW-JERSEY.

Gov. MCCLELLAN, of New-Jersey, in his annual Message to the Legislature next week, proposes to devote considerable attention to the subject of municipal indebtedness in that State. It is one of grave interest to the tax-payers, and has not received the intelligent consideration its importance merits at the hands of the Legislature. In fact, so far from passing any general laws prohibiting the increase of debt, that body has shown the greatest liberality in authorizing the indefinite extension of existing municipal debts and the issue of new bonds for all sorts of purposes. Bonds may be issued for arrears of taxes, for street assessments, to fund floating debts, for street improvements, for building bridges and county buildings, for water-works, for public roads, for school-houses, for the purchase of steam fire-engines, and for almost every other purpose of municipal administration. A law of the State requires annual reports to be made to the Controller of all county, city, township, and other local indebtedness; but the law has always been a dead letter, and there are no official and comprehensive statistics on the subject. To ascertain the facts, Gov. MCCLELLAN has applied to the local authorities for information on the subject, and will probably present some interesting tables in his forthcoming Message.

An approximate estimate presents the enormous total of $50,000,000 as the aggregate of municipal indebtedness in New-Jersey. This includes county, city, township, and school district debt. The total is equal to fully 10 per cent. of the assessed valuation of the whole State. It represents a burden of $40 for every man, woman, and child in the State. The interest alone, at 7 per cent., (the rate it nearly all bears,) would amount to a tax of $3,500,000 yearly, requiring a tax-rate of nearly three-quarters of 1 per cent. on all the taxable property. As many of the counties, cities, townships, &c., are every year raising considerable sums toward extinguishing their debt, the whole tax for debt and interest must amount to upward of $5,000,000 annually, or 1 per cent. of the assessed valuation. Indeed, from the data at hand it appears that one-third of all the taxes levied are to meet obligations incurred by the people in the heyday of their prosperity, when the Municipal authorities could not prosecute public improvements half fast enough to meet the demand of sanguine speculators. In Hudson County, the aggregate of municipal and local indebtedness is about $15,000,000, or 16 per cent. of the county ratables; in Essex County it is about $15,000,000, or 14 per cent.; in Union County it is about $9,000,000, or 30 per cent.; in Passaic County, $1,800,000, or 7 per cent.; in Middlesex, $1,300,000, or 7 per cent.; in Camden, $1,000,000, or 5 per cent.; and in the other counties smaller sums, but all representing a very respectable total, and swelling the aggregate to probably $50,000,000.

In the face of these startling statistics, it is probable that the Legislature at its coming session will be extremely careful about granting authority to every little village or school district to go in debt, or to indulge in the illimitable expansion of city and county indebtedness, and the indefinite postponement of the payment of the same. The debt of the State is less than $2,000,000, and there is a sinking fund of $1,300,000. The county debts, too, are for the most part moderate. Essex leads with $3,000,000; Hudson, Union, Bergen, and Middlesex follow, in the order named. Passaic County has but $189,500 of bonds outstanding, with no floating debt, and will retire $21,500 of bonds within three months. The debts of the cities are the most burdensome. Jersey City heads the list with $13,000,000; Newark comes next with $10,000,000; Elizabeth follows with $6,000,000; then there is a drop to little Rahway's $1,800,000; Paterson, with five times the population, has $1,300,000; and Hoboken, New-Brunswick, Trenton, and Camden can all show good round figures on the debit side of their ledgers. The great bulk of this city indebtedness was incurred for street improvements, and another large portion represents deficits in the collection of taxes. This last is the most alarming feature about the financial condition of these cities. Many of the municipalities fail to collect more than 60 or 70 per cent. of their annual tax levies. The deficit is carried along as floating debt until it becomes too large, and then is funded as the readiest way of getting rid of it. No statesman has yet arisen in New-Jersey to propose a more satisfactory—or, perhaps, it should be said a less unsatisfactory—way of evading this embarrassing problem. The financial officers of Jersey City, Newark, Elizabeth, Paterson, Rahway, and other cities look upon the prospect as anything but reassuring, and the heavy tax-payers—that is, those who actually pay their taxes—are getting uneasy, as they see no way of immediate relief from this unpleasant situation. Still, the 6 per cent. bonds of Jersey City, Newark, and Paterson command a ready premium, so great is the faith of investors in their ability and willingness to pay their debts. And, indeed, the people of all the cities of New-Jersey are so jealous of their honor that there is no doubt that they will find ways and means to meet their obligations, how great soever the difficulties to be overcome.

A DEMOCRATIC MYTH.

Yesterday was the anniversary of the battle of New-Orleans. The day was celebrated in different parts of the country, in various ways, but chiefly by Democrats. In Columbus, Ohio, there was a grand rallying of the clans, and the exuberant enthusiasm there displayed so far exceeds anything elsewhere observed that we are forcibly reminded of the fact that the seat of political influence has been placed beyond the Alleghany Mountains. "Westward the course of empire takes its way" is as amply shown by the Ohio celebration of the anniversary of the battle of New-Orleans as by the readiness with which most of the principal offices of the Republic are filled by members of the Twenty-third Ohio Regiment. The Ohio celebration of JACKSON'S victory was Democratic, if it was not Jacksonian Democratic. But exactly why the recurrence of this anniversary should be thought a fitting opportunity to knock down SAMUEL J. TILDEN and execute a scalp-dance on his mangled remains does not appear. Gen. EWING, however, did thus maltreat the late Democratic candidate for the Presidency. In some vicarious manner, we may suppose, the lamented TILDEN served to enhance the general joy at Columbus. He was "fired out," so to speak, as a blank cartridge in a salute. It pleased Gen. EWING to nominate Senator THURMAN as the next Presidential candidate of the Democracy, and to signalize this unique celebration of the anniversary of the battle of New-Orleans, the useless TILDEN was economized as fireworks. EWING, as master of ceremonies, roared and charged like one of the bulls of Bashan.

It is generally believed that ANDREW JACKSON fought the battle of New-Orleans. It was a famous victory. It is also believed that ANDREW JACKSON was a Democrat. Gradually, therefore, the Democratic Party have adopted JACKSON as a patron saint, so to speak; and the recurrence of the 8th of January is something more than a Democratic holiday. It is a Democratic patron saint's day; and ST. JACKSON is as freely spoken of as though he were regularly canonized. The similarity between Jacksonism and Democracy, as we now understand Democracy, is not perceptible to the unassisted vision. JACKSON always "took the responsibility;" he acted without orders; and, on one occasion, he threatened to break into the Senate Chamber and cut off the Senators' ears. Latter-day Democracy is severely constructionist. It stickles for crossing the t's and dotting the i's. When the t is not crossed, or the i is not dotted, there is a great cry of "treason!" and "fraud!" When there were symptoms of nullification in South Carolina, JACKSON defied CALHOUN and his followers, and demanded and obtained of Congress the first "force bill" ever enacted in this Republic. The Democracy of EWING and THURMAN has a weak side for nullification and secession, and weeps with intolerable anguish over a "force bill." Of the other numerous discrepancies between Jacksonism and latter-day Democracy, it is not necessary now to speak. Nevertheless, JACKSON is good enough for a rallying-post, a lay-figure for the Democracy; and when the party annually lashes itself into a fever over the name of that illustrious man, it is only doing what thousands of people do over a myth really less substantial than JACKSON and the battle of New-Orleans. The Democracy has a right to appropriate one day in the year in which the party may be cheered and individual leaders set up or howled down. The 8th of January is good enough for that purpose.

Politically speaking, there never were any cotton bales at the battle of New-Orleans. There never was any battle of New-Orleans. Perhaps, even, there never was any ANDREW JACKSON. Certainly, there never was any ANDREW JACKSON like that "old hero," who is so extravagantly and ignorantly eulogized by Democratic orators on each 8th of January. And if there had been such a man, he would not recognize himself as now depicted in Columbus and in Tammany Hall. Nor would there be any fellow-feeling between him and S. J. TILDEN, or between him and "TOM" EWING. What would ANDREW JACKSON have said of MANTON MARBLE and his "copperheads"? What of TILDEN and his famous Oregon correspondence? What of the entire Gramercy Park gang, with their cryptograms, dark lanterns, masks, and disguises? Is there any bond of sympathy between a character like JACKSON'S and one like THURMAN'S? When Mr. THURMAN sneaked into the camp of the soft-money men, after training with the hard-money party, was he a Jacksonian Democrat? And, now that he is making ready to sneak back again, is he more, or less, Jacksonian?

Nevertheless, though there may never have been any cotton bales, or any battle, or any JACKSON, it is a good thing for the Democracy that they have a high holiday once a year. They need an occasion for unbottling their enthusiasm. Most of the political anniversaries of the Republic have bitter memories for the Democrats. During a long and peculiarly interesting period of our national history, the Democracy, or a major portion of that party, were in a state of rebellion. They were being beaten everywhere, and those who were not in the field were in a state of abject mental depression. Latterly, the anniversary of the battle of New-Orleans has been celebrated with unusual splendor and enthusiasm. Democracy is thankful for something to hurrah over. Therefore, we hope that the party will cling to the 8th of January. The battle may be a myth, but the day really comes once a year.

The "taking account of stock" at the first of this year was in most instances the hardest task of the kind that business men of this generation have ever been called upon to perform. The dislike to acknowledge even to one's self that certain investments have turned out poorly, or that the book value of merchandise one has on hand is much too high, is natural enough, and is due to that hopefulness of disposition without which few great enterprises could succeed. But a time comes when balances have to be struck and the inevitable faced; and perhaps the date that marked our return to a sound currency was the best that could be selected for readjusting private affairs. With many business houses it is a custom to take account of stock semi-annually, though in the majority of cases once in 12 months is thought to suffice; but this unwillingness to recognize the results of the depression in business has for some time past proved sufficient to interfere with the working of these sound mercantile maxims. There is reason to believe that not a few merchants have systematically evaded this duty for two and even three years past, and that their credit to-day is based rather on anticipations of the future than on knowledge of the present. While there is every likelihood that we have seen the worst of our financial troubles, it must be added that the chances of our speedily getting into a better situation depend not a little on the readiness of our business men generally to accept and make the best of the prices, profits, and conditions of to-day.

If the National Government should compel the Central Pacific Railroad Company to make a public statement of its past and present financial condition, a great many doubts and surmises would be set at rest. Railroad building is unquestionably profitable work when aided by the subscriptions of bondholders and Government advances; and more than this, Messrs. STANFORD, HUNTINGTON, and CROCKER have been looked upon as remarkably long-headed men; but with all these advantages, how is it that the managers of the Central Company, who at the outset were poor men, were able to do so much better than their rivals of the Union Road, who possessed a much stronger financial backing? This question was asked several years ago, when the well-known OAKES AMES, who, before embarking on the Pacific Railroad scheme, was worth not less than $2,000,000, died insolvent; but it is as much a mystery now as it ever was. Besides building castles after the mediæval style in San Francisco, the resources of the Central Road have been diverted for the purpose of constructing new railroads along the Pacific coast and from San Diego eastward to Texas. If the funds of the Government had never been invested in the first enterprise, or if the money advanced had been paid back, these latter uses of the corporate income might be nobody's business outside of the stockholders. But, under the circumstances, the company cannot expect to be free from public curiosity. If the truth cannot be certainly known, conjectures will not be wanting to supply its place, which may or may not bear some relationship to it. An instance of this can be found in the belief, quite generally entertained in California, that the titles to the Central Road and to the new roads that have been built by its managers, are already in the possession of the great bonanza mining firm of FLOOD & O'BRIEN, the transfer having been made in payment of money borrowed. This story has, of course, no better foundation than common report, but then street gossip will be tolerated, if that is all that can be had.

Many women complain a great deal, and not without cause, that they have so much to do that the days are never long enough; that the darkness finds them with sundry duties undischarged. One reason is, no doubt, that they are not trained, as men are, or ought to be, to concentration and continuity. Another reason is, we suspect, their habit of writing long letters to one another, not on matters of consequence, but of no moment whatever. A large number keep up correspondence with a dozen or more of their feminine acquaintances—or friends, if the term be preferred—and devote a dozen or a score of hours a week to it. It is not astonishing how much the average woman can write about nothing; the endless details she can give in regard to trifles, gossip, and the like. It is not the young unmarried alone who do this. The sex frequently adhere to the time-consuming custom long after they have reached middle age and become mothers of large families. They will neglect things that ought not to be deferred to inform their country cousin of how they enjoyed the last party or the new opera, and sit up half the night to describe the final shred of the gown just received from the modiste. Men, as a rule, never write to one another, except on business, and usually very briefly. Women might do the same—if they were not women. The typical woman can no more be brief than she can be profane. Both brevity and profanity are totally unnatural to her. If she wants to write letters, it is purely her affair; but she surely might save much time by making them shorter.

The English Government seems to be having much the same trouble with the Kafirs in South Africa that we have from time with our Indians. In the matter of treatment there is a closer parallel between the two subjects than one would suppose when the successful administration of Indian affairs by the Government of Canada is taken into account. In the Cape Colony the natives have been permitted to retain their tribal forms of government, and have been given large and well-situated tracts of land, similar to our reservations. That, in spite of this tender treatment they prefer war to peace is what some of the colonial apologists for the existing complications would have us believe; only it is probable that there are to these, as to most quarrels, two very distinct sides. Indeed, it is more than hinted that encroachments have been made upon the territory of the Kafirs by covetous settlers, and that efforts toward a peaceful settlement of the disputes have not been marked by success. If the natives were slowly diminishing in numbers, or if familiar intercourse with the white men had lessened their warm attachment to their own rulers and customs, as is the case with our Indians, the present war might be looked upon as one of slight importance. But the facts are that each Kafir war—and there have been several—is more formidable than the one that preceded it. The natives rapidly multiply in number, increasing, if anything, faster than the whites. They lend themselves to the influences of civilization sufficiently to leave their homes and seek employment in the towns and on the farms of the colonists, and even gladden the heart of the missionary by becoming Christians; but when they have made what they consider a suitable competency, or if ordered back by their chiefs, they immediately quit their adopted homes and fall again, with no seeming hesitancy, into the habits of their tribe. A young Kafir toils through the first four or five years of his manhood for the purpose of obtaining the wealth needed to purchase two or more wives. Having secured these, life henceforth is to him a prolonged holiday, for his wives are bound to supply him with all that he needs. The Kafir question is one which is not yet even in a fair way toward disposal, since a complete victory by the colonists would not prevent a renewal of hostilities some years later. What is perhaps needed is a breaking up of the tribal organizations, so that the natives may be scattered all over the country and deprived of the means of concerted action.

It is pleasant to learn, after the topsy-turvy game to which Paris has been subjected in the past 30 years, that at least one old street, the Rue de l'Arbre, in the midst of the capital, and in the most magnificently transformed quarter, remains intact, with its venerable mansions and traditions of the seventeenth century. On this site during 1,200 years strange and terrible scenes have been enacted. At the point where the Rue de Rivoli cuts it, BRUNEHAUT, Queen of France, was, at the age of 80, torn asunder by horses in 612. In 1505 a great outbreak took place on the same spot because the Curé of St. Germain l'Auxerrois refused to perform the funeral service of a merchant's wife until he ascertained whether she had left any money to the Church. At the epoch of the Fronde this street was the scene of frequent outbreaks. It was there that Cardinal De Retz, passing through it one evening in 1648, was threatened by a roaster brandishing a long spit. The Cardinal had not the wildest idea who his enemy was, but had the gumption to say, "Villain, if your poor father could only see you now!" when the fellow, imagining that he was a friend of his family, implored pardon. In the last house on the right hand side, abutting on the Rue de Saint Honoré, lived in 1672 FRANCIS BARNOU, chief barber to LOUIS XIV. At No. 52, conspicuous by its curious look-whithing and sculptured balcony, lived TRUDON, butler to LOUIS XV. In 1769 there were three famous cafés in the street, frequented by learned men and artists of various kinds, and, finally, No. 3 is pointed out as the famous quarters of Mousquetaires D'Artagnan & Co., whom DUMAS has made familiar to every school-boy.

With the opening of the new year an ancient colonial custom was abandoned in Boston. This was the ringing of the public bells in some twenty or thirty different localities in the city at 7 o'clock in the morning, at noon, and at 9 o'clock in the evening. It is easier to account for the discontinuance of this practice than for its continuance through so many years of cheap clocks and watches, the more so that there was nothing approaching exactitude in this method of proclaiming the hour, as the bells were rung by men who were often behind-hand in the performance of their duty. The circumstance, however, recalls to mind that what was formerly an equally important signaling of time was abandoned a few years ago. This was the ringing of the public bells at 11 A. M. The 7 A. M. bells were supposed to indicate that it was time to attend to the business of the day; the noon alarm was for dinner, and the one at 9 P. M. a wholesome reminder of the necessity of sleep. But the 11 A. M. bells had a peculiar significance, as they were intended to suggest to the thoughtless mind of the citizen the desirability of taking his regular drink of Medford or New-England rum, if he wished to enjoy his midday meal with a good appetite. It may be that in Boston "throat-clearers" and "cobweb dusters" are taken as frequently now as in the good old days of HANCOCK and ADAMS; but it was thought not wise to thus publicly recognize human weaknesses of this nature, and the 11 o'clock bell-ringing was therefore dispensed with.

CHEERFUL REVELATIONS BEFORE THE AMERICAN SOCIAL SCIENCE ASSOCIATION IN BOSTON.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 8.—Mr. George T. Angell read a paper before the American Social Science Association here to-day on "Public Health Associations," in which he made some startling assertions about the adulteration of food. He said:

Cayenne peper is adulterated with red lead, mustard with chromate of lead, curry powder with red lead, vinegar with sulphuric acid, arsenic and corrosive sublimate. It is stated that probably half the vinegar now sold in our cities is rank poison. One of our Boston chemists analyzed 12 packages of pickles, put up by 12 different wholesale dealers, and found copper in 10 of them. Many of our flavoring oils, syrups, jellies, and preserved fruits contain poisons. The adulterations of tea are too numerous to mention. Coffee is not only adulterated, but a patent has been taken out for molding chicory into the form of coffee berries, and I am told that clay is now molded, and perhaps flavored with an essence, to represent coffee. Cocoa and chocolate are adulterated with various mineral substances.

Several mills in New-England, and probably many elsewhere, are now engaged in grinding white stone into a fine powder for purposes of adulteration. At some of these mills they grind three grades—soda grade, sugar grade, and flour grade. It sells for about half a cent a pound. Flour has been adulterated in England, and probably here, with plaster of Paris, bone dust, sand, clay, chalk, and other articles. I am told that large quantities of damaged and unwholesome grain are ground in with flour, particularly with that kind called Graham flour. Certainly, hundreds, and probably thousands, of barrels of "terra alba," or white earth, are sold in our cities every year to be mixed with sugars in confectionery and other white substances. I am told by an eminent physician that this tends to produce stone, kidney complaints, and various diseases of the stomach. A Boston chemist tells me that he has found 75 per cent. of "terra alba" in what was sold as cream of tartar used for cooking. A large New-York house sells three grades of cream of tartar. A Boston chemist recently analyzed a sample of the best grade, and found 50 per cent. of terra alba in that. Much of our confectionery contains 33 per cent. or more of "terra alba." The coloring matter of confectionery frequently contains lead, mercury, arsenic, and copper. Baking powders are widely sold which contain a large percentage of "terra alba" and alum.

It is not water alone that is mixed with milk. Thousands of gallons, and probably hundreds of thousands, are sold in our cities which have passed through large tins, or cans, in which it has been mixed with various substances. Receipts for the mixture can be bought by new milkmen from old, on payment of the required sum. I am assured upon what I believe to be reliable authority, that thousands of gallons of so-called milk have been, and probably are, sold in this city, which do not contain one drop of the genuine article. Large quantities of the meats of animals more or less diseased are sold in our markets. Cows in the neighborhood of our large cities are fed upon material which produces a large flow of unwholesome milk. Poultry are fed upon material which produces unwholesome eggs. Meats and fish are made unwholesome, frequently poisonous, by careless and cruel methods of killing. A California chemist recently analyzed many samples of whisky, pur

MRS. COBB'S MANY ACCUSERS

COMPLETION OF THE TESTIMONY FOR THE STATE.

MANY WITNESSES TO CONFIRM PORTIONS OF BISHOP'S STORY—THE MURDERED MAN'S SUSPICIONS ABOUT HIS MEDICINE—COBB'S FATHER AND MOTHER OF THE STAND.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NORWICH, Jan. 8.—The testimony to-day in the Cobb trial was comparatively uninteresting, taken in detail, but each bit served to confirm some portion of Bishop's own story, and those of other witnesses. Mrs. George N. Towne, who was first called, lives in Park-street. She remembers having had just one visit from Mrs. Cobb, two weeks from the Tuesday before Charles Cobb died; it was in the early evening, and a short visit was made; Mrs. Cobb went away quite abruptly on hearing a team pass. Mrs. Mary Maffit testified to having met Mrs. Cobb and Bishop on the street, between Hurlbert's store and Ford's fish market; also, near Breed Hall, one morning, and again on Pearl-street. The files of the Bulletin were introduced. The dates of a local entertainment, "Lindaressa," and of an article descriptive of an arsenic mine and the deadly character of arsenic as a poison, were identified. Mrs. John Gales testified that she saw Mrs. Cobb standing under the gas-light opposite Hurlbert's store, just about 10:20 o'clock; Bishop then came out of the store, crossed the street, and joined her, and they walked away in a direction opposite that of Cobb's house.

Mrs. Charles H. Cobb, mother of the deceased man, testified to the good health of her son up to the time of his illness, about the 23d of February, 1878; the witness often went to see her son on Sundays, and on the day after this illness she saw him. The story he told was carefully detailed by the witness, and exactly corresponded to the story of Dr. Perkins. The other attacks in March, April, and May were also particularly described, and this testimony also corroborated that already given by other witnesses on these points. Up to the time of Mr. Cobb's death the witness never talked to Mrs. Cobb about her intimacy with Bishop; but once in February she warned her son against him; Mrs. Cobb was present but said nothing; but the next night, after she went to the house, Mrs. Cobb said, apparently with no provocation, "I think people had better mind their own business, I do mine;" the day before Mr. Cobb died the witness suggested to him that he might have taken some other poison than lead; Mr. Cobb did not think it possible, and Mrs. Cobb said that they had no poison in the house; she remembered visiting Mrs. Cobb's house one day in February, when the little boy was sick; the witness found him alone down stairs, and sat there a few minutes; then she heard footsteps in the chamber above; the person went down the back stairs, and the outer door was opened and closed; she then saw Wesley Bishop go out, get into his wagon, and drive off; soon after Mrs. Cobb came into the room, pale and agitated; they merely exchanged greetings, and had no talk of the incident; this incident happened just before the witness warned her son to drop Bishop, as not a true friend; the mother was with Mr. Cobb the day he died; Mrs. Cobb was not present at the time; Mr. Cobb had insurance on his life to the extent of $1,800 or $2,000. Upon cross-examination, the witness said that her relations were always pleasant with her daughter-in-law; the latter was a good housekeeper; once, when she visited Mr. Cobb, he asked her to taste the Atwood's Bitters he was taking medicinally, as they were unusually bitter; she tasted them, but did not swallow any; they were very bitter; Mr. Cobb had been taking them medicinally for some time.

Henry M. Durfee had had a talk with his friend Mr. Cobb about his illness early in May; Mr. Cobb was not well enough to go to Voluntown; again, later, he said he thought he would not be able to go out Decoration Day; in February he had been sick, and told about Atwood's Bitters that he had been taking; Cobb asked what the witness supposed was in them; they had nearly killed him. On cross-examination he said that he knew of no intimacy between Cobb and Bishop; some time before his illness Cobb had worn full side whiskers; he thinks as late as January before Cobb died, but Cobb told him later that they were falling out so that he was obliged to shave clean; this was after his first illness.

Mrs. John Reynolds testified that she saw Bishop at Cobb's house the day after Mr. Cobb died, and saw Mrs. Cobb give two library books to him to return to the Otis Library. On cross-examination she was sure that it was not Mrs. Waterman that gave the books, although she was also present; there was no delay at all about the transaction, and on redirect examination she said that it was Mrs. Cobb who went into the adjacent room to get the books.

Mrs. Fuller, sister of the deceased man, testified that on Feb. 18 she told Mrs. Cobb that among the reports she had heard was one that Bishop had been there during Cobb's absence from town, and staid until 4 o'clock in the morning; Mrs. Cobb admitted that he had been there, but insisted that he did not stay so late; Mrs. Fuller told Mrs. Cobb she hoped that the latter would not think the witness malicious in reporting this rumor; Mrs. Cobb replied that she did not, but people were always talking about her, she would give them something to talk about. (Sensation in the court-room.) The witness had been told by Mrs. Cobb about some of her presents, but did not correspond to Bishop's statement. On examination she said she had talked with her brother about Bishop, and he said that he could not altogether countenance his conduct, meaning, perhaps, Bishop's drinking; she knew that before this time Cobb and Bishop had been near friends, and she and Mrs. Cobb and Mrs. Bishop had been quite intimate; the hand-mirror presented to Mrs. Cobb lay openly on the dressing table in the room of the latter, without concealment; she regarded Mrs. Cobb as a very neat housekeeper; she had never seen Mrs. Cobb wear the gold-tipped pencil case.

Dwelle Waterman, who had been a fellow-clerk of Bishop in Hurlburt's, described the system of soliciting orders for goods. Tuesdays and Fridays were the days for the witness to visit the west side route, and Bishop did the other days; Bishop told the witness that it would not be necessary for him to stop Tuesdays and Fridays as the Cobb house, and so he never did; but Bishop left his own route some days to go there; he had seen Mrs. Cobb in the store; she rarely had any business with any one but Bishop; sometimes Mrs. Bishop and Mrs. Cobb came together, and occasionally at such times Bishop and Mrs. Cobb talked together in Mrs. Bishop's presence. On cross-examination he admitted that different clerks had a special class of customers to seek them out in their dealings; Mrs. Bishop and Mrs. Cobb often met there by appointment to go shopping; he regarded the two families as very intimate; he never saw any impropriety in the store, but he never knew what the two talked about when they stood apart from the rest.

Charles Tracy was recalled for cross-examination. He had been an intimate friend of Mr. Cobb; from what the latter said, he inferred that Mr. Cobb was an intimate friend of Bishop; and, from seeing the two women together often on the street, he imagined that they were intimate also; when all were together for card-playing, the ladies usually visited by themselves considerably; he could not say when Mrs. Cobb learned to play cards, but she was not an expert; he should think that Mr. and Mrs. Cobb were as devoted as any husband and wife should be; he never noticed any improper intimacy between Mrs. Cobb and Bishop; he thought that Cobb began to lose his health three years ago; Cobb was a little sensitive about his baldness, but not demonstrative when jokes were made about it. Questions were put about the witness and his wife giving presents to Mrs. Cobb, but these were ruled out on objection. On the re-direct examination, he evinced some sympathy with the defense, and had told them where to get evidence.

Whittaker was recalled for cross-examination, and said that the ordinary hour for closing was 9, and the clerks alternately having the evening to themselves; Saturday evenings they kept open until 10, but the witness had not been at the store much since Oct. 1, 1877. Being questioned as to what Bishop had said as to his intimacy with Mrs. Cobb, objection was made, and the sharpest argument between counsel that has occurred during the trial was had. The court decided to allow testimony to contradict what Bishop had sworn to, but not to show any facts by report. The witness testified that Bishop had stated that his family and Cobb's were very intimate, meeting in a social way frequently. After Cobb died, Bishop came and rode with the witness one day, and they chatted about the rumors connecting him with Cobb's death. Whittaker blamed Bishop for giving rise to the gossip. To this Bishop replied that Mrs. Cobb was as innocent as an unborn babe. On re-direct examination he testified that Bishop was led at these various times to declare that this intimacy existed only by being first told that gossip prevailed as to an improper intimacy between Bishop and Mrs. Cobb.

George W. Price testified that he knew Mrs. Cobb's writing, and had seen her write. A piece of paper with writing on it was shown him, and he testified that the body of it was written by Mr. Cleveland, but the signature was Mrs. Cobb's.

After the noon recess, Lemuel Manning testified as to conversations, in which Cobb told him of his symptoms, and the failure of medicines to do good. This was all corroborative of former stories.

Wesley Bishop was recalled to describe his visits on Mrs. Cobb the four nights while Cobb was in Troy, and admitted that his own wife came there the first of these nights, and Bishop took refuge in the cellar. Mr. Wait reproved the witness sharply at this point for not having mentioned this interruption before. Bishop replied, that as to this and as to his omitting from his jail confessions allusion to certain occasions when he had improper intercourse with Mrs. Cobb, he forgot it.

Two officers of a Good Templars lodge and two bankers, Charles P. Cogswell and Edward H. Learned, testified concerning Mrs. Cobb's writing, the first two to identify certain specimens, and the other two as experts that the pen-marking on the slips of poetry was in the same handwriting.

The great event of the afternoon was the recital, by Cobb's father, of the story of his son's illness and death. It contained little or nothing that was new in point of fact. It was a most pathetic scene. The old man was greatly affected by the recollection, and often paused in his narrative to overcome emotion. The audience was touched, and listened with breathless interest.

The State concluded the introduction of testimony, at an earlier hour than was expected, to-day. The counsel for the defense had given notice to their witnesses to appear to-morrow and were not able to use the time left this afternoon, adjournment was accordingly had at 4 o'clock. The adjournment thus afforded will doubtless be improved by Col. Wait and his colleagues. It was announced by him before adjournment that he would strike off several names from his list of witnesses as unnecessary, and do his best to expedite matters to-morrow. It is hardly expected that he can get all of his testimony in to-morrow, but it is possible that argument may begin some time Friday, and the case may go to the jury Saturday night. Great eagerness is felt on both sides to bring the trial to an end.

COBB'S FEARS FOR HIS LIFE.

WHAT HE SAID TO HIS RELATIVES AT TROY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TROY, N. Y., Jan. 8.—In the testimony of Wesley Bishop in the Cobb murder trial he refers frequently to the visits of Mrs. Cobb and her husband to Troy. Cobb had cousins living in West Troy, and in January last visited them. During his week's visit, he told one of his relatives that Bishop and Mrs. Cobb were too intimate, and that Mrs. Cobb had said that she wanted him out of the way, so that she could marry Bishop. When advised to sue for divorce, he deprecated the publicity which would follow.

HARVARD AND CORNELL.

THE FORMER JUSTIFYING THE DELAY IN ANSWERING CORNELL'S CHALLENGE TO ROW.

From Our Own Correspondent.

CAMBRIDGE, Jan. 7.—The following letter has been sent by the Harvard Boat Club to the Cornell Navy, in justification of Harvard's delay in answering Cornell's challenge:

CAMBRIDGE, Dec. 19, 1878.

To the Secretary of the Cornell Navy:

DEAR SIR: Your letter of Dec. 10, withdrawing Cornell's challenge, has been duly received. We regret the action you have taken, and still more the spirit which your letter indicates. We think that you are over-suspicious in not accepting our apologies for our unavoidable delay, and in taking offense at the article in the last Crimson, the falsity of which, as an expression of the feeling of Harvard boating men a little reflection must show you. That it has been, and still is, our strong desire to have a race with Cornell is clearly shown by the eager and hasty acceptance of your challenge before we knew whether it would be possible, and when it seemed very improbable that we should be able to do any rowing this year except with Yale, and also by our request, when that acceptance was withdrawn, on our realizing our boating outlook, that you would keep your crew in training for a few weeks until we could give a definite answer.

If we had wished not to row you there was no reason for our not promptly declining your challenge, since you, and not we, hold at present the undisputed college championship. That we had written a letter to Oxford in regard to a race with her next Summer you know, and we supposed that it was principally in view of such a race that you wished to row us. In case we succeed in getting an English race, an impulse will be given to boating here which will make it possible for us to realize our desire to row you; but until we hear from England it is impossible for us to say whether we can undertake for next Summer anything more than our yearly race with Yale. The reason that we did not write you this at first was that, up to the date of our last letter to you, we were hoping, from day to day, to be able to accept your challenge in behalf of the English race. That proved impossible. Now we are expecting a letter from England daily. When it comes, if Cornell has more than a passing desire to row us, and cares to renew her challenge, (she will still have six months for preparation, and she has had done nothing during the past three,) we can assure her, in case we go to England, of a speedy acceptance, and of a definite answer if we do not. Yours respectfully,

FREDERICK ALLEN,
Secretary Harvard University Boat Club,

For William A. Bancroft, Captain; Walter Trimble, President; Warren Norton Stoddard, Vice-President; Richard Trimble, Treasurer; Frederick Allen, Secretary, Executive Committee Harvard University Boat Club.

Since the above was sent, Harvard has learned unofficially that Oxford cannot row her a race as late as Aug. 1. This will defeat Harvard's plan for an English race, and probably she will not row Cornell. Several of the old crew will give up rowing on account of the failure to arrange an English race, a new Captain will be elected, and another crew begin training for the annual race with Yale. The receipt of the news from England has caused much disappointment among Harvard men, who expected a lively season for the Harvard crew next year.

OBITUARY.

OLIVER E. HOSMER.

Mr. Oliver Ellsworth Hosmer, an old and esteemed resident of Nyack-on-the-Hudson, died in that village yesterday morning. He was a prominent merchant in this City 50 years ago, and was a conspicuous member of the Whig Party in the Henry Clay period of politics. He was offered the Mayoralty of the City at one time during that period. He had been a Republican since the formation of the party. Mr. Hosmer was born at Middletown, Conn., on May 6, 1808, and was named after Chief-Justice Oliver Ellsworth, of the United States Supreme Court, who was the guardian of his father, Hon. Stephen T. Hosmer, Chief-Justice of Connecticut. The deceased was a grandson of Hon. Titus Hosmer, one of the Judges of the Maritime Court of Appeals, a court which preceded the formation of the United States Supreme Court. The latter was also one of the signers of the Articles of Confederation in behalf of the State of Connecticut. Mr. Hosmer's grandfather on his mother's side was Major Gen. Isaac Sanford, of the Revolutionary Army, who was subsequently the Judge of the North-western Territory and one of the original members of the Society of the Cincinnati. The Hon. Stephen T. Hosmer is the only descended from Thomas Hosmer, of Kent County, England, who settled in Massachusetts in 1628, and who was one of the founders of the Hartford Colony in 1636. Mr. Hosmer leaves a widow and three adult children—Stephen T. and Col. James R. Hosmer, and Eliza, the wife of Frank F. Gibbs, of this City. The funeral will take place at Nyack on Saturday next at 11:30 A. M.

HON. JULIAN HARTRIDGE.

Hon. Julian Hartridge, Representative in Congress of the First District of Georgia, died in Washington yesterday, after a brief illness, of pneumonia. Mr. Hartridge was born in Savannah, and after receiving a collegiate and legal education, began life as a member of the Bar. He at one time held the office of Solicitor-General of the Eastern Judicial Circuit of Georgia, and was subsequently a member of the Georgia Legislature, and a delegate to the Charleston Democratic Convention of 1860. During the first year of the war he served in the Confederate Army, and was then elected a member of the Confederate Congress. In 1871 he was Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Georgia Democracy; in 1872, delegate from the State at large to the National Democratic Convention; and in the same year Elector at Large on the Democratic ticket. He was elected to the XLIVth and XLVth Congresses as a Democrat.

SENTENCE OF WESTERN STAGE ROBBERS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—The Chief Special Agent of the Post Office Department has received a report announcing the conviction and sentence for life of George Wilson and "Doc" Bell, for robbing the mails and shooting a stage driver at Cherry Creek, Nev. Also of the arrest, at Olympia, Washington Territory, of James Millen and L. Rondercouch, who committed the same offense, as members of the Rhodes gang, on the Wickenburg route in Arizona. The department is making energetic exertions to destroy the business of the "road agents."

ONE OF THE BONANZA MEN'S BROTHERS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Jan. 8.—It has been ascertained by the friends of the late W. S. O'Brien that the person recently arriving here from Raleigh is his brother, who was supposed to be dead. No intimation has yet been given as to the object of his visit.

HIS ACCUSER FAILED TO APPEAR.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Jan. 8.—Dr. John C. Ginn, who was arrested under the charge of criminally assaulting a married woman named Weix, was discharged by the court yesterday, the woman failing to appear against him.

THE YELLOW FEVER INVESTIGATORS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 8.—The Yellow Fever Commission concluded its labors here to-day. Messrs. Lamar, Gibson, and Hooker, and the members of the Board of Experts started for Washington this afternoon.

MURDER OF A POSTMASTER.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 8.—Robert Malone, Postmaster at Beckley's Station, was murdered yesterday by an unknown man. The instrument used was a hatchet.

A POLICE JUSTICE LOSES HIS PLACE.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 8.—The City Council, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, to-day dismissed Police Justice Warwick for malfeasance in office.

AN EX-REPRESENTATIVE OUT OF JAIL.

CHESTER, Penn., Jan. 8.—The term of imprisonment of D. F. Ballard, ex-State Representative, expired this morning, and he was released.

HUNTER'S LAST DAY ALIVE.

THE EXECUTION IN CAMDEN TO-MORROW.

HISTORY OF THE BRUTAL MURDER OF JOHN M. ARMSTRONG—THE MOTIVE OF THE CRIME—THE PECULIAR SYSTEM OF PULLEYS WHICH WILL DISPLACE THE GALLOWS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 8.—Early in the evening of Wednesday, Jan. 23, 1878, John M. Armstrong, a music typographer of this city, was attacked in the streets of Camden, N. J., opposite Philadelphia, on the Delaware River, receiving wounds from which he died on the following Friday, without ever regaining consciousness. To-morrow morning, between the hours of 10 and 2 o'clock, Benjamin Hunter, the intimate friend and former business partner of Armstrong, will be hanged in the Camden Jail for the murder. The crime was carefully conceived. Its motive was money. Hunter and Armstrong had been intimate for years. In December, 1877, Hunter persuaded Armstrong to insure his life for $26,000, and to make the policies over to him to secure him for a debt of $7,000 which Armstrong owed Hunter. Not for a moment believing there could be anything wrong, or that his friend had designs upon his life, Armstrong readily consented. Armstrong was then decoyed to Camden on the pretense that Mr. Ford W. Davis, a bankrupt, who owed money to Armstrong, desired to settle with him. Hunter did not wish to perform the deed himself, so he employed a young man, a sort of an outcast, over whom he had some secret influence, to do the murder. Hunter offered to provide the tools, and set three separate dates for the murder. At last, his proxy failing twice, Hunter determined that the crime should be committed on the 23d of January. Before going to Camden, he presented his accomplice, Thomas Graham, with a hammer and a hatchet, on the handles of which were carved the initials "F. W. D." The object of this was to throw suspicion on Ford W. Davis, who lives on the last street in Camden, on the northern outskirts. There are no street-lamps near his house, and the place was well chosen. The two friends journeyed to Davis' house, followed by Graham, who was to strike the fatal blow. When within a few feet of the house, Hunter passed into an alley and called to Graham "Now." At that moment Armstrong turned round full face to his assailant. Graham dealt him a fearful blow, which brought him to his knees. Then the fellow became frightened, dropped his hammer, and ran away. Hunter picked it up and finished the job. The two men ran away, and Armstrong was discovered some time afterward in an unconscious condition. The tools, with Davis' initials, were found near the body. The man was arrested, and for a time the circumstantial evidence was strong against him. Early in February Benjamin Hunter was arrested on suspicion. The authorities took him into custody with great trepidation. He was a man who was thought to be wealthy, and was a prominent member. He denied the imputations, but was held for the time being. Then was revealed a more sickening story of the murder. The day following the assault, Hunter visited the residence of his friend, and while alone in the bed-chamber of the dying man, removed the bandages from the gaping wounds, starting them to bleeding afresh, so as to make sure of the fatal result. He then left the house, and every means that could be devised was employed by Hunter and his friends to secure his release. In the meantime suspicion pointed to Thomas Graham, and every effort was made to secure him, but in vain. Two weeks ago Thomas Graham, brother-in-law had been concerned in the murder. He went to a Democratic politician of this city, who offered to deliver up the fellow if $1,000 was paid him. The authorities refused, and in a few days Graham was caught. Seeing that he was cornered, he made a full confession of the crime.

Hunter was indicted for murder in the first degree, and tried in June. On the evening of the 3d of July a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree was rendered, and Hunter was sentenced to be hanged. His case was appealed to the Court of Errors and Appeals, but that body affirmed the decree of the lower court. Gov. McClellan was appealed to, but he refused to interfere, and now the preparations for his execution are completed. He was ably defended by Hon. George M. Robeson, James M. Scovil, of Camden, and Aaron Thompson, Esq., of Philadelphia. Nearly $20,000 was spent in the effort to secure his release. Never but once during the whole of the year that Hunter has been in prison has he declared himself innocent of the crime for which he was tried, and that was when he pleaded. On this occasion he said, "Not guilty, so help me God." During the most trying portions of the case, when the evidence was most direct and dead against the condemned man, he has sat in his cage in the Camden Jail and chatted with the TIMES correspondent in as jovial a manner as if in his own parlor. He received visitors cordially, and maintained the utmost self-possession and composure until Tuesday of this week. Now he is a broken man. The cowardly traits of his nature appear at their darkest and blackest, and the man shrinks from the fate which inevitably awaits him. When Rev. Dr. Richard H. Allen called upon him on Tuesday, Hunter refused to arise from his couch. He was pale, nervous, flighty, and sullky. The reverend gentleman spoke kindly to the condemned man, and said to him, "God and yourself alone know the truth of the terrible charge against you. Make yourself square with God, and perform the duty you owe to society by freely confessing."

"I know what you mean," tartly responded Hunter, showing an evident antagonism to the Pastor, "I will confess only to Christ."

The minister left Hunter, but not before he had assumed an amiable mood. The execution will take place in the corridor of the court-house. The building is nearly a square, and has wide passage-ways leading through it from east to west and from north to south. The instrument of death will be rigged in the centre square. It will not be a gallows, but composed of ropes suspended on pulleys. The ropes will pass up from the first floor through holes in the ceiling to the court-room above. There will be the weight of some 250 pounds. Thomas Graham occupies a cell near the spot where the execution will take place.

PORTER'S CONDUCT ANALYZED.

BEGINNING OF THE ARGUMENT OF MAJOR GARDNER—GEN. PORTER SEVERELY HANDLED.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Jan. 8.—Major Gardner, the Recorder and Judge Advocate, occupied the attention of the Board of Inquiry to-day. He stated that he entered upon this investigation with the belief that Gen Porter had a strong case, but that after a study of the record of the trial, he had changed his mind. He then criticised the opening statement of Porter's counsel, and reviewed some of the evidence of the trial, claiming that there were contradictions in the testimony of Porter's witnesses as to the battle of the 29th of August, and that the commander of the Fifth Corps must have known of the encounters in which the rest of the army was engaged. The Recorder argued that Pope's dispatches show that the offensive was his plan of the campaign, and that Porter's claim that he believed Pope's intention was to avoid a general engagement until heavy reinforcements could be received by way of excuse. Here the Recorder made liberal quotations from the testimony of his witnesses in support of this point. Going back to the beginning of the case, Major Gardner asserted, after enumerating the charges and specifications, that Pope never preferred the charges against Porter or knew of them. It was only after President Lincoln had shown him the dispatches of Porter to Burnside that he [Pope] became "convinced of Porter's criminal conduct." Major Gardner then claimed that Pope was not shown to be guilty of any personal hostility to Porter; that the trial of 1863 was thoroughly and satisfactory to Porter at that time, and that the members of the court had been subjected to unjust aspersions for the past 16 years at the hands of Porter and his adherents. In the matter of delay on the battle-field, he said, and he did not think Porter had produced before this board any new evidence by way of excuse. Indeed, he thought the new evidence left the petitioner's case in a worse condition than before. Pope, and he expressed his opinion on this point without reserve.

The order to march at 1 o'clock in the morning of Aug. 28, 1862, was then considered, and the Recorder dwelt at length on the forcible and plain point, as Porter's counsel have done. The order, he claimed, was imperative and urgent, and if Porter decided not to obey it, he should have sent word to Pope, for he had no reason to know that he was not resisting some movement or combination embraced in the plan of the commanding General. He then dwelt briefly on the testimony as to the condition of the road, quoting from his witnesses in contradiction to the evidence of Porter's counsel, and claimed that the hour (1 o'clock A. M.) was most favorable for the march as ordered by Gen. Pope, and that there was nothing to deter loyal men from making a night march. The Recorder quoted from Gen. Washburn and other witnesses as to the necessity for implicit obedience to orders by soldiers. The "joint order" to McDowell and Porter was next considered, but it was claimed that, by its own showing and the conflicting testimony of his witnesses, the petitioner's responsibility for the inaction of Aug. 29 was established. McDowell was vigorously defended in this connection, and the evidence of Porter's witnesses was criticised. This issue between Gens. McDowell and Porter was, indeed, a noticeable part of the argument, in which the Recorder exerted himself to the utmost. The character of the enemy at Dawkin's Branch on the 29th of August, and whether Porter attempted to ascertain its strength, were the next points, the Recorder claiming that it was not shown that the petitioner had the knowledge he now claims, and that even if he had no reason to attack, he was justified by his inaction that day. He made liberal quotations from the testimony of his witness, and then passed to the question whether the fighting of the 29th by the rest of Gen. Pope's army was not severe, and whether the evidences of it were not apparent to the Fifth Corps and its Commander. He made a long argument at this point and quoted from the testimony of his witnesses, Dr. Paxon and others, brought in rebuttal of the principal officers of the Fifth Corps. He was stanch in his condemnation of Porter, expressing his own belief that that officer "went to the point in his column most remote from the sound of the enemy's cannon."

Major Gardner will continue his address to-morrow, and after him Mr. Choate will conclude the case.

AMUSEMENTS.

HERMAN LINDE.

In these days, which are marked by a dearth of tragic actors, the most satisfactory interpretation of Shakespeare's dramas is furnished by the recitationist, who may be wholly a scholar, or, better still, a scholar and an artist. In the work of the trained and thoughtful reader, while we do not look for any special inspiration, we are apt to find the fruitful results of refined and sympathetic study; and this is certainly of more account than a stage performance notable for a few beauties and innumerable faults. We do not agree wholly with those who would consign all the works of the great dramatist to the closet; for to see a great tragedy greatly acted is to comprehend its spirit—since action represents at once conception and achievement. Who would not have preferred to witness such a quartet as Garrick, Barry, Macklin, and Mrs. Cibber in a single work—as was the good fortune of the last century—rather than to have heard that work read by the most silver-tongued of orators. But when, as at the present time, the tragedian is almost a stranger to the stage, the elocutionist naturally takes his place, and he may do much to uphold the memory of glorious traditions. Mr. Herman Linde, who made his first appearance as an English reader at Steinway Hall last evening, deserves a place among the latest interpreters of Shakespeare. Yet there is a vast distinction between the work attempted by him and that accomplished recently by Prof. Richardson. The latter, as already stated here, charmed his auditors by the perfection of his methods, by the lucidity and beauty of his readings. Mr. Linde, who has had a great deal of experience on the stage of his native country, is by nature an actor; and, although he comes forward as an elocutionist, he will scarcely be accepted as such. He has too much power to limit himself merely to the duties of the platform, too much inspiration to preserve a conventional personality. Whether or not he can justly lay claim to greatness, we do not pretend, of course, to say; for, to pass such an absolute judgment, it would be necessary to see him act under the most favorable conditions, and as a German. Mr. Linde has learned to speak English in an unusually short space of time, and he expresses himself, it must be confessed, with rare grace and freedom; but the Teutonic accent is nevertheless always present to the ear, which is offended at anything less than clearness and purity of speech in a reader. It would have been wiser in Mr. Linde, on the whole, to defer his appearance until he had studied our language more profoundly; for the effects of this incomplete knowledge were too frequently visible last evening. In general, the merits of his work were conspicuous; as already stated, he possesses power and inspiration, both natural gifts and exceedingly rare ones; his voice is rich, sonorous, and pliant; his gestures are nearly always broadly expressive; in great climaxes he rises easily from a low to a high plane of passion. His choice of "Macbeth" for his first recital was altogether a good one, for he entered with great spirit into the characters of the two ambitious assassins. In the scene before and after the murder, in the two scenes with the witches, and in the banquet scene, he was frequently strong, varied, and picturesque; and his delineation of the agony of an overburdened conscience, "Avaunt! and quit my sight," &c., was marked by terrible intensity. On the other hand, Mr. Linde's readings were not always good; they were spoiled by exaggerated emphasis, which often became ponderousness. The manner in which he laid stress on the most insignificant words, as though each were equally important to the sense, was tedious and exasperating. Moreover, he was exceedingly imperfect in the text of the play. He left out whole lines and passages, changed words, and transformed sentences with impunity. Much of the melody of the poet's verse was thus destroyed. We do not, of course, refer to those unimportant scenes which were purposely stricken out. For instance, in Lady Macbeth's first invocation, wherein she calls on the spirits to unsex her, he failed to give those familiar lines:

> "Stop up the access and passage to remorse,
> That no compunctious visitings of nature
> Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between
> The effect and it!"

Instances of a like nature might be considerably multiplied. Such a criticism should not be brought against a professional reader. But Mr. Linde, with time and opportunity to perfect himself, would be seen with great advantage upon our stage. It is his intention to give other recitals in the course of the season.

MR. STRAKOSCH'S OPERA SEASON.

The audience that assembled last night in expectation of hearing "Faust" were informed, on their entrance to the theatre, that Miss Kellogg was suffering from a serious cold and could not sing, and that "La Favorita" would be substituted, with Miss Cary, Mr. Adams, and Signor Pantaleoni in the principal rôles. A further announcement on the programme asked the indulgence of the audience for Signor Pantaleoni, who was also suffering from a cold, but would sing, and not disappoint the public. The house was well filled, and probably missed nothing by the change of opera, for the three artists above named exerted themselves in their respective parts, and sang with spirit and to the acceptance of their hearers. Miss Cary's Leonora is one of her best characters. She sings it with passion and tenderness, and last night, being in good voice, she was exceedingly effective both in the solos and the concerted scenes, delivering the music of the rôle with the artistic finish and dignity it demands. "O mio Fernando" was sung as she only can sing it. Her appearance was, as usual, beautiful, and she fairly earned the liberal applause she received. Mr. Adams was graceful in his part of Fernando, and sang with more spirit than he usually shows. His stage presence was good, and his acting evinced a knowledge of his profession, but it was a decided blot on the performance that he was obliged to sing in German, while the other artists sang in Italian. The effect of some scenes was marred by the introduction of two languages, but musically considered Mr. Adams was highly successful and justified the reputation that has been claimed for him. Signor Pantaleoni made his third appearance before a New-York audience with the same favor he has previously met with. There is no doubt about this artist, and, notwithstanding the cold under which he was evidently suffering, he was highly effective in his rendering of his part last night. His physical disability interfered somewhat with his performance at times, but his rich voice and perfect artistic method were apparent throughout the opera, and his acting left nothing to be desired. He was every inch the King. Mr. Conly's genuine bass voice was telling in his rôle, but the chorus was hardly what might have been expected. Mr. Behrens has not got his orchestra well in hand, and they served to hamper the efforts of the singers. Some allowance ought to be made, however, for an unexpected performance. To-night "Martha" will be given.

THE OPERA IN BOSTON.

Undoubtedly one of the greatest successes achieved by Mr. Mapleson's company in Boston has been in the representation of Bellini's fine opera, "I Puritani," which evoked absolute enthusiasm in the audience, and contained some revelations for the critics. The production of the opera had for a principal result a discovery which it might be supposed would have come home somewhat earlier to the apprehensions of the Boston critics, namely, that Signor Galassi is a singer of wonderful powers. It is now admitted that as Riccardo he sang and acted in a fashion which it would not be absurd to call grand, while for the celebrated duet, "Suoni la tromba," between that artist and Signor Foli, the calm temper of criticism is more than suffused with admiring enthusiasm. Signor Campanini's intensity and fire are also lavishly praised, while Mme. Gerster's brilliancy and purity of voice and faultless execution are the subject of unlimited encomium. It is, in brief, admitted that the lovers of music in Boston may not hope to see the late representation of Bellini's work rivaled, or even approached, unless the city should be again favored with a visit from Mr. Mapleson's matchless company of artists. On Friday evening Boston enjoyed a repetition of "Carmen," of which its newspapers have already spoken in most appreciative terms, while last night was set down for "Rigoletto," with Mme. Gerster as the heroine. Mme. Marie Roze sings to-morrow evening in "Il Flauto Magico," and the Boston season will close on Saturday, with an afternoon performance of "Linda di Lammermoor."

THE COLLEGE MEN EATING.

ALPHA DELTA PHI.

ANNUAL DINNER OF THE FRATERNITY—A PLEASANT GATHERING—HOW TO MAKE A HOTEL PROFITABLE.

The fourth annual dinner of the Alpha Delta Phi Association was given in the Westminster Hotel last evening. At 8 o'clock 200 members of this, the oldest of Greek Letter societies, sat down to an excellent dinner. The only unpleasant feature of this portion of the entertainment was the fact that the proprietor of the hotel had prepared a special wine-card raising the ordinary price of the wines on an average $1 per bottle. By a blunder of the waiters some of the ordinary wine-cards in use in the hotel found their way into the dining-room, and it was only after the diners had given their orders that the imposition was revealed. This incident occasioned a good deal of comment that was otherwise than complimentary to the hotel management. When the coffee and cigars had rounded off the grosser feast, the assembled brethren sang in unison the Greek hymn of the fraternity "Hail Alpha Delta Phi." In the absence of President John Jay, who gave his recent bereavement as an excuse for not being present, Prof. Dwight, of Columbia Law School, called the assemblage to order, and, in an address replete with witticisms, briefly sketched the career of the fraternity. It is now approaching its fiftieth anniversary, having been founded by Samuel Eells, LL. D., in 1832, at Hamilton College. It already had a foothold in Harvard, Yale, Amherst, Brown, Union, and Bowdoin—the chief colleges of New-England and the North—in 1836-7. It has 4,000 graduates on its rolls. Many chapters—as at Amherst, Williams, Dartmouth, Hamilton, and Cornell—own substantial chapels and clubhouses. More than 100 college Presidents and 250 college Professors are members. Its Presidents have been Rev. Joseph P. Thompson, Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs, Prof. Theodore W. Dwight, Gov. Joshua L. Chamberlain, Hon. William S. Groesbeck, Moses Coit Tyler, and Hon. John Jay. The next convention will be held in May, in Trinity College, with Phi Kappa in charge.

Letters of regret were read from Hon. John Jay, Hon. George William Curtis, Gov. R. L. Hubbard, of Connecticut; President Chamberlain, of Bowdoin College; President Angell, of Michigan; President Eliot, of Harvard; President Gilman, of Johns Hopkins University; ex-President Eliot, of Trinity; Bishop Coxe, of Buffalo; Bishop Huntingdon, of Syracuse; Daniel Huntingdon, the artist; Rev. Phillips Brooks, Donald G. Mitchell, Rev. O. B. Frothingham, Rev. Herrick Johnson, of the Union Theological Seminary, Judge Blatchford, Judge Learned, Judge William G. Choate, Joseph Choate, Everett P. Wheeler, Hon. Ellis H. Roberts, Hon. Horatio N. Twombly, Judge Wallace, Edward Everett Hale, (who would have presided but for a death in his family,) and a large number of others. Letters were also received from the New-England Graduate Association, and the following chapters: The Hamilton, of Hamilton; the Brunonian, of Brown Union; the Bowdoin, of Bowdoin; the Hudson, of Western Reserve College; the Wesleyan, of the University of Michigan; the Dartmouth, of Dartmouth; the Rochester, of the University of the City of New-York; the Wesleyan, of Wesleyan; the Kenyon, of Kenyon; the Hamilton, of Union; the Cornell, of Cornell, and the Phi Kappa of Trinity.

The first toast of the evening—"Two Ideals of our Fraternity—the Love of Learning and the Love of Men," was responded to by Henry Ward Beecher. He said he regarded the conjunction "and" as pre-eminently the most important part of the sentiment. Love of learning without love of man, or vice versa, while a good thing in itself, is small and insignificant when perfect culture is the aim, which is large enough and broad enough to bring its possessor into an alliance with universal humanity. That is worth celebrating. The peculiar temptation of scholars is to be self-complacent, to have a keenness of others, but any culture that separates a man from his fellows, or effeminates him, is pernicious and to be deprecated. That is not true culture that cannot enjoy anything that is not in satins and ruffles. True culture makes a man at home wherever he is—in heaven or on earth—the rude as well as the fine—for its own sake. It enables a man to adapt himself to any circumstances in which he may be placed. He can bear better to be poor and hard-worked than other men. Whatever may happen, a man should be able to feel himself competent to grapple with the conditions surrounding him, and to say "I am master. I am inferior to God Almighty alone." The man to whom God gives strength and power is given a mission to those from whom those qualities have been withheld. He who is unlike should be as a torch to light the path of his fellows.

Mr. Beecher was loudly applauded. The song of the fraternity, "Hail to Thee," was then sung standing, after which followed in order the other toasts: "Our Alma Mater," responded to by Hon. A. Q. Keasby; "Our Absent Brethren," Rev. George L. Prentiss; "Our Annual Dinner," R. R. Bowker, and "Our Alpha Delta Sisters," D. W. Judd. The speeches were all good ones, and provoked peals of laughter and applause. The Chickering Quartet, composed of members of the fraternity, contributed not a little to the pleasure of the evening by their excellent vocalism. It was after midnight when the jolly gathering broke up.

BAD FOR HOLDERS OF STOCK

THE PACIFIC MAIL COMPANY.

RECORD OF GROSS MISMANAGEMENT—NEARLY $3,000,000 LIABILITIES, AND ONLY $800,000 ASSETS — PRESIDENT BABCOCK'S REPORT.

President Babcock has issued to the stockholders of the Pacific Mail Steam-ship Company a report of its prospects and present condition, which, he says, seems to be required by the recent decline in the stock of the company, and the consequent apprehensions of the stockholders regarding the future of their property. Mr. Babcock reviews without gloves the administration of the affairs of the company under his predecessors in office. He says President Dillon's report for the year ending April 30, 1876, was a misleading one, and he gives the correct figures as follows: Liabilities, $2,157,158 49; cash assets, $990,065 67; deficiency, $1,167,092 82. In regard to President Clyde's administration, Mr. Babcock says: "For the two years ending May 31, 1878, no report showing the earnings and expenses of the company was made, and, in fact, although these years comprise the most critical period in the history of the company, no statement of liabilities and assets taken from the books was given to the stockholders. At the end of the first year (April 30, 1877,) the annual report shows an apparent decrease in liabilities of $1,185,058 03, but it omitted to state that a large part of th's sum was derived from the following sources, viz.: sales of real estate at Hong Kong, $200,000; sales of three old steamers, $49,000; the reduction of the coal and stores at agencies of $187,139 19, and receipt from the United States Government of $375,000 subsidy, amounting to $817,139 19." The five steamers of the Panama Transit Company are described as "of ages varying from six to eighteen years, four of which, if not all, being cut in two and lengthened, or an additional deck put on, or both, by which simple process the tonnage was very largely increased, the motive power remaining as originally designed for the smaller vessels." Mr. Babcock continues: "By an arrangement which, it is fair to presume, was not fully understood by the Board of Directors, these ships were to run in connection with the ships of this company on the New-York and San Francisco lines, the division of net earnings being for four months 'two-fifths to the Panama Transit Steam-ship Company and three-fifths to the Pacific Mail Steam-ship Company,' and for 16 months up to the time of their sale to this company, the division to be equal, one-half to each company. Under this arrangement the Panama Transit Steam-ship Company took, as its share of the net earnings, $444,129 14, being, as shown by the books when written up, about $150,000 more than it was entitled to, and which amount, it is conceded, can be recovered. On Feb. 1, 1878, the famous purchase of the Panama Transit ships was made by this company, and while it is difficult to characterize this transaction as it deserves, it is sufficient to say that the sum agreed to be paid was $15 to $20 per ton, more (on the increased tonnage above alluded to) than the best modern ships of equal tonnage could have been built for at that time. At the same time, (Feb. 1, 1878,) and in consideration to the Panama Railroad Company for the loss of its bonds in payments of these vessels to the amount of $1,000,000, a bill of sale was made to that company of the five transit company's ships and of all the other ships of the company (eight in number) engaged in the trade between New-York and San Francisco, and as further security, a mortgage for $250,000 each on the steamships City of Sidney and City of New-York. And this was not all. The same instrument embraced the above transaction, and a part of it, it was agreed that the Pacific Mail Steam-ship Company should pay to the Panama Railroad Company, as its share of the business between New-York and all ports north of Panama, an extraordinary sum of $70,000 per month, besides 33 per cent. of the South American business, and 50 per cent. of the business to Panama, amounting, including the lighterage at Panama, to about $100,000 per month.

"It is claimed that the equivalent to this company in this arrangement was the canceling by the Panama Railroad Company of its contract with the Panama Transit Company, its transfer to the Pacific Mail, and that the sum of $70,000 per month was only the fair proportion which would accrue to the Panama Railroad if four ships per month were run between New-York and San Francisco, and whereas the Pacific Mail Company, being subsidized by the overland railroads, could only run two. To this it may be said that running four ships monthly involved the loss of all subsidies and the cutting of rates to a point which, under no circumstances, could yield to the railroad company a revenue of much if any more than one-half of the sum agreed to be paid. It may thus be seen that on the accession of the present management the affairs of your company were in a deplorable condition. The indebtedness to the Panama Railroad Company had largely increased during the four months the contract had been in force, and at any moment that company might attempt to take possession of the property which had been mortgaged to it. As a matter of fact, its demands for a settlement of outstanding accounts were imperative, and as soon as the amount could be ascertained it was satisfactorily settled, partly in cash and partly in notes, which have since been taken up; the whole amount paid that company in cash during the five months ending Oct. 31 being $875,576 84." In conclusion, Mr. Babcock speaks of the new and more favorable contract recently concluded with the Pacific railroad companies, and says that the efforts to obtain a modification of the contract with the Panama Railroad have not yet been successful.

A report from the Treasurer is appended, of which Mr. Babcock says that "owing to the incomplete state of the books when the present administration came in, it has been impossible to write up the work then in arrears and at the same time to enter up the current business, but the work has so far progressed that the figures presented may be relied on as substantially correct." The liabilities on Dec. 1, 1878, were $2,704,396 84, and the assets, $830,485 36, showing a deficiency of $1,873,911 48—an increase in two years, not taking into account the cost of the ships purchased from the Panama Transit Company, ($1,350,000,) of $945,246 75. Between April 30 and Nov. 30, 1878, the deficiency was decreased $238,428 09. Of the above indebtedness there is owing to the Panama Railroad Company, payable $20,000 monthly, commencing Feb. 28, 1881, $1,490,000; $15,000 monthly, commencing this date, $215,000; also, notes maturing monthly to May, 1879, $154,411 75; to the Panama Transit Steam-ship Company, payable in monthly installments, commencing July, 1879, and ending January, 1881, $270,000; total, $2,039,411 75. The Treasurer says: "In making this statement, large amounts standing upon the books of the company as assets have been eliminated, and only such amounts included as are believed to be good and valid at this time, and capable of being realized upon at an early day. The cash assets as herein stated do not include claims standing on the books to the amount of over $1,000,000, a large part of which, it is believed, are good and collectable."

TROPICAL FISH STIFF FROM COLD.

The recent cold snap had a remarkable effect upon the inhabitants of the New-York Aquarium, from which they have not yet recovered. The snakes and lizards have lost their appetites completely, but are lively, uneasy, and almost constantly in motion. The hardy salamanders lie quiet and motionless. The young alligators hatched last Summer are stiff and lazy, and the man-eating shark, whose relatives have all gone to warmer regions for the Winter months, lies motionless at the bottom of his tank, and has become as white as snow. The lobsters from Bermuda stretch their legs lazily, and with evident effort, as if suffering from the gout, and only the inhabitants of fresh water and a few northern creatures move with the same vivacity as before. The carp, bass, salmon, catfish, garpike, dogfish, and, further, the Norwegian wrasses, fle-fish, blow-fish, and hundreds of others, show much remarkable activity and agility that one can easily see how much they enjoy the cold weather. There are some few creatures, though, from the warm waters of the Bermuda Islands, that seem to enjoy the cold almost as much as their northern brethren. Notably this is the fact in the case of the gigantic so-called flat, or broad lobster, one of the oldest and most venerable-looking of all the creatures brought from Bermuda, and which has resided in the Aquarium for over eight months. It has become so familiar with its tank and its keeper that, like a trained animal, it will leave its corner when the man appears, come to the surface, and take its food from his hand. It is a very queer-looking customer, too, and a crowd is always gathered about its tank. Its back is thickly covered with sea-weed, algæ, and colonies of living serpularia, making it greatly resemble an old house, the weather-beaten roof of which is covered with green moss. In curious contrast with this rough and ragged roof are its bright-colored legs, red and black, striped like a barber's pole. Sometimes it remains motionless on its 10 legs for hours, the nervous motion of its little tentacles being the only signs of life.

TRINITY CHURCH ORGAN RECITALS.

The first of a series of 20 organ performances in Trinity Church will be given at 3:30 this afternoon. No tickets are required, the undertaking being sustained by the Vestry of the Church and by private subscriptions. At the end of this afternoon's concert Mr. Carter will play the "Dead March in Saul" in memory of his predecessor, the late J. P. Morgan, who died on Sunday last in California.

A BURGLAR SENT TO STATE PRISON.

On Dec. 19 William Murray entered the premises of Patrick Morrow, No. 220 East Seventy-fourth-street, and rummaged a trunk in search of plunder. While so engaged he heard a step on the stairs, and, snatching up a razor, left the apartments. On the stairs he encountered Philip Duffy, a neighbor of Morrow, who inquired his business on the premises. Murray threatened to "cut the daylights out of him" if he attempted to detain him, and the two men clinched. In the struggle on the stairway Murray knocked down his would-be captor, and striking him on the head with a sling-shot, made his escape. He was subsequently arrested by Officer Brennan, of the Twenty-eighth Precinct, and indicted for burglary, the only evidence being the razor found in his possession, which was identified by Morrow as his property. On being arraigned by Assistant District Attorney Rollins, in General Sessions, yesterday, the hero of the razor and sling-shot pleaded guilty, and Judge Gildersleeve sentenced him to three years and six months in State Prison.

TWEED'S BARGAIN FOR FREEDOM.

HIS COUNSEL, MR. TOWNSEND, GETS $5,000 LESS THAN HE EXPECTED.

The late William M. Tweed, after his enforced return from Vigo, Spain, in the early part of 1877, went to work energetically to procure his release from Ludlow-Street Jail. After he had employed John D. Townsend as his counsel, he arranged about securing payment to the latter for his services in this way: Tweed made 10 promissory notes, each for $1,000, payable to his friend Benjamin P. Fairchild, one on the first day of each month from March to December, 1877, inclusive. Fairchild indorsed the notes to Townsend, and gave the latter, as security for their payment, a deed of some land near Jamaica, Long Island, and an assignment of a $13,000 mortgage. The notes, the deed, and the assignment were given to Townsend in accordance with an agreement entered into between him and Fairchild on Feb. 12, 1877. By the terms of the agreement it was provided that five of the notes should be "payable only in case the said William M. Tweed shall not be convicted of crime and sent to the State Prison, but are payable in case he shall be discharged upon his own recognizance from jail, or in any way released therefrom without punishment or imprisonment." A further stipulation by Townsend was in these words: "In case the said Tweed shall be convicted upon any of the indictments pending against him and sent to State Prison, then I agree, so soon as the first five notes mentioned shall have been paid, to redeed said land upon Long Island, as well as reassign said mortgage to said B. P. Fairchild, provided the same shall not have been foreclosed or disposed of before that time for nonpayment of any of the first five notes mentioned." At that time Tweed was imprisoned on the $1,000,000 suit by the City, and held under an execution against his person for $6,537,117 36. Bench warrants were also in the hands of the District Attorney, to be executed against Tweed in case he should be discharged under the civil process, there being many indictments pending against him. Townsend received $5,000, but did not get the remaining $5,000, because Tweed's release was not procured. He kept the collaterals, however, and refused to reassign them to Fairchild, who brought suit in the Superior Court to compel Townsend to do so. Townsend claimed that the clause "shall not be convicted of crime and sent to the State Prison" contemplated only the possibility of a criminal conviction, and that the agreement to retransfer the property depended upon Tweed's being convicted on any of the indictments and sent to State Prison. Mr. Fairchild, however, insisted that by the agreement Townsend was not to be paid the money unless he got Tweed out of jail.

Judge Speir, in his decision, rendered yesterday, says Mr. Townsend's claim is not in accordance with the spirit or letter of the undertaking. The defendant did not by any act of his become entitled to the contingent compensation, for he did not prevent either conviction or keep Tweed from being sent to the State Prison. The compensation depended upon services to be rendered by the defendant, which should not only prevent conviction for crime but procure a discharge for Tweed from his own recognizance from jail or imprisonment. The confinement in jail on the order of arrest, and the execution against the body, in the prisoner's then condition, was doubtless, says the Judge, quite as much to be avoided as imprisonment on sentence for crime. The primary definition of recognizance is an acknowledgment of a debt upon record, an obligation of record entered into before some court of record, and is not necessarily, or even primarily, limited to criminal proceedings. The release provided for embraced both conditions of imprisonment, criminal and civil. "The plain conditions," says Judge Speir, "assumed by the defendant in obtaining him to compensation, have not been performed. Nor does the case show merit for any services rendered by the defendant to accomplish the purposes provided for in the agreement. William M. Tweed was released from imprisonment in fact, but not in the sense that either party to the agreement made any provision for such contingency. The law makes it for them. The acknowledged rule in such case is to regard the parties with reference to the event to cases only over which human agencies have any control. The plaintiff is entitled to judgment."

CURLING IN CENTRAL PARK.

THE ST. ANDREW'S DEFEAT THE ALBANY CLUB, AND THE EMPIRE CITY THE CALEDONIAN.

The lovers of curling were afforded an opportunity yesterday to witness excellent exhibitions of the pastime on the little lake near East Seventy-second-street, in Central Park. The contest which attracted most attention was between the St. Andrew's Club, of this City, and the Albany Curling Club. When play was introduced, at 10:30 A. M., the ice was in splendid condition for the sport, and a large number of spectators were present. The clubs played in two rinks. In the first rink the Albany men played indifferently at the outset, and remained behind their opponents until, thoroughly warming to their work, and spurred on by their skip, they ran rapidly ahead, finally winning by a score of 34 points to 20. At the second rink the men of St. Andrew led from the start, scoring 45 points to their adversaries' 21. The following is a summary of the score, including the result of the contest:

RINK NO. 1.

The prize awarded to the victorious St. Andrew men was a gold medal, offered by Mr. McCredie, of Albany. The other contest was between the Caledonian Curling Club and the Empire City Curling Club, who played on the Lake. It lasted from noon till 5:15 P. M., and resulted in a victory for the latter, the following being the score:

RINK NO. 1.

An interesting match will be played to-day between New-York and New-Jersey. Ten rinks will be laid out, testing the entire capacity of the lake. New-York will be represented by the City Club, St. Andrew's, Caledonian, Thistle, Empire City, Yonkers, and Caledonian Thistle, of Brooklyn. Two Paterson clubs, the Jersey City and Newark clubs, will endeavor to bear off the honors in behalf of New-Jersey. On Saturday picked American and Scotch players will contend against each other in two rinks.

TRAINING CHILDREN TO STEAL.

Sarah Johnson and Julia Whittaker, aged respectively 12 and 10 years, were arraigned before Justice Wandell, in the Jefferson Market Police Court, yesterday, by Officer Pless, of the Twentieth Precinct, on a charge being street thieves. The officer stated that the children were sent out by their parents with baskets, and instructed to steal whatever they could safely secure from the show-stands. Yesterday Pless caught them stealing a box containing a dozen and a half knives and forks from a store in Eighth-avenue. Julia had in her basket several pounds of nicely-cut fresh porterhouse steak. Sarah lives at No. 445, and Julia at No. 440 West Forty-first-street. Sarah, in answer to the Justice's questions, said that her mother attended "church meetin's" during the day while she was out filling her basket. Both children were committed for further examination.

SUICIDE IN BROOKLYN.

James S. Wood, residing at No. 1,131 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, committed suicide yesterday morning by shooting himself through the heart. Mr. Wood owned the house in which he resided, and his wife kept a fancy store on the first floor. He was also proprietor of a gentlemen's furnishing store in this City, where he was accustomed to spend most of his time. Of late Mr. Wood had been much troubled lest a shrinkage in real estate values would render him a poor man. Yesterday after breakfast he went up to his bedroom, and a moment afterward the report of a pistol was heard. His wife and children ran to the room, and found him lying on the floor with a pistol, one barrel of which was empty, grasped in his right hand. Death was almost instantaneous. Coroner Nolan will hold an inquest.

THE VOLUNTEER LIFE-SAVING CORPS.

The subscriptions on the various Exchanges toward the establishment of stations for the Volunteer Life-saving Corps are progressing favorably. The Stock Exchange has raised its entire share. Capt. Boyton has been invited to address the meeting of the National Temperance Institute in Cooper Union on Sunday afternoon, and he has agreed to do so on condition that he will be allowed to take up a subscription toward the stations fund. He will take the box with him.

INTERESTS OF COMMERCE.

THE BOARD OF TRADE.

ANNUAL MEETING—THE REAGAN BILL APPROVED—THE SUGAR QUESTION—VANDERBILT'S NEW LINE OF STEAMERS.

The annual meeting of the Board of Trade and Transportation was held yesterday afternoon. The Executive Committee presented a long report reviewing the work of the association during the past year. Speaking of the passage of the ordinance permitting the use of steam for freight purposes at night over the Belt Railroad, the report says: "With the single exception of the White Star Line, no connections with piers have been made, which indicates that the complaints previously made by the roads that the lack of privilege was one cause of their discrimination in rates in favor of other cities was only a pretext." In regard to the attempt to obtain from the railroads for New-York an equal tariff of rates with other seaboard cities, the report says that "arguments proved of no avail, and we have not yet experienced any change for the better." The report expresses great satisfaction at the growth in public favor of the movement inaugurated by the board against the railroad monopoly, and promises that another bill will be introduced in the Legislature this Winter, providing for the regulation of the transportation business, and that the fight will be kept up until success rewards the efforts of the association. The various other reforms projected during the year are spoken of in detail, and much satisfaction is expressed at the progress that has been made in all of them. The condition of the association is described as exceptionally prosperous. Notwithstanding unusual drafts on the funds during the past year, there is a larger balance on hand than at the beginning of any year since 1866. In conclusion, a wide field of usefulness in the future is predicted for the association. The report was adopted, and ordered spread upon the minutes.

The next business of importance was the presentation of a report from the Committee on Railroad Transportation upon the bill now pending in Congress for the regulation of Inter-State commerce, known as the Reagan bill. The report was a very long one, and the various sections of the bill are criticised in detail. Fault is found that the provisions of sections 1 and 2, providing that freight shall not be carried cheaper for one shipper than another under like circumstances, are limited in their applications to quantities of one car-load. The other sections are unqualifiedly approved. In conclusion, the following resolutions were presented for the action of the meeting:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this board, the provisions of the Reagan bill for the regulation of inter-State commerce are a step in the right direction; that some measure of the kind is absolutely necessary to protect the public interest, and further that the machinery of the bill as proposed, with the addition of a competent Board of Commissioners should be appointed to superintend the operations of an Inter-State Railroad Law, and from time to time recommend to Congress such additional or qualifying measures as may be required to do substantial justice to the public and railroad interests.

Resolved, That the compensation for such Commissioners should be large enough to command the services of men of the highest character and ability.

They were adopted, and copies were ordered sent to every member of the House and Senate. The following were then offered and adopted:

Resolved, That the question of a change in the tariff on sugar, which is now pending in Congress, should be settled on its merits, without reference to the charges of fraud and adulteration which interested parties have brought in connection with it, which charges should be investigated and decided independently.

Resolved, That the admission of high-grade sugars at the same rate of duty as low grades will be the ruin of an American industry extensively employing both labor and capital, and we ask Congress to fix a rate according to value or take off all duties on sugar, either of which would give American refiners an equal chance to compete with the sugar-makers of other countries.

Mr. E. F. Browning offered the following:

Resolved, That we view with gratification the proposed addition of commodious passenger facilities now in the project of the New-York Central Railroad for bringing the cars and ships together, a measure so often advocated by this board, and we trust these facilities may be so arranged and managed that they will result in cheapening the movement of merchandise in this port.

Resolved, That if said facilities are so used, the management of the New-York Central Railroad will be entitled to the thanks of the public.

They caused an animated discussion. Some of the members wanted to add a resolution of thanks to the New-York Lake Shore Railroad for its management for what they are doing in the direction of terminal facilities, but it was considered that it would be time enough to do that when something had actually been accomplished. The compliment was agreed to, expressed to thank Mr. Vanderbilt in advance for anything, on the ground that his previous record had been one of direct opposition to the interests of the merchants of New-York. It was stated that local freight had been secured for the new steam-ship line, and that applicants had been informed that they could obtain better rates on through freights from the agents of the New-York Central Company in Chicago than here. On the other hand, it was argued that the new line must prove of incalculable benefit to New-York City in many ways. One gentleman asserted that fully 60 per cent. of the imports now received in Boston would be directed thither. The resolutions were finally adopted on the ground that if the board waited until the New-York Central Railroad Company should do something to be thankful for, the board would never have the opportunity of thanking them, and that the resolutions as presented included opportunity for "repentance and remission of sins."

Previous to the meeting the annual balloting for a new Board of Directors had taken place. At this point the teller reported the names of the newly-elected board. The new names include those of Benjamin Tatham, L. F. Holman, Freeman Bloodgood, R. F. Austin, Francis Baker, John Claflin, Samuel Raynor, William A. Cole, Moses G. Hanauer, and George W. Davids. The outgoing members are William Duryee, J. P. Robinson, George A. Merwin, William Orton, (deceased,) William H. Libby, William I. Peake, Emerson Opdycke, F. A. Potts, George B. Satterlee, and Frederick Taylor. All the other old members are re-elected. The old board then formally adjourned and the new board convened. The business done was to choose an old board of officers for a second term, and to listen to a speech of thanks from President Snow, prepared, as he confessed, in anticipation of his re-election.

ICE-BOAT MEN ON THE SHREWSBURY.

UNCLE VAN TINE'S PROJECT OF A RACE—ITS FAILURE FOR WANT OF WIND YESTERDAY.

The villagers of Fair Haven, down on the Shrewsbury River, are pre-eminently a race of sailors, and when their beautiful river is covered with ice, and their boats lie dismantled high on the beach, they still seek their favorite element and skim its surface in ice-boats, the fleetest and most graceful of wind-propelled creations. Everybody who owns a sail-boat or yacht in Summer steers his own ice-boat in Winter, and the natural consequence of this aggregation of swift craft is that races between them are frequent and exciting. For a week or two before New Year's the ice was in capital condition for the boats, and at those times the white sails were to be seen flitting, like shadows, up and down the river with the speed of the wind, and exciting the most lively interest among the spectators, who watched their graceful motions from the shore. Among these spectators was Uncle John Van Tine, the patron and promoter of all the out-of-door sports of that region, and he conceived the idea of a grand ice-boat regatta, to be sailed for money prizes over the regular Shrewsbury yacht course of 20 miles. He at once advertised it, fixed yesterday as the day for the event to come off, and within a few days had received promises from half the ice-boat owners in that part of the country that they would be on hand. The snow came in the meantime, but not of a sufficient depth to interfere materially with the sailing of the boats, and yesterday afternoon a dozen of the skimmers were collected off the little pier jutting out from Van Tine's place. As many more were to be seen far up and down the river trying in vain to make their way to the rendezvous. But there was no wind, and although the impatient ice sailors stamped up and down whistling loudly for a breeze, none came, and at last, to the great disappointment of the yachtsmen and of the spectators gathered to see the fun, it was decided to postpone the race until a more favorable day.

The Shrewsbury River ice-boats are by no means the elegant affairs of the Upper Hudson, nor do they make such wonderful speed; but they are comfortable, home-made affairs, with deep boxes that are generally well-filled with hay, and they carry plenty of canvas. What they lack in beauty and speed is made up in the daring recklessness of the men who sail them, and who will hold on to every stitch of canvas until the last moment in a blow.

A REMINDER OF TAINTOR'S CRIME.

Henry R. Pierson, as Receiver of the Guardian Mutual Life Insurance Company, brought suit in 1874 against the Atlantic National Bank of this City, to recover the sum of $50,000. The case was referred to ex-Gov. Hoffman, who reported in favor of the plaintiff, awarding him $70,311 68, and judgment was rendered for that amount. Yesterday the case was argued before the General Term of the Supreme Court on appeal from the judgment. The suit involves a question as to whether two advances of $25,000 each, made by the plaintiffs, were made to Frank L. Taintor, the defaulting Cashier of the bank, who is now undergoing imprisonment for his offense, or to the bank corporation. The plaintiffs claim that the loan was made to the bank. The defendants insist that the transaction was a personal matter between the plaintiffs and Taintor. The court reserved its decision on the appeal.

ROBBERIES FROM THE APPRAISER'S STORES.

During the past week several cases of silk, while lying in the United States Appraiser's Stores, have been broken open and portions of their contents stolen. The quantity of silk thus stolen is valued at about $1,500, and the robberies were so cleverly that as yet there has been found no clue to the manner in which they were accomplished or to the perpetrators of them, although it is understood that certain of the Custom-house employes are suspected of being implicated. The goods had been duly examined and verified by Examiner Corlett, and then turned over as correct to Mr. Brown, the Labor Contractor, who was responsible for their delivery. The robberies have been kept secret, and very few of the Custom-house employes except those engaged in the Appraiser's Department are even yet aware of their occurrence. About two days ago the last robbery was discovered by the Foreman of the Appraiser's Department, who, while looking over some cases, found one broken open and four pieces of silk missing. The case has been given in charge of Treasury Agent Brackett, who is engaged in investigating it.

GIRLS FOR DOMESTIC SERVICE.

DIFFICULTY OF GETTING THEM AT THE INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS AND HOMES.

Complaints have been made recently by ladies desirous of obtaining young girls for domestic service that they have been unsuccessful in their applications for this purpose to the industrial schools and homes in this City. One very respectable lady, who has had some experience in such a quest quite recently, said to a TIMES reporter yesterday: "I have been anxious for some time past to undertake the training of a young girl who would give promise of improvement under judicious management, and, in company with a friend who has the same object in view, I have visited a number of the industrial schools and other charitable institutions in this City. Our search has been fruitless, however, as in every instance we have been informed either that there were no girls then in the establishment who would suit our purpose, or that—and this was the more frequent answer—parents would not allow their children to accept such positions. As all these institutions are supported by private contributions, I should really like to know to what purpose the free instruction lends if not to preparing young children for such places as we offer." Similar queries have been frequently made of late, and a general answer to them will be of interest to the public. The reporter called at several institutions in order to ascertain the facts.

The first place visited was the Wilson Industrial School for Girls, corner Avenue A and Eighth-street, which is the oldest institution of its kind in New-York. The Matron said the primary purpose of the establishment is not to place the pupils in situations either in private families or in shops, but that when opportunity offers these places are gladly accepted. During the past five years, owing to the extreme pressure of hard times, the older scholars have not been allowed to remain, as they formerly were, until their tastes were formed, but have been withdrawn at early ages that they might contribute to the family support. The consequence is that there are no girls in the school over 12 years of age, and this in itself acts as a bar to the numerous applications for servants. Difficulty, however, lies in the fact that very few parents are willing to have their children leave them entirely, and will only con-ent to their taking places enabling them to return home in the evenings. The ladies will engage a girl under such circumstances, and, as a consequence, a large majority of the applications fail of result.

At the Home of the Friendless, No. 29 East Twenty-ninth-street, one of the lady managers said it is impossible to meet the wishes of one-quarter of the persons who desire to adopt children, and that the books are now full of such applications which as yet have not been satisfied. With regard to the 10 industrial schools supported by the institution, she said that no control can be exercised over the pupils so far as the selection of a place in trade is concerned, for they are entirely under the management of their parents when not in the school buildings, and as these parents are decidedly averse to any thought of separation, however poor they may be. In any instances, positions are found for the youngsters, but only with the consent of the parents, and almost never where the children are not to be allowed free communication with their families.

The Superintendent of the Free Home for Destitute Young Girls, No. 41 Seventh-avenue, said the applications for servants exceed the supply by at least 10 to 1. This is not from difficulty in procuring to value or take out duties on sugar, either of which would give American refiners an equal chance to compete with the sugar-makers of other countries.

The Secretary of the Children's Aid Society, at No. 16 Leonard-street, is to give a Christmas festival in the school building this evening, at 7:30 o'clock. Rev. O. L. Brace will preside, and the children will sing.

James Keefe, of No. 125 East Broadway, stole two boxes of pearl shirt-buttons from the establishment of H. B. Claflin & Co. on Dec. 30. In General Sessions, yesterday, he admitted his guilt, and Judge Cowing sentenced him to one year in the Penitentiary.

Teachers in the industrial schools sustained by the Children's Aid Society report many cases of destitution among deserving parents of children attending the schools, and the society asks that donations be sent to it for distribution among this class of the worthy poor.

The following assignments for the benefit of creditors were filed in the office of the County Clerk yesterday: Archelaus A. Colby to John Matthews, and Archibald Scott and Susan M. Merwin, firm of Archibald, Scott & Co., to Thomas W. Wingfield, the preferred credits being $11,027 74.

CONGRESSIONAL PROBLEMS.

MR. BECK ASSAILS SECRETARY SHERMAN'S POLICY.

MR. SHERMAN'S REPLY TO THE RECENT SILVER RESOLUTION OF THE SENATE DESCRIBED AS "ARRANT NONSENSE"—AN INVESTIGATION TO BE MADE BY THE FINANCE COMMITTEE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—Mr. Beck, of Kentucky, took occasion in the Senate, this morning, to reply to the answer of Secretary Sherman to the resolution of Dec. 3, calling for a statement of the amount of silver received for Customs since the beginning of the present fiscal year, and what amount of it, if any, had been applied to the payment of interest on the bonds or notes of the United States, and if it had not been so applied, why not. His remarks were rather in the nature of a personal attack upon the Secretary than a reply to Mr. Sherman's answer to his resolution. He characterized the answer as "arrant nonsense," and broadly intimated that it had not been made in good faith, and was not an answer to his inquiry. He attacked the Secretary's methods of specie resumption, as well as the act itself. His resolution to refer the answer of the Secretary to the Finance Committee for investigation was agreed to unanimously without further debate.

In the reply of the Secretary to Mr. Beck's resolution, it was stated that the receipts of silver coin for Customs during the current fiscal year have not been sufficient to enable the department to make payment exclusively in silver coin. No general demand for it, in lieu of gold, was manifested by those entitled to coin interest from the Government. While reserving the legal option of the Government to pay either gold or silver coin, it has been the general practice to comply with the request of the holder of a demand against the United States as to the form or denomination of money desired by him, and this practice has been observed in the payment of interest of the public debt. In the disposition of the coin paid for duties on imported goods, though the requirements of section 3,694, Revised Statutes, have not been disregarded in respect to the application of coin so received—first, to the payment of coin interest; second, to the sinking fund; third, to the payment of the residue into the Treasury—attention was directed to the fact that nearly the entire receipts of standard silver dollars from all sources, including coinage, have been expended in the purchase of silver bullion under the appropriation made in the first section of the Silver Dollar act.

CONGRESSIONAL TOPICS.

THE PROGRESS OF THE APPROPRIATION BILLS—INDICATIONS THAT THE ARMY REORGANIZATION BILL WILL NOT BE PASSED AT THIS SESSION—THE POTTER COMMITTEE AND THE CIPHER DISPATCHES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The Senate Committee on Appropriations is working industriously upon the appropriation bills passed by the House. To-day the Indian bill was reported to the Senate with amendments, which are not, however, of an important character. Notice was given that the bill would be called up for consideration to-morrow, and it is probable that the other appropriation bills passed by the House and now pending with the Senate Committee will be disposed of next week. Two or three appropriation bills are now in conference committees, and it is probable that they will be finally passed within the next 10 days. There is no prospect of any serious difficulty between the two houses upon any of the regular appropriation bills, and the opinion is expressed by members of both Appropriation Committees that all the bills referred to will be passed by both houses before the 1st of March.

The Army Reorganization bill is now without definite status in either branch of Congress. It was fixed as a special order for Committee in the House to-day, but the funeral services of Representative Hartridge caused it to go over, and it must now take its chance with numerous other special orders which have no fixed place on the calendar. Senator Burnside to-day attempted to regain a place for the bill in the Senate, but finding that very little interest was manifested in it by his colleagues, he abandoned the effort, and simply gave notice that he would call it up as soon as the Patent bill was disposed of. The general opinion is that the bill will not pass at this session.

The Potter committee has been called to meet to-morrow, but for what purpose has not yet been stated to the Republican members. There is reason to believe, however, that the meeting will be for consultation only. It is stated to-night by gentlemen who are known to be in the confidence of Mr. Tilden that he has already informed Mr. Potter that he desires to be called to tell what he knows regarding the cipher dispatches. It is understood that Mr. Potter is willing to hear his explanation, doubtless knowing in advance what it is to be. Gen. Butler, on the other hand, who will be present to-morrow, is said to have expressed the opinion that the the committee has no more right to inquire into Tilden's connection with the dispatches than it has to investigate the secret correspondence of a business firm or of any private citizen.

A CONGRESSMAN'S FUNERAL.

IMPRESSIVE CEREMONIES IN THE HALL OF THE REPRESENTATIVES OVER THE REMAINS OF THE LATE JULIAN HARTRIDGE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—In the Hall of the House of Representatives to-day impressive funeral services were held over the remains of the late member from Georgia, Hon. Julian Hartridge. The dead Congressman was very highly esteemed by his associates of both parties, and men of all political creeds came together to-day to do honor to his memory. Shortly before 3 o'clock, the hour appointed, the Judges of the Supreme Court came into the hall, wearing their robes of office. They took seats in front of the circle of members' desks, and to the left of the Speaker. Soon after the President and his Cabinet came in and were assigned seats in the circle to the right of the Speaker. It is worthy of note that this was Mr. Hayes' first official appearance in the House since his election to the Presidency. The Senate, which to-day met with the lower branch for the first time since the counting of the Electoral vote, was seated in the first two rows of seats behind the Presidential party and the Judges of the Supreme Court, the rest of the chamber being occupied by members. Mr. Speaker Randall's desk was appropriately draped with black and ornamented with flowers. At 3 o'clock, after the Vice-President had taken his place beside the Speaker and the slight confusion occasioned by the entrance of the Judges and Senators had subsided, the body was borne into the chamber and placed just in front of the Clerk's desk, upon a slightly-raised platform. The pall-bearers—Messrs. Knott, of Kentucky; Frye, of Maine; Culberson, of Texas; Blount, of Georgia; Hendee, of Vermont; Calkins, of Indiana; Ward, of New-York; Tucker, of Virginia; Clark, of Missouri; Mask, of Pennsylvania, and Foster, of Ohio—wore black silk sashes and white rosettes, while the members of the Congressional committee appointed to accompany the remains to Georgia were distinguished by white sashes and black rosettes. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Mr. Harrison, Chaplain of the House, and Chaplain Sunderland, of the Senate, and after a most eloquent and feeling address from the former, the President, members of the Cabinet, Judges, Senators and Representatives filed past the Clerk's desk to take a last look at the dead Congressman. Subsequently, the remains were conveyed to the railway station.

Congressman Schleicher, of Texas, is now lying dangerously ill at his residence in this city, and it is feared that he will not recover.

GEN. MERRITT'S NOMINATION.

NO ACTION YET TAKEN BY THE COMMERCE COMMITTEE — MR. CONKLING BELIEVED TO BE WAITING FOR THE NEW-YORK LEGISLATURE TO ELECT A SENATOR.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The Senate Committee on Commerce, contrary to general expectation, did not meet to-day. Three or four members of the committee assembled in the committee-room at the appointed hour, but as no quorum was present nothing could be done. The members present were Messrs. McMillan, Patterson, and Spencer. The failure of Mr. Conkling to appear is regarded as significant, and justifies the opinion expressed by Senators that there is a fixed purpose on his part not to hold a meeting of this committee until after the election of a United States Senator by the New-York Legislature. There is reason to believe that the failure of the members of the committee to attend the meeting appointed for to-day was in pursuance of an understanding with Mr. Conkling, and the indications are that a majority of the committee is in full sympathy with him touching the disposition to be made of the New-York Custom-house appointments. There can no longer be any doubt that Mr. Conkling has decided to resist the confirmation of these nominations, and if any proof was wanting that he will have the support of his colleagues on the committee in this matter, the action of to-day would seem to supply it. A leading Democratic Senator, who has hitherto favored Mr. Merritt's confirmation, said to-day that he felt satisfied that the New-York nominations would be rejected, and declared his own purpose to vote against their confirmation. The same Senator further said that prominent Democrats of New-York had been consulted in reference to the disposition to be made of the appointments, and that they had advised against confirmation. The opinion is expressed in Senatorial circles that Mr. Merritt's nomination will be rejected by a larger vote than that by which the Senate refused to confirm Mr. Roosevelt.

THE SUGAR CONTROVERSY.

SECOND DAY OF THE HEARING BEFORE THE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE—VARIOUS OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THE TARIFF QUESTION.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The hearing of representatives of the sugar interest was resumed this morning before the Committee of Ways and Means. Mr. Hitch, of New-York, said he was an importer of sugar from Brazil and the Philippine Islands, and that he came before the committee simply to ask for justice. If the proposition so persistently pressed upon the committee should be carried out, it would prove a discrimination against a wished-for customer, so severe that it would entirely prevent the importation of Brazilian sugar, and throw the principal product of the northern provinces of that Empire entirely into the hands of English buyers, who, to-day, even with our present tariff and in spite of paying higher rates of freight, buy more of the crop than we do. He wished to oppose with all the force he possessed, and to protest against, the attempt to destroy not only his business and that of all merchants who import low-grade sugars, but to destroy a great and important manufacturing industry in which was invested millions of capital, and which gave employment to thousands of our citizens. The present tariff, with an amendment to meet the change in the manufacture of sugar in some places, would be equitable.

Daniel J. Foley, of Baltimore, presented the propositions of the importers, refiners, grocers, and consumers of that city.

S. P. Thompson, of Baltimore, said the test of the value of sugar was by feeling. It was difficult to test sugar by color always, some being soft, granular, hard, and gummy, made by the same process. He showed the disastrous effects of the tariff of 1870 and 1875 on the importation of sugar.

Mr. Moulton, of New-York, said the committee should be conservators of the public morals. If they wanted a certain number of dollars they should have one duty and one weighmaster. Legislation should not be in favor of 25 sugar refiners against 40,000,000 of consumers. There should be an honest tariff, and importers should be free to import as much sugar as the people require.

Mr. Searles, of Connecticut, said that he utterly disagreed with the gentleman who had advised the committee as to the value of the polariscope. It was not an invariable test of sugar.

Representative Garfield asked whether the gentleman knew of any adulteration of refined sugars, and whether the Government is defrauded of revenues. Mr. Searles replied that he had not such knowledge, but on his way to this committee-room a gentleman had informed him that if the committee wanted proof of adulteration and fraud they could have it.

The committee, at 2:30 o'clock, adjourned till to-morrow morning.

NOTES FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9, 1879.

The receipts from internal revenue to-day were $363,523, and from Customs, $519,920.

The condition of Justice Hunt to-day is not materially changed. He passed a somewhat more comfortable night than on Tuesday, and it is thought that there is a slight improvement in his general symptoms.

Secretary Sherman was before the House Appropriation Committee this morning urging that an appropriation of $50,000 be made for the purpose of defraying the expenses of transporting silver bullion from the Pacific coast to New-York for the balance of the fiscal year. The Secretary also asked that an annual appropriation of $150,000 be made for this purpose.

Charles Thompson, Principal Chief of the Cherokee Nation; Delegates D. H. Ross, Samuel Smith, W. P. Adair, and S. H. Downing, of the Cherokee Nation; P. Porter and D. Hodges, of the Creeks, and Gov. B. F. Overton, of the Chickasaws, called on the President to-day. The Colorado Utes, who are now in this city, also had an interview with the President to-day concerning the sale of their lands to the Government.

The House Committee on Education and Labor to-day authorized Representative Willis, of Kentucky, to report to-morrow the bill heretofore agreed upon by the committee, providing that no more than 15 Chinese shall be admitted to this country on any one vessel, with a request that the House assign the earliest possible day for its consideration. The committee also changed the bill so as to provide that the date for it to go into effect shall be the 1st of next July.

The subscriptions to the 4 per cent. loan to-day amounted to $4,155,000. The following banks were to-day designated as depositories of public moneys to receive deposits on account of subscriptions to the 4 per cent. Consols of 1907, viz: First National Bank of Providence, R. I.; Merchants' National Bank of Dayton, Ohio; National New-Haven Bank of New-Haven, Conn.; New-York National Exchange Bank of New-York City, Indiana National Bank of Lafayette, Ind.

The annual report of Mr. A. R. Spofford, Librarian of Congress, which was submitted to the Senate to-day by the Chairman of the Library Committee, shows that additions to the law department number 3,841 volumes, and to the miscellaneous library, 17,656 volumes, besides 11,689 pamphlets and 2,244 maps and charts. At the date of the last report, Jan. 1, 1878, the whole library numbered 331,118 volumes and about 110,000 pamphlets. The aggregate increase during the year has been 21,537 volumes, which swells the aggregate contents of the library to 352,655 volumes, besides 120,000 pamphlets. The copyright fees received and paid into the Treasury for the past year amount to $13,134 50. For the preceding year the aggregate fees were $13,076, showing an increase of $58 50.

TENNESSEE'S DEBTS AND RINGS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 9.—Hon. John D. Andrews to-day introduced in the House of Representatives a resolution to appoint a joint committee to investigate, as early as practicable, many charges that have been made in regard to the Penitentiary and other Rings, and the alleged bribery of legislators by notorious lobbyists in the interest of the Railroad Tax bill, the Funding bill, and the Tarbett issue. The committee is directed to summon witnesses and send for papers relating to charges that are understood to be of a nature not easily disproved. In the Senate, Mr. Patton offered a resolution to appoint a committee to communicate with New-York bondholders, and ascertain whether the recent proposition of compromise would be adhered to, and what was the lowest amount at which they were willing to compromise. The first discussion on the debt question will be commenced next Friday by the Senate.

THE LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

A VICTORY FOR THE BRITISH.

GEN. ROBERTS ATTACKS AND ROUTS THE MARAUDING TRIBES — THREE HUNDRED OF THE ENEMY KILLED—THE BRITISH LOSS TRIFLING.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—Reuter's telegram from Calcutta says: "On Tuesday Gen. Roberts, finding the hostile tribes collected in considerable numbers, attacked them with three small columns, and was completely victorious. Forty troops of Punjaub cavalry charged a mass of the enemy, killing nearly 300. Skirmishers of the Tenth Hussars drove the enemy from Brouen Gromo. One hundred prisoners, a quantity of grain, and a large number of cattle were captured. The British loss was trifling. The victory is expected to have great moral effect.

THE HARD TIMES IN ENGLAND.

A FAVORABLE STATEMENT OF THE CORNISH BANK AFFAIRS—THE SILVER MARKET AT A STAND-STILL—PROGRESS OF THE RAILWAY STRIKES.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—The statement in the liquidation petition of the Cornish Bank, that the liabilities are £658,000, which is much less than was supposed, has tended to allay the uneasiness felt in Cornwall regarding the prospects of the creditors. The drain upon the other banks has considerably decreased.

The market for bar silver is at a complete stand-still. The Austrian inquiry is ended, and it is stated on good authority that the Austrian Mint is, in a sense, completely glutted with silver. The favorable result of the allottment of India Council drafts yesterday has steadied the market, but there are no transactions.

At a meeting of the goods guards of the Midland Railway to-day, reports were received from Normanton, Manchester, Leeds, Bradford, Birmingham, Leicester, and Wrighton, which state that the men are still firm in their refusal to accede to the terms of the company.

SHEFFIELD, Jan. 9.—The goods guards here still stand out. The goods trains from Sandiacre to Ilkestone are blocked with trains, and on all the sidings in this locality the coal and mineral traffic is accumulating. Rumors are current among the goods guards to-day that at 12 o'clock to-night the pointsmen intend to put up signals of danger and come out. The railway officials, however, believe that this strike will be only partial.

The Great Northern Railway Company has given notice at Leeds to the goods guards and porters of a reduction of wages, to take effect to-morrow.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—The guards at most of the Midland Railway stations yesterday surrendered their watches and uniforms to the company, and were paid off, although several at Leeds, and all at Bedford and the important coal depot at Stavely, have resumed work. It is thought the strikers may hold out for about a fortnight, but they are not seconded by the signal-men who have remained at work since midnight at Derby and at Sheffield and other stations.

The Consett Iron-works Company, the largest makers of ship-plates in England, employing 6,000 to 7,000 hands, and owning nine collieries, owing to the dullness of their business, have been obliged to suspend work at most of their mills and forges and discharge 300 miners.

A STEAM-SHIP LOST AT SEA.

THE BRITISH STEAMER BAYARD FOUNDERS WITH ALL HANDS EXCEPT TWO.

MADRID, Jan. 9.—The Spanish brig Encornacion, Capt. Galiana, from Fernandina, Fla., Dec. 19, for Ferrol, Spain, landed yesterday two of the crew of the steamer Bayard, which foundered at sea on Dec. 10. All of the remainder of her crew were drowned. The Bayard was a British steamer of 964 tons, commanded by Capt. Everett. She sailed from New-Orleans Dec. 4 for Rouen, France.

AN IMPORTANT PAPAL LETTER.

THE POPE ADDRESSES THE BISHOPS ON THE CONDITION OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—A dispatch from Rome to Reuter's Telegram Company says the Pope has sent to the Bishops of the Catholic Church a very important encyclical letter, in which he speaks at length of the condition of the Church, the Holy See, and society, and explains what he has already done and what remains to be done. The document is shortly to be published, and, it is believed, will create a sensation.

ROME, Jan. 9.—The Pope's Encyclical Letter is published. It calls upon the Bishops to combat Socialism, Communism, and Internationalism by preaching the principles of the Church.

A COURT-MARTIAL ORDERED IN THE CASE OF THE COLLISION OF GERMAN WAR SHIPS—RESULT OF A PARISIAN LIBEL SUIT—LORD BEACONSFIELD'S CONDITION IMPROVING.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—A Berlin dispatch to the Pall Mall Gazette says that a court-martial has been called to investigate the case of the collision of the German iron-clads Grosser Kurfurst and König Wilhelm in the English Channel, on May 31, 1878, in which nearly 300 lives were lost by the sinking of the Grosser Kurfurst. The following officers have been summoned to stand trial: Rear Admiral Batsch, commanding the squadron; Capts. Count Monts and Kuehne, commanding respectively the two vessels, and First Lieut. Clauss, who was in charge of the Grosser Kurfurst at the time of the collision.

A dispatch from Paris to the Times says: "Sixty young men having quitted the District of Thann, in Alsace, to avoid the conscription, they have been sentenced, by default, each to pay a fine of 12,000 marks, or to 200 days' imprisonment and to the seizure of their property to the amount of the fine."

Ex-President Grant was the guest of the American Minister, Mr. Welch, last night. He expected to leave London for Paris to-day.

PARIS, Jan. 9.—Twelve vacant seats in the Chamber of Deputies, caused by the unseating and the death of members, are to be filled on the 2d of February. There will be little interest in the result of the elections, for the reason that M. De Fourtou, M. De Mun, the well-known Clericalist, and M. Paul de Cassagnac, are to stand for re-election.

A statement was published a short time ago in a paper called La France Nouvelle that a well-known Senator of the Left had been expelled from a club in the Faubourg St. Germain for cheating at cards. This statement was copied into English and American papers. M. Lacour, Senator, and editor of the Republique Française, believed that the paragraph referred to him, and sued the editor of La France Nouvelle. The case was tried yesterday in the Correctional Court. M. Gambetta conducted the case for M. Lacour, being his first appearance at the Bar since 1870. He made a brilliant speech. The court inflicted a fine of $400 upon the editor of La France Nouvelle, with damages in the amount of $2,000.

La France (newspaper) announces that the Bey of Tunis yielded to-day on all the points, and will make an apology with great pomp to the French Consul. An inquiry into the Sancy affair will be ordered, and the three Tunisian functionaries designated by the Consul will be dismissed.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 9.—The plague has reached the Government of Saratofin. At Naratsin 173 deaths have occurred. The mortality is estimated at 10 per cent. of the population. The St. Petersburg newspapers propose that the nurses and attendants of the Red Cross Society should volunteer for Astrakhan.

HUGHENDEN, Jan. 9.—The following bulletin was issued at noon to-day: "Lord Beaconsfield is much better this morning. The attack of gout, which kept him confined to his room, is passing away. His lordship had a very good night."

LONDON, Jan. 10.—The Times' correspondent at Berlin says there is great excitement there concerning a bill which Prince Bismarck has proposed to the Federal Council, giving the Reichstag power to punish its own members for improper utterances. The extreme penalties are deprivation of eligibility for a seat in the House, and the handing of the offender over to the civil courts.

WHAT THE OHIO IDEA HAS DONE.

PENDLETON'S SPEECH AT THE COLUMBUS BANQUET—SOME REMARKS ABOUT ITS ACHIEVEMENTS IN FINANCE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 9.—Some comment is heard here to-day, in financial circles, on the speech of Senator-elect Pendleton at the Columbus banquet last night. His theme was the "Ohio idea," and, after boasting of what he called its splendid achievements in the past, among which he enumerated the equalization of currency with coin, the remonetization of silver, and the payment of Customs duties in greenbacks, he undertook to define what it had still to accomplish. First, he named the abolishment of national banks. The system, he said, was of doubtful constitutionality. It was expensive to the people. It conferred privileges on a business and a class. Under manipulations of parties it became a great political instrumentality, controlling elections and demoralizing politics. It would be obliged to yield to a better. The greenback currency was an effort in this direction, and was far better. It was cheaper. It avoided political complications. It paid debts and taxes. Notwithstanding the inferiority imposed upon it by the Government, it had sustained for 16 years the industrial system of the country, and they were years of great prosperity until the fatal policy of the Republican Party intervened. Even the greenback might be improved. The Ohio idea recognized the necessity of this improved currency, and sought to supply it. Success alone would finish its efforts.

Senator Pendleton was the only one of the prominent Democratic leaders present who referred to the financial question. His utterances are regarded as in the nature of the key-note for the Ohio Democracy in the next campaign.

HUNTER'S LAST DAY.

ANOTHER USELESS APPEAL—AN ATTEMPT TO COMMIT SUICIDE—A REPORTED CONFESSION.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 9.—John C. Hunter made another appeal to Gov. McClellan for a respite of one month for his brother, Benjamin D. Hunter. The Governor replied that he had no power to grant the respite.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 9.—Numbers of people visited the Camden Court-house this afternoon, to take a look at the scaffold upon which Benjamin Hunter is to be hanged to-morrow, but none were admitted. The machine was tested this afternoon and worked satisfactorily. Hunter's wife and family, accompanied by Rev. Dr. Kunkelman, visited the condemned man for the last time this afternoon, and remained with him until after dark. The parting was extremely affecting, leaving Hunter crushed and apparently nearly heart-broken, weeping like a child. He deeply realizes his situation. On Monday, in a fit of despondency he attempted to sever an artery in one of his legs by cutting it with his finger-nail, inflicting a wound that bled freely enough to make necessary the services of the prison physician. Since then he has been handcuffed, and an extra watch is kept over him. A detail of Militia will be in readiness in case the Police force proves insufficient to keep back the crowd. Two hundred and fifty passes have been issued to members of the press and others to witness the execution.

It is understood that Hunter has made a confession which confirms the general allegations made by Graham, and in it Hunter admits that he committed the deed to secure money to satisfy the demands of an abandoned woman; that he did not fear Graham, as he had been in other villanies with him; that he would never have been found out had he furnished money to send Graham out of the country. He thought, however, that Graham had fled, and he was astonished when he heard of his arrest.

DEMOCRATS IN INDIANA.

VOORHEES' RE-ELECTION CONSIDERED CERTAIN—WHY TILDEN IS CONSIDERED A GOOD CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENT.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 9.—Advices from Indianapolis leave little room for doubt that Senator Voorhees' re-election is as good as assured. The several caucuses of Democrats, Nationals, and Republicans indicate that no other result is possible. State Auditor Henderson says that Voorhees will receive 80 to 85 votes on the first ballot. This is equivalent to saying that five, and possibly all of the Nationals, will support him. The Republicans have decided to enter no combinations, but act on the let-alone principle. Leading Democratic members of the Legislature, while unanimously for Voorhees, are opposed to his giving any pledges to the Nationals to secure their votes. They believe that the financial question will not enter into the next campaign; and that Mr. Voorhees can do better service for the party by letting financial issues alone.

The action of yesterday's Democratic caucus in pronouncing for Tilden for the next Presidential candidate has caused general surprise. There were about 30 Democrats present, without exception men of influence in the portions of the State where they reside. The opinion was expressed, from which no one dissented as far as known, that Tilden was the most available candidate for President in 1880, provided he could satisfactorily explain the cipher dispatches. No one was present in the conference from Indianapolis, the home of Mr. Hendricks. It is said that a telegram embodying the sentiments of the meeting was sent to Tilden, but of this there is some doubt. It has been denied to-day that such opinions were expressed in the caucus, but the statements are based on good authority. It was freely admitted in the conference that Mr. Tilden was much better able to bear the financial burdens of the campaign than Gov. Hendricks. During the last two or three years the latter has met with heavy losses, compelling him, in one instance, to sell his residence to Gen. Love to raise money.

EXPLOSION IN A COAL MINE.

TWO MINERS SEVERELY INJURED—THE SURFACE AFFECTED AS BY AN EARTHQUAKE.

PITTSTON, Penn., Jan. 9.—At 7 o'clock this morning, just after a gang of miners had descended into the Pennsylvania Coal Company's shaft No. 4, near this place, a terrible explosion of gas occurred in the mine, near the carriage-way, by which several, men were supposed to have been killed. There has been for a few days a great change going on in a few of the mines adjoining No. 4, making itself visible upon the surface by immense crevices, throwing over school-houses, dwellings, &c. As a result of this change, the gas forced its way into mine No. 4, which has hitherto been free from the deadly vapor, and when Peter Daley, the mining boss, opened the door leading to the old works, an explosion took place which shook the earth in the vicinity with terrific force. The mining boss is burned terribly, and Patrick Loftus is severely injured. The others of the gang were in a separate chamber of the mine and escaped unhurt. The "head-house" was dismantled, and as a consequence it was several hours before the seats of the explosion could be reached. It will probably take two weeks to get the shaft into working order.

MOONSHINERS AGAIN AT WORK.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

GREENVILLE, S. C., Jan. 9.—Commissioner Raum's inability to continue the services of the revenue raiding force, on account of delay in the necessary appropriation, inflicts much injury on regular distilleries lately established in the mountain regions of this State. Reports of distilling, hauling, and selling "blockade" whisky are numerous, and in many instances the ex-officials respond to petitions for protection without expectation of remuneration for the arduous service rendered. Redmund, accompanied by two brother outlaws disposed of two wagon loads, during the past 10 days, near Westminster, on the Air Line Railroad.

LOUISIANA ELECTION FRAUDS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 9.—In the United States Circuit Court to-day pleas were filed by the counsel for the Natchitoches prisoners, charged with the violation of Election laws, as follows: To the charge of felony, a plea of not guilty, but denying the jurisdiction of the court. To the charge of violating the Election laws, they claim that the laws are unconstitutional; that the indictment is informal, and ask that its counts be quashed.

WHIPPING-POST FOR WEST VIRGINIA.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WHEELING, West Va., Jan. 9.—A resolution for the establishment of a whipping-post in this State was offered in the House of Delegates to-day. The action taken upon it was to refer it to a special committee for report. It is believed that the resolution will be acted upon about the close of the session.

BISHOP'S CHARGES DENIED.

MRS. COBB TELLS HER SIDE OF THE STORY.

THE PRISONER DENIES MANY OF WESLEY BISHOP'S ASSERTIONS AND EXPLAINS PLAUSIBLY THE OTHERS—SHE ASSERTS THAT SHE NEVER POISONED HER HUSBAND—INSINUATIONS THAT BISHOP MIGHT HAVE DONE SO—IMPROPER INTIMACY ALSO DENIED.

NORWICH, Jan. 9.—Mrs. Cobb has been on the stand testifying all day, and though her story is received with many a smile of incredulity, and is severely criticised, it is very plausible, to say the least, and might easily be accepted as fact by three or four men out of every twelve who are utterly unprejudiced. Her manner, too, is greatly in her favor. She was straightforward and ready, composed most of the time, growing indignant when her virtue was questioned, and becoming pathetic whenever allusions were made to the deaths of her husband and her friend Mrs. Bishop. The acting, if acting it were, harmonized perfectly with the story, and was well calculated to excite skepticism as to the truth of Bishop's narrative.

The evidence against her was circumstantial, and she has undertaken to give a different significance to these circumstances wherever she can. Such testimony as rests solely on Bishop's own word—such as that relating to their alleged criminal relations—she is perfectly free to deny, point-blank, which she does with the fervor of injured innocence. When Bishop has minutely detailed an event, like an assignation on the street, or a ride by night to the country, she care ully analyzes its incidents, admits the truth of some, declares that Bishop was told thereof next day; so that he was familiar therewith and able to make them the basis of a fabrication of his own. The other more criminal elements of each of these stories she eliminates by declaring their assertions to be false. It was a rather remarkable incident of this examination that Bishop was not present to hear her testify. She heard every word of his testimony, and has had time and opportunity to demolish his statements. But he, not overhearing her testimony, will be at a great disadvantage if he should to rebut any of her stories.

The first thing attempted by Mr. Greene, who conducted the direct examination, was to show the intimacy between the families of Cobb and Bishop, and to show that the two men were more particularly each other's friends, and the two women similarly attached. It was said, had been school girls together, and had kept up their intimacy ever since, except for the interruptions of absence. Allusions to Mrs. Cobb's death provoked tears and pauses in the witness' utterance more than once. The shooting excursions together, the men's rides by themselves, Mrs. Cobb's solicitations of Mrs. Bishop to join the Good Templars, their planning together for household and fancy work, their exchanges of notes and such other incidents, were mentioned to confirm this theory. Then, when they met socially, Bishop's and Mrs. Cobb's partners were represented as present, and as even longer than Mrs. Bishop's and Mr. Cobb were the ones who urged her to learn to play cards. She never danced round dances with Bishop or any one else. She denied emphatically that she had had any private visits from Bishop. All she visiting to take orders for groceries and other supplies, and to deliver goods, was explained as the customary thing. She had nursed Mrs. Cobb concerning Cobb's health and illness. The latter began before Bishop said they did in February. She represented that his beard began turning in color and falling out long before this. Cobb doctored himself with patent medicines almost continually, and was always taking pills, using all sorts of bitters and elixirs. During this time she devoted herself assiduously and anxiously to him, as a true wife would. The death-scene was minutely described, and was made to seem long protracted by weeping and a tempo ary suspension of the narrative. The witness very emphatically asserted that she never talked with Bishop about poison, never saw the latter obtain arsenic, never concerted a scheme of poisoning Mrs. Bishop, and never bought, ordered, received, or administered any poison of any kind to any person. This statement was made in one sentence, categorically, and its studiously-conceived form and voluntary utterance excited a smile all over the court-room. The witness' tone at this time was very firm and spirited.

A number of incidents were narrated to show that Bishop was a poisoner before the day before Mr. Cobb's sickness, evidently by poison, in February, Bishop had offered to bring them some tea, a commodity which Cobb usually bought himself—not as a grocery, but at a tea store. Cobb protested and said he preferred to get it at the latter place, as it was better. But, Bishop, nevertheless, brought a little, and told Mrs. Cobb to prepare it for Mr. Cobb without saying where it came from. "He won't know the difference," Bishop said. She tried the experiment and it sickened Mr. Cobb, as has been described already. When Mr. Cobb found where the tea came from he said: "Well, if that is the kind of tea Hurlburt sells, then I don't want any more of that." In contradiction of Bishop, she said her husband was not the only one who drank tea. Her daughter did, too, but it was weak. In March and April, when Mr. Cobb was sick, Bishop brought brandy or whisky for them; the first time voluntarily, the second time by request. The first time he knew it was for Mr. Cobb; the second time he ascertained it by particularinquiry. On both occasions Mr. Cobb was nauseated by taking it; the day that Cobb died he had said in the morning that he was as well as for a few days past; was not expecting his death; Bishop called three times that morning; the third time he was alone with Mr. Cobb for some minutes, and when she returned to the room Mr. Cobb was chewing something Bishop had given him. [Manifest skepticism on the faces of the lawyers and spectators.] Almost immediately he became drowsy and fell asleep on the lounge; the children coming, home from school at noon awakened him, and he exclaimed, "Dear, dear, do what they would to me up I did want to sleep so;" soon after he staggered away from the dinner-table and died. [Here the witness exhibited much emotion.] His dying remark, "I've got my last shock," was addressed to Mrs. Waterman, and was suggested by his recent use of electricity as a remedy.

It has been one theory of the defense that Cobb took arsenic voluntarily to fatten himself. The witness testified to her husband's great sensitiveness as to his leanness. He could not go to a masquerade ball without being identified thereby. An attempt to get in evidence of his conversing about it was unsuccessful for a long time, the State's attorney objecting to everything that savored of a violation of rules of evidence. Then, in the face of several objections, which were argued at length, but overruled by the court, testimony was taken regarding the accidental discovery, by Mrs. Cobb, in her husband's box of private papers, late in April, at house-cleaning time, of a paper of white powder which Cobb took from her hastily, and threw into the stove, saying that it was poison. Thereafter Cobb carried arsenic powders in his pockets and took them regularly and constantly.

The different presents alleged to have been exposed at various times were taken up in detail. The hand-mirror and stationery she claimed that she ordered through Bishop, and did not know until afterward that they were meant for presents. Her husband knew all about them. The pencil-case she pretended to have found on the boat going up the North River. The breast-pin and ear-rings were given in return for mending Bishop's gloves, fixing a coat-lining, and such little services. The cup and saucer, handkerchiefs and other articles Bishop swore to making her she said she never had. The ring of Mrs. Bishop was given her after Mrs. Bishop died, at Mrs. Cobb's own request. She sent Bishop the watch-chain as a philopena present, with Mrs. Bishop's knowledge. The gold tooth-pick marked "Pet," she never gave him at all. She bought it for herself, and had it marked "Pet" because her husband called her so. Then she raised the witness to shed tears. She let Bishop look at it one day and he quietly pocketed it.

The exchange of notes openly or clandestinely was emphatically denied. In this matter, as in about 50 others, Mr. Greene would cite what Bishop has said, and ask, "What have you to say to this, Madam?" She would answer in a quickened and tremulous voice, "It is false, Sir," She never gave him any notes at the store, nor received any. They sometimes handed one another printed circulars, taken from the counter, folded up, without any writing thereon. After Mr. Cobb's death, Mrs. Waterman received a note from Bishop asking an interview, but she responded in writing. "It is impossible." At different times questions were put to the witness about Bishop's visits, frequently in the Fall and Winter of 1877. She answered all these questions with the assertion. "It is false, Sir." She denied all private visits from him and all caresses of any kind. To a series of questions whether she and Bishop ever exchanged love for each other or talked seriously of a divorce or of elopement, she gave her stereotyped answer, "It is false, Sir." Her alleged assignations with Bishop were closely scrutinized. The nights when Bishop claims to have taken her out to ride, she admitted having first called on the friends he mentioned, but denied emphatically ever riding with him by night. She said Bishop, in each of these cases, ascertained next day where she had visited those nights. In each case she claimed to have returned home earlier than he alleges, generally before 9 o'clock. On the occasion when Bishop states that he met her by appointment in School-street, she asserts that she took her child to a Sunday-school concert, tried to call on Mrs. Reynolds, found her out, went to Platt's store to buy buttons, returned to Mrs. Reynolds' again, went in a short time, then proceeded to the church for her child, who had finished her part of the entertainment, and took her home. She saw nothing of Bishop that night. Another such alleged assignation occurred the Tuesday night before Cobb died. She again accounts for herself by saying that she took tea at Mrs. Charles Tracy's house, staid until 8:15, proceeded to the Otis Library, returned some books, talked with Mrs. Robinson, the librarian, about a daisy blossom that lady had trimmed and marked to look like a bonneted face; proceeded thence to call on Mrs. Reynolds, half a mile off, found her friend away, met her in the street as she came down Washington-street, stopped and told her about Mrs. Robinson's daisy, and finally went home, arriving there at 9:25. She was not in School-street at all, and did not see Bishop. To prove that she did not see Bishop at home evenings in December, she said her mother was sick three weeks, dating from just before or just after Thanksgiving Day, and she spent every evening during that time with her mother. The only time she ever went to Bishop's house after his wife died, and in his mother's absence, was for a few minutes one night to get a shirt that needed mending. She went by appointment, but did not sit down. When leaving there, she stopped to see Mrs. Lee, who lived in the basement, and went thence to her mother's rooms in Main-street. This was before her mother came to live with her, in May. The night of May 9 when Bishop claims to have hid in the cellar, and afterward to have gone up stairs to a certain room with her, she says she did not see him, and her mother and brother staid until after 10 o'clock. Moreover, the room was entirely bare of furniture, except the pictures on the wall, having been cleared out for her mother to move in next day.

Attention was next given to the five nights in January, 1878, when her husband was absent in Troy. She remembered and told what she did each night. On Saturday night the Bishops both came by invitation; Sunday she went to church with them; Monday and Tuesday she went to her mother's, and Wednesday to Victory Lodge. Three or four times in the course of the morning she denied point-blank ever having criminal intercourse with Bishop. Several other incidents and explanations ensued, and finally the poetry was taken up. More than half the selections she declared she had never seen. Two of them had been sent to Mrs. Bishop. Only two, "Beyond the bright Cloud" and "Changeless," had she given to Bishop, and both were intended to console him for his departed wife.

The cross-examination, which was not finished at the time of adjournment, occupied nearly all the afternoon, and was conducted by Mr. Waller. The questions were promptly answered, sometimes with spirit, but the witness never lost her self-command, and did not contradict herself. Mr. Waller is reported to have said confidentially, "Kate criticism may be made upon its magnificence or cost, it is a great building, worthy of a great State, which has a great history and a great future. There is no use of scolding about what cannot be stopped, except as a notice that such things must not be repeated. This will never be repeated. It is built for all time, and there is no immediate danger now of the capital being removed from Albany to New-York. All the Governors down to the present day have scolded and then signed the Capitol appropriation bills, and so I suppose it will continue to be. The opening reception was a great success, and I venture to say that there is no country on the face of the earth where so many people could be gathered and kept in such perfect order without the aid of the policeman's club or a soldier's bayonet. It teaches anew what we have learned before, namely, to trust the people."

This serenade to Gov. Hoffman has revived the rumors that have been current for a few months, to the effect that there was a design on the part of one branch of the New-York Democracy to indnce the ex-Governor to re-enter political life. What little the Governor said touching this subject cannot be regarded as an encouragement of such a design, if it exists. His exact language was as follows: "You" [the Jackson Club] "were with me in power and out of power and when I was in politics, and you are with me now that I am out of politics, as I am and hope to be forever."

There were great rejoicings last night among the friends of Mr. Alvord, and many of them came to the Assembly Chamber this morning looking as if the cancus had been the most fatiguing work of their lives. At 11 o'clock the Assembly was called to order. In the galleries there were fewer spectators than yesterday, but the floor of the House, which is not at all sacred, was thronged. The names of members who had been absent on Tuesday were called, to ascertain whether they had since taken the oath before the Secretary of State. When the business was finished, Mr. Strahan moved that the House go into an election for Speaker. The roll was called. Ackerman, of New-York, was first on the roll. He voted for Thomas G. Alvord. Arnold, the Greenback member, third on the list, did not vote, and Banfield, also a Greenbacker, also remained silent. Berry, of Madison, next the first vote for Erastus Brooks. The voting went on, the result was announced, and Hon. Thomas G. Alvord was declared the Speaker of the Assembly, his vote being 95 to 24. Messrs. Brooks and Sloan were appointed a committee to escort the Speaker to the desk.

Mr. Alvord walked between his Republican and Democratic escort to the desk, where he stood for a moment adjusting his glasses. Then he made his brief and graceful acceptance. While he spoke, the visitors in the gallery behind him and over his head craned their necks to see the veteran's figure. A handsome basket of flowers was sent to his desk by Mrs. Edward R. Phelps, of White Plains, whose husband has been a warm supporter of Mr. Alvord during the recent canvass. The election for Clerk then proceeded, the Democrats voting for John Kenney, who was described by a well-known Democrat in the Assembly as a gentleman in the "hobby-horse business," otherwise unknown to fame. The Republicans voted for Edward Jewett, who received 97 votes to 26 for Kenney. Clerk Johnson was sworn in, and then Charles A. Orr was elected Sergeant-at-Arms, defeating Ragan, a Washington Market butcher, whom the Democrats nominated, by 97 to 25. The remainder of the officers nominated by the Republican caucus were duly elected, the Democrats causing some fun by grouping themselves on the right of the Speaker's desk and voting with a shout on the resolutions substituting Democratic candidates for Republicans.

Mr. Husted and Mr. Grady were sent as a committee to inform the Governor that the Assembly was organized and ready to receive his Message, and Mr. Gildden and Mr. Penfield were sent to the Senate to apprise that body of the readiness of the Assembly to proceed. On motion of Mr. Hayes, the drawing for seats was ordered and Mr. Fish and Mr. Holahan were appointed to examine the ballots. Senators Harris and Oakley were ushered in at this juncture to announce the readiness of the Senate to proceed with business. Just as Sergeant-at-Arms Orr had succeeded in finding chairs for the correspondents, who had been walking about the Chamber for two days without a place to call their own, Mr. Hayes introduced a resolution authorizing the Clerk to provide accommodations for them.

Before the drawing of lots for seats began, Gen. Sharpe remembered that something was due to several members of the body, and he offered a resolution that Mr. Husted and Mr. Sloan be permitted to select their seats without the formality of drawing. On Mr. Fish's motion, Mr. Brooks was added to the privileged list. With great presence of mind, Mr. Strahan seized a moment before the drawing to ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill. The consent was given, and he introduced it. It was the first vote of the most interesting. It was an Excise bill for the City of New-York, and its main points are as follows:

Section two provides that the Board of Excise of the City of New-York shall have power to grant license to any person or persons of good moral character, who shall be approved by them, permitting him or them to sell as any one named placed in the City, spirituous liquors, wines, ale or beer in quantities less than five gallons at a time. The liquor is to be drank on the premises or otherwise, as the license shall specify, and the license fee is to be left to the Excise Board to decide, in its discretion, within certain bounds. For the sale of ale or beer only, the fee shall not be less than $30 nor more than $100, while a license to sell strong liquor and wines, as well as ale and beer, shall cost not less than $150 nor more than $250, where the liquor is to be drunk upon the premises. If the liquor is to be drank away from the premises, the license fee shall not be less than $100, nor more than $250.

The fourth section provides that "the whole number of licenses in force in the City of New-York at any one time shall not be greater than the number in force on the — day of —, 187—." In any case where application is made to the Board of Excise for a license to a place not licensed on the day the act is passed, no license is to be granted upon such application "unless the said Board of Excise is satisfied that one is there needed in addition to those already existing in the same locality."

Section 10 disposes of the Sunday liquor question by providing that licenses granted under the provisions of the bill shall not authorize any person or persons in the City of New-York to keep publicly, or expose for sale, or to sell, give away, or dispose of, any spirituous liquors, wines, ale, or beer to any person whatever as a beverage, on Sunday or election days, nor between 1 and 5 o'clock in the morning on any day of the week. All licensed places must be kept closed on Sunday, and during the hours named on other days. The section makes it the duty of every police officer and member of the Police force to enforce these provisions. Hotels, however, are permitted to receive and entertain travelers at any time, subject to the restrictions contained in the act.

Another bill of Mr. Strahan provided for a compilation and revision of the laws of the State of New-York affecting interests in the City of New-York. The Governor is to appoint one person, and the Mayor of New-York one person, who are to act with the Corporation Counsel to form as commission to compile and revise special and local laws which shall be in force at the time such commission shall make their final report to the Legislature of 1880. The commission is to suggest to the Legislature such contradictions, omissions, and imperfections as appear in the original text, with its recommendations for amendments. The Commissioners are to have $5,000 each for their services for the year, and are allowed $2,500 for expenses. This bill and a resolution, not new, defining the legal liability of the Mayor, and regulating assessments, were introduced, it is said, in accordance with the suggestion of Mayor Cooper in his Message.

Mr. Hepburn introduced a concurrent resolution reducing the salaries of Senators and members of the Assembly to $1,000. Mr. Hayes, coming early into the field, introduced a concurrent resolution, which was talked over last year, to make the canals free from tolls.

Mr. Husted and Mr. Grady having reported the Governor as ready to send in his Message, David M. Robinson, the Governor's private secretary, was ushered in by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Message was handed up and it was read, Mr. Sloan occupying the chair while the reading was going on. During the reading the seats of the members were nearly all empty, Erastus Brooks being the most conspicuously attentive listener.

A few more bills were introduced after the Message, among them being one by Mr. Campbell, which is to be known as the "Excise bill." It is a bill to regulate the sale of liquors in the State, and has been modeled in many features after the Daly bill of last year.

The drawing for seats occupied about two hours. Before it began Mr. Sloan, Mr. Husted, and Mr. Brooks selected seats at the extreme left, with their backs toward the interesting glare of light that streams in from the north. The members of the Assembly withdrew to the space under the galleries, and as their names were called by the Clerk, selected their seats. A. Barton Hepburn, whose name was first out of the box last year, came out first to-day, and he also sat at the left. In the same corner are the members named, together with Fish, Varnum, McDonough, Sharpe, Terry, Skinner, and others.

Mr. Youngs, of Queens, presented the petition of George F. Carmen, contesting the seat of Charles T. Duryea, of Suffolk. Mr. Skinner introduced a resolution that will probably meet with warm recommendation from some members and strenuous opposition from others. This provides for the appointment of a committee to investigate the subject of legislative appointments and salaries connected therewith, and to consider the feasibility of reducing the number of employes and the salaries paid. The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. Husted secured the honor of calling up the first bill for passage. He obtained unanimous consent from the House, and had two bills, already passed by the Senate, introduced, read three times, and passed without opposition. They were of local interest in Allegany County. A concurrent resolution from the Senate, adjourning the Legislature until Wednesday next, at 8 o'clock in the evening, was agreed to, and the Assembly adjourned at 2:45.

REPORT OF CONTROLLER OLCOTT.

THE GENERAL FUND DEBT ALL PAID—APPRAISEMENT AND TAXATION—WHAT THE CANAL IS DOING FOR NEW-YORK.

ALBANY, Jan. 9.—Controller Olcott's report upon the finances of the State is plentifully charged with facts and figures, of which the most important are presented in the following synopsis:

I have brought together all the accounts kept by the State, with its various funds, into one condensed statement, which statement is as follows:

Receipts and Payments.

Aggregate balance in the Treasury of all the funds Oct. 1, 1877	$6,759,434 27
Aggregate receipts during the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1878	12,404,505 01
Total	$18,163,939 28
Deduct payments during the year	13,870,055 69
Balance in the Treasury Sept. 30, 1878	$4,293,883 54

REVENUES.

The following condensed statement gives the revenues and expenditures for the last fiscal year, showing an apparent deficiency of $885,838 38:

Deficiency of the revenue Oct. 1, 1877	$332,375 16
Amount of warrants drawn on the Treasury during the year ending Sept. 30, 1878	6,490,652 37
Amount transferred to the following funds for interest on money in the Treasury during the year, belonging to said fund, viz:
School fund	$147,622 00
Literature fund	406 08
United States Deposit fund	12,262 06—160,280 14
Total	$6,983,307 67
Amount of receipts into the Treasury during the year ending Sept. 30, 1878	6,096,952 48
Amount transferred from School fund for bond, for lands	516 81—6,097,469 29
Apparent deficiency Sept. 30, 1878	$885,838 38

Owing to balances due from County Treasurers at the close of the fiscal year, and payments on account of the appropriations of 1878, included in the tax payable in 1879, the apparent deficiency of $885,838 38 does not represent the true state of the fund at the date indicated. The following supplementary statement gives the correct result, and shows a surplus of $1,754,565 01:

Balances due from County Treasurers, Sept. 30, 1878, on State tax of 1877	$1,385,369 09
Add amount paid on account of 1878 appropriations, included in tax levy of last year, payable in State Treasury in April and May, 1879	1,159,017 01
Total	$2,544,386 10
Deduct apparent deficiency of the revenue, Sept. 30, 1878, as shown in preceding table	$885,838 38
Also balances of 1877 appropriations unpaid and in force Sept. 30, 1878	266,643 21—1,152,481 59
Actual surplus Sept. 30, 1878	$1,391,904 51

In my annual report to the last Legislature the surplus was estimated at $1,754,565 01. The result is, therefore, apparently $362,660 50 below the estimate; but as $800,000 of the $1,000,000 appropriated in 1878 for the new Capitol is included in the payments of the last fiscal year, and is excluded from the tax levy, the result is really $437,339 50 more favorable than the estimate, in other words, if the surplus had not been reduced for new Capitol purposes, it would have amounted on the 30th September, 1878, to $2,191,904 51. The excess is accounted for by the reduction of prison expenditures amounting to $190,048 80, commissions and interest based on actual appropriations, and an increase of $65,931 24 in the earnings. The balance is made up by a receipt of $82,736 78 from the United States on account of war claims, and other miscellaneous receipts in excess of estimates, and balances of appropriations covered into the Treasury by the lapse of time.

DEBT.

On the 30th of September, 1877, the total funded debt was $10,957,054 87, classified as follows:

General fund	$926,694 87
Canal	9,930,360 00
Bounty	130,000 00
Total	$10,957,054 87

On the 30th of September, 1878, the total funded debt was $9,154,054 87, classified as follows:

General fund	$122,694 87
Canal	9,020,360 00
Bounty	11,000 00
Total	$9,154,054 87

The general fund State debt is all paid, and the item of $122,694 87, included above, represents the amount required to yield, at the rate of 6 per cent, the sum necessary to pay the Indian annuities. The balances of $11,000 of bounty debt, for which funds are provided, had not been presented for redemption at the close of the fiscal year. A balance of $1,012,328 18, in the canal sinking fund, leaves the amount of that debt unprovided for, Sept. 30, 1878 at $8,008,031 82.

The State debt, on the 30th September, 1877, after deducting the unapplied balances of the sinking fund, amounted to $8,707,663 85

On 30th September, 1878, (including $123,644 27) to | $8,130,726 69

Showing net contributions to the sinking fund of | $576,937 16

The actual reduction of the debt during the same period, by cancellation, being | $1,803,000 00

DEBT AND TAXATION.

There is no debt upon the State now except the canal debt, which, after deducting the sinking funds, amounts to but $8,008,031 82. The financial condition of the State stands out in marked contrast, as against the condition of localities within its borders. The debt of the State is merely nominal; and taxation for State purposes is too trivial to be considered in comparison with the enormous local debts, and the oppressive burden of local taxation. The citizens of this State were taxed in 1877, for State, town, county, and school purposes, upward of $50,000,000; add to this sum the direct and indirect taxes paid to the United States Government by our citizens, which are calculated to amount to $50,000,000, and we have the ominous sum of $100,000,000 annually taken from the pockets of the people to support government. The aggregate of the town, county, village and city debts will, at this time, approximate closely to $250,000,000. Wisdom preaches strict economy, and with equal force it demands a revision of the tax laws. There is safety in no other course, and danger threatens from delay. Equity would enforce taxation equally upon personal and real property; but at present the latter has that real property bears the greater share.

CANALS AND TRANSPORTATION.

The last fiscal year was about equally divided between the old system of managing the canals by three Commissioners, and the new system of a Superintendent of Public Works. For the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1877, the expenses of the canals amounted to $1,050,329 68; for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1878, the expenses amounted to $739,748 97; showing a decrease in expenses of $310,580 71. The expenditures for ordinary repairs and maintenance of canals from Feb. 1 to the close of navigation, for the past five years have been as follows: 1874, $1,001,618 53; 1875, $1,003,914 50; 1876, $961,438 16; 1877, $851,729 46; 1878, $440,817 57.

These figures tell their own story, and demonstrate that the reform upon the canals has been real, and in the hands of a competent member of the Board. In a short time the four great trunk lines connecting the West with the sea-board have taken united action, which, if maintained, practically places them under one management, so far as the tax to be levied on freight and passenger rates shall be concerned. No one has been appointed "to whom all matters in connection with east and west bound-freight and passenger rates shall be referred." A Commissioner, to whom absolute power is given, is appointed to arbitrate differences between the committee. No one who has the true welfare of the country at heart can look upon this compact except with the greatest apprehensions. The time cannot be far distant when these corporations, with their enormous capital and great load of bonded debt, will so tax commerce as to compel the building of a freight road of three-feet gauge between Chicago and New-York. A road of this kind can probably be constructed and equipped at a much less cost than the amount that is now extracted annually from the passenger, freight, and miscellaneous earnings of the New-York Central Road and its connections between the two cities. In the railroad report for 1877 their earnings are given as follows:

New-York Central and Hudson River Road	$26,579,085 90
Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Road	13,214,434 15
Total	$39,793,520 05

The water route between Chicago and New-York affords an outlet for the products of the West for seven months in the year, which is of incalculable benefit to commerce and the country's prosperity. The water route has reduced the cost of transportation per ton from Chicago to New-York from an average of $9 09 in 1861, to an average of $3 07 in 1878, and the average rate of freight in 1878, from Chicago to New-York by water, on a bushel of wheat, was 9.21 cents, while the tolls alone on the Erie Canal, nine years ago, were 21 cents per bushel. This reduction in the cost of transportation by the water route has forced the rail routes to a similar reduction during the season of navigation. During the months when navigation is closed, the rail routes advance freights, and as a necessary consequence check business. In January and February, 1878, the rail rates were advanced to a point where business was entirely suspended. In March the rates were lowered, and a largely increased movement was the result. The constantly varying rates of freight are injurious to business, as it is impossible for the shipper to tell at what moment freights may be advanced to a point where trade is paralyzed. It can be understood how, from natural causes, freights in Winter should be higher than in Summer, but it becomes a serious business when they are advanced so high that shipments are checked. It may be said that the rail routes will not for any length of time maintain freights at a point destructive to their own business, but the policy is to keep them so low as will enable each to receive the greatest amount of revenue from the smallest amount of freight.

In the first 11 months of 1877 there was received at Baltimore, Philadelphia, and Boston of all kinds of grain, including flour and meal, in bushels | 71,946,169

New-York received, in bushels | 96,156,699

Total at four ports | 167,105,822

In 1878, for the same period, the three cities received, in bushels | 108,674,249

New-York received, in bushels | 142,469,619

Total at four ports | 251,143,868

In the first 11 months in 1877 New-York received 56 9-10 per cent. of the total receipts at the four seaboard ports, and in the first 11 months of 1878 New-York's proportion was 57¼ per cent. With an increase of receipts amounting to 84,038,976 bushels, New-York, with its two railroads and canal, barely held its own. Of the 144,468,619 bushels received at New-York in the 11 months, the railroads carried 77,992,756 and the water route carried 66,646,063. Leaving out flour and meal, of which the railroads carry nine-tenths, and confining ourselves to grain, the railroads carried in 1878, to New-York, in bushels, 58,898,976, and the water route carried in bushels, 64,108,097. Of the 11 months in which these receipts are had, the waterfront is available but seven. It will thus be seen that the water route is of immense importance to New-York, not only as the means of bringing through our State more than one-half of New-York City's grain receipts, but because, as has been shown, it has reduced the cost of transportation upon every bushel that reaches the seaboard. By its reduction in the cost of transportation equaling 66 2-3 per cent. in 17 years, and the consequent effect upon railroad rates, it has been of vast service to the country's prosperity. The most prominent incident in our finances the past year is the fact that we have exported of our manufactured articles, of our cereals, and of the various products of our soil and our industries, $250,000,000 worth more than we have imported from other countries. It is impossible to show how much of this result is attributable to the water route, but there can be no doubt that it was a most important factor. It is said that the increased tonnage on the canals in 1877 caused the loading of 1,000 vessels at the port of New-York, and as the average amount expended by a sea-going vessel while in port is $2,000, the increased canal traffic caused $2,000,000 to be expended by sea-going vessels alone. It is also estimated that the total gain to the State was $13,000,000, due wholly to the increased business of 1877.

Our finances and all the business that the enterprise of its citizens can bring to it. We need it to employ our capital. We need it to employ our laborers. We need it to help us bear the onerous burdens of taxation. There must be a speedy end to railroad discrimination against New-York; there must be a speedy end to special rates which tend to concentrate business in the hands of the few to the injury of the many; there must be an end to the excessive port and terminal charges. Should these and other abuses be continued, you will soon be asked to use the power of the State to end them.

CONNECTICUT'S NEW GOVERNOR.

NO TROUBLE ABOUT THE LEGISLATURE'S ACTION—GOV. ANDREWS' MESSAGE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARTFORD, Conn., Jan. 9.—In the House, today, Mr. Treat, of Bridgeport, explained that the omission to act on the canvass of votes yesterday did not infringe upon the constitutional provision which requires a list of the returns to be laid before the General Assembly on the first day of the session, for the reason that a committee was appointed, and did make the canvass, and that committee's act was the act of the Assembly. The Constitution does not say when the two houses shall decide upon the canvass, but only that on the second day of the session, in case of no choice of candidates by the people, there shall be an election in joint convention. In 1871, when there was a contest between Jewell and English, the canvass was not acted upon for 10 days. This explanation disposed of the matter, whereupon the report of the canvassers was accepted, and subsequently in joint convention, Mr. Andrews and his associates on the Republican State ticket were elected by ballot.

The public ceremonies were conducted in the midst of a driving snow-storm. The Governor-elect was escorted to the Capitol by the Governor's Foot and Horse Guards, and at 2:30 P. M. the houses came together in convention. After he had taken the oath of office, Gov. Andrews delivered his Message. It opens with congratulation upon specie resumption and hope of the return of prosperity. The Governor recommends a change of the Joint Stock laws of the State, and the consolidation of private districts, advocates cumulative voting, advises that the separate property of married women be taxed against them and not against their husbands, and alluding to mention many circumstances essential to a fair statement of the truth, and thus doing gross injustice, left him no other course than to reply for the honor of the department.

Appended to the letter of publication from Commissioner Hayt to Secretary Schurz, inclosing a synopsis of the charges of Gen. Sheridan relating to the present administration of Indian affairs, and a reply to each, made up from papers and facts in the possession of the department. The Commissioner disposes, one after another, of the allegations of Gen. Sheridan, based on reports from military officers, of insufficient supplies and interference by Gov. Pope, and the following appointments on his staff: Adjutant-General, Edward M. Harland, of Norwich; Quartermaster-General, Leverett W. Wessells, of Litchfield; Paymaster-General, Francis Havens, of Connecticut; Commissary-General, William H. Bulkeley, of Hartford; Surgeon-General, Horace S. Fuller, of Hartford. His aides are Charles T. Morse, of New-Haven; W. T. Coe, of Winsted; Charles L. Dean, of Ashford, and Charles Evarts, of Salisbury, all with the rank of Colonel.

WISCONSIN'S CONDITION.

THE MESSAGE OF GOV. SMITH—CHIEFLY CONFINED TO STATE MATTERS.

MILWAUKEE, Jan. 9.—The Message of Gov. William E. Smith was delivered to the Wisconsin Legislature, at Madison, to-day, and is confined chiefly to State matters. The finances are in a healthy and satisfactory condition. The State indebtedness remains the same as last year—about $2,500,000. This, added to the indebtedness of the counties, cities, towns, villages, and school districts in the State makes the public indebtedness of the people of Wisconsin about $12,000,000. The real value of taxable property in the State is $1,000,000,000, while the amount of property actually assessed is a little less than half this amount; hence, had the assessment been made at the actual value, the rate of taxation would not have exceeded 1, instead of being nearly 2, per cent. From the report of the Commissioner of Railroads it appears that 500,000 more passengers were carried in 1878 than last year, and 400,000 tons more freight. Of the whole number of passengers carried only two were killed. The total absence of all serious complaints against the railroads shows that the present law is well suited to the purposes for which it was enacted. The Governor devotes considerable space to the tramp nuisance, and says that the assessments made and collected by the Board of Equalization and communities nearly equals the whole State taxation, and he recommends vigorous measures of relief.

In conclusion, the Governor says: "I cannot forbear to congratulate you that the United States has resumed its normal relations to its own citizens and the world at large, by paying on demand all its matured obligations in any coin or currency whatever citizen extends, and this has been accomplished without any unnatural contraction of the currency or violent shock to the business interests of the people."

A REMINDER FOR PRESIDENT HAYES.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The eleventh annual convention of the Woman Suffrage Association assembled here to-day. Owing to very disagreeable weather the attendance was rather small, but the proceedings were animated and interesting. Mrs. Cady Stanton, Miss Susan B. Anthony, Julia Denham, Lillie D. Blake, and other ladies prominent in the advocacy of the cause of woman suffrage were in attendance. A series of earnest resolutions were presented and ably discussed; among them a resolution that a committee of three be appointed to wait upon President Hayes and remind him of the existence of one-half of the American people, whom he has accidentally overlooked, and of whom it would be wise to make some mention in future Messages. Mrs. Elizabeth L. Smith, Mrs. Matilda J. Gage, and Mrs. Wells, of Utah, were appointed a committee to wait on the President and inform him that there are 20,000,000 women in the United States, he having ignored that fact in his recent Message.

MORTON M'MICHAEL'S FUNERAL.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 9.—The funeral services over the remains of ex-Mayor Morton McMichael took place this afternoon at St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal Church. The following gentlemen acted as pall-bearers: William S. Stokley, Mayor of Philadelphia; J. I. Clarkhare, President-Judge of the Court of Common Pleas; Henry M. Phillips, Vice-President of the City Commission and President of City Trusts; Dr. Charles J. Stille, Provost of the University of Pennsylvania; George H. Boker, President of the Union League; Rev. Robert Paterson, Henry C. Carey, and George W. Childs. After the services the body was taken to Laurel Hill for interment.

WARREN COUNTY'S INDICTED OFFICERS.

BELVIDERE, N. J., Jan. 9.—J. W. Dean, late Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Board of Freeholders, was placed on the stand to-day to testify for the State against ex-County Collector Cummins, ex-County Attorney Givens, ex-Freeholder Bolgia, and ex-Director Strader, charged with conspiring to defraud the county of $5,000. Dean and Dr. Mattison are also included in the indictment, but not in this trial. Dean has two indictments standing against his name. He told a startling story to-day, showing how the county had been defrauded. Contractor Silker, convicted yesterday of conspiracy, was surrendered by his bondsmen and placed in jail. Ex-Director Strader's bondsmen also wished to surrender him, but he was not to be found. The court adjourned until to-morrow.

COLORADO SENATORIAL CONTEST.

DENVER, Col., Jan. 9.—At a caucus of the Republican members of the Legislature this evening, Prof. N. P. Hill was nominated on the fourth ballot for the United States Senate. The Legislature will hold the election on Jan. 14.

THE TROY SAVINGS BANK SAFE.

TROY, N. Y., Jan. 9.—The rumor which has circulated affecting the Troy Savings Bank is unfounded. The bank can cover $1,000,000 of securities in 24 hours. No run is threatened. There is not a difference of $2,000 between the depositors and the drafts to day.

BOSTON, Jan. 9.—Mrs. Annie Mooney, who keeps a bar-room and lodging-house at No. 253 North-street, with her son Charles, is accused by James Minehen, of Boston Highlands, of stupefying him with liquor and drugs on Monday night, at the saloon, and robbing him of $7,319. They deny the charge. The case will be investigated by the grand jury to-day.

THE INDIAN CONTROVERSY.

GEN. SHERIDAN ANSWERED AGAIN.

SECRETARY SCHURZ REPLIES TO THE GENERAL'S SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT, AND COMMISSIONER HATT ADDS A FEW WORDS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—Unwilling that Gen. Sheridan should have the last word in the seemingly interminable controversy over the management of the Indian Bureau, Secretary Schurz has sent to the Secretary of War a long letter in reply to the General's recent supplemental report. He points out three statements in Gen. Sheridan's annual report which their author now asserts have been misconstrued. [Secretary Schurz quotes the statements, and, although accepting Gen. Sheridan's disclaimers, adds:

"I may be pardoned for saying that if it is so difficult to draw correct conclusions from what Gen. Sheridan says as to what he means, it was certainly unkind on his part to accuse me in an official report of 'disingenuousness' for assuming that he meant what he said. The word 'disingenuous' would ordinarily be taken as an offensive term. But the cases above mentioned justify the supposition that in this instance also Gen. Sheridan did not mean it. And there let it rest."

The Secretary says he expected some new information, likely to benefit the service, in the supplemental report, and he sees such evidence of diligence and zeal in its preparation that he now presumes the whole case to be before him, as strong as Gen. Sheridan can make it. But he finds nothing new in it. Much of its matter refers to the administration of his predecessors. The General's statements, so far as they are at all substantiated, contain only allegations about agents that have already been dismissed, or about abuses that have been remedied, warranting the conclusion that the department knows more about these matters than Gen. Sheridan does. As to the existing abuses in general, the Secretary says that much has already been done in consequence of the labors of the Commission of Inquiry appointed in 1877. Those changes and improvements have gone on as rapidly as possible, and have already taken a much wider range than the complaints of military officers, contained in Gen. Sheridan's "supplemental report," seemed to call for. Probably the General was too busy looking up old evidence against the Indian Bureau to inquire what improvements had been made. Had he done so his sense of justice would have led him to mention in his "supplemental report" that most of the reforms he suggested had been made, besides many others of which he knows nothing. "Had Gen. Sheridan found time to seek this information and produced it, his supplemental report would have become as complete a vindication of the efficiency of the present administration of Indian affairs as I could desire."

Secretary Schurz is confident that if he could induce Gen. Sheridan to personally inspect the various agencies of Indian Bureau that he would be convinced that its methods are as business-like, its protection against fraud and peculation are as certain, and the results attained as satisfactory, as those of the military service. He points out, too, that the "ring men" and fraudulent claimants are cursing the Interior Department and struggling to get out of its clutches.

The Secretary then proceeds to say that this controversy has not been of his seeking, and is distasteful to him, but Gen. Sheridan's sweeping charges, implicating pretty much everybody in the department, and making no mention many circumstances essential to a fair statement of the truth, and thus doing gross injustice, left him no other course than to reply for the honor of the department.

Appended to the letter of publication from Commissioner Hayt to Secretary Schurz, inclosing a synopsis of the charges of Gen. Sheridan relating to the present administration of Indian affairs, and a reply to each, made up from papers and facts in the possession of the department. NOMINATIONS BY THE PRESIDENT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The President sent to the Senate to-day the following nominations: John C. Bridges, to be Appraiser of Merchandise for the Baltimore district.

Postmasters.—John G. Poole, at Randolph, Mass.; John S. Fay, at Marlborough, Mass.; E. S. Merrill, at Winchendon, Mass.; John R. Clark, at Milford, Conn.; Mrs. Mary J. Edwards, at Portland, Conn.; Walter Gladden, at New-Britain, Conn.; John Bale, at Stapleton, N. Y.; Thomas P. Hewitt, at Hoosick Falls, N. Y.; Jacob Corlies, at Red Bank, N. J.; Nelson C. CONFIRMATIONS BY THE SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The Senate, in executive session to-day, confirmed the following nominations: Andrew P. McCormick, of Texas, to be United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Texas. United States Marshals—Samuel R. Harlow, of Brooklyn, for the Eastern District of New-York; Edward Sheppard, of Rhode Island, for the District of Rhode Island.

FITZ JOHN PORTER'S DEFENSE.

MAJOR GARDNER SHOWING ITS INCONSISTENCIES—PORTER ACCUSED OF ILL-FEELING TOWARD POPE.

WEST POINT, Jan. 9.—Major Gardner, the Judge Advocate in the Fitz John Porter investigation, resumed his argument this morning, with a further consideration of the events of Aug. 29, 1862, with reference to the joint order of McDowell and Porter. He quoted extensively from the evidence and Porter's dispatches, and claimed that Porter's object was to avoid an engagement, and that the Fifth Corps was made useless when it should have been engaged in assisting the remainder of the Army. The new evidence, particularly of the Confederate officers, was quoted and criticised with reference to the time of Longstreet's arrival, and the position occupied by Longstreet. The Recorder said: "When Longstreet says he was not at the Leachman house between 10 and 12 o'clock on Aug. 29, we must charitably conclude that he is confounded the proceedings of the 29th and 30th of August." Gen. Longstreet testified at length last Summer, and indicated the movements and positions of his command on the map; but Major Gardner was of opinion that he was in error. The 4:30 P. M. order was next considered. He claimed that Capt. Pope knew the importance of its speedy delivery, and made haste to reach Porter, and that the map prepared by Gen. Warren did not indicate all the paths nor the route which Capt. Pope and his orderlies took. He thought the evidence of Capt. Pope and the two orderlies established the fact that the order reached Porter at 5:30, the testimony of Porter's witnesses to the contrary notwithstanding. He claimed that Porter was or should have been in condition either to attack or to repel an assault, and under the circumstances he was inexcusable if he had made some effort against the enemy in response to Pope's positive command; and in connection with this he asserted that it was sh a very satisfactory and satisfactory manner, and no further appropriations for it are needed. In those asylums where patients are now under treatment they are receiving all the benefits which modern science can give them. All the new buildings were commenced during the inflation times when it was considered meritorious to spend the people's money in the most reckless and prodigal manner, and the cost has been much larger than it should have been. It is too late to remedy that evil, but not too late to guard against its repetition. Personal visits to the Willard Asylum and the Utica Asylum gave me a very high opinion of the excellent management in both these institutions. They are highly creditable to the State and to those intrusted with their management. The Willard Asylum is the largest, and in many respects the most important in the State. It is built in separate groups, affording ample facility for classifying patients according to the peculiar phases of their insanity, and accommodates, as stated, upward of 1,400 patients. The apartments are all clean and in the very best order compatible with the service for which they are used, and nothing appears to be wanting which can contribute to the convenience and comfort of the inmates of such an institution. There is no overcrowding, to it consists of 776 acres, worked almost wholly by the patients, who are benefited by the labor, and the products of the farm contribute largely to their support. The support and maintenance of the patients at Willard have heretofore cost at the rate of $2 80 per week each, the payments for the same being made by the counties which send patients there instead of providing for them in the county poorhouses. The superintendent is required to render the accounts of the institution, which showed a balance of cash on hand amounting to about $35,000. This surplus had arisen from the reduction in the cost of living, and showed that $2 80 per week was more than was actually required. The rate has since been reduced to $2 60 per week, thus relieving the counties to that extent. There is no charge upon the State for maintenance.

COUNTY JAILS AND POOR-HOUSES.

Many complaints have been made to me through the Prison Association and otherwise of the local authorities, of the wretched condition and bad management of most of the county jails and poor-houses. I am very apprehensive that most of these complaints are well founded. The jails are generally the nurseries of crime, and the poor-houses as models of inhumanity, especially in their departments for insane paupers. I am not prepared to make any specific recommendations for the prevention of the evils complained of. It is probable that the concurrence of the Board of State Charities and the Prison Association, may bring the subject to your attention in some practical form. In any event, you are, yourselves, undoubtedly, acquainted with the condition of these institutions in your respective counties, and I can safely leave the matter to your own information and good judgment, earnestly urging you to continue to investigate the evils complained of whenever you learn of their existence. In connection with this subject and that of the case of the chronic insane, it has been suggested that insane convicts confined in the asylum at the Auburn Prison, at the expiration of their sentence, instead of being returned to the counties from which they were sent to prison, should be retained in the asylum where they are at the expense of the counties to which they belong. This would so far provide for one class of the insane now confined in the county houses or in the Willard Asylum.

THE INEBRIATE ASYLUM.

From conversation with several of the leading managers of the New-York State Inebriate Asylum, I learn that their experiment in the reformation of inebriates, as hitherto tried in the asylum at Binghamton, a complete failure. I have long been of the same opinion. The law does not, and perhaps cannot, properly provide for the forcible arrest, detention, and control of inebriates. Consequently, there are no patients at the asylum, except such as consent to go there voluntarily. There is no power to restrain them of their liberty, and the institution has become practically nothing more than a hotel for the entertainment of wealthy inebriates, who remain there so long as they find it pleasant and agreeable, and, when it ceases so to be, they leave it without anything having been accomplished. Counting a permanent removal of their appetite for intoxicating drinks. The institution must, therefore, be regarded as having wholly failed to accomplish the laudable purpose for which it was undertaken, and to realize the high hopes on the part of the public for its success. I recommend that no further appropriations be made toward its support for its original purpose. The building is a specious and convenient one, with a large farm attached to it, and it may without much expense be changed into a very commodious asylum for the insane who are now confined in county poor-houses, and generally not well cared for, and for whom there is not sufficient room at the Willard Asylum. I understand that the Board of State Charities approve of this disposition of the building. I commend the subject to your careful consideration.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' HOME.

Some years ago an enterprise was undertaken by an association for the purpose of establishing a home for soldiers and sailors disabled in the late war, and incapable of supporting themselves. The persons proposed to be provided for in this way are, of course, pensioners of the General Government, but the small amount received by them in the form of pensions were, in many instances, insufficient for their support. The effort to relieve them was a laudable and worthy charity. The association which undertook the work found themselves, however, unable to go on with it by means of voluntary subscriptions. At the last session of the Legislature an act was passed authorizing the New-York Guard to the association to the State of the partially-erected building and the real estate connected with it in the village of Bath, in Steuben County. The act provided for the organization of a Board of Trustees and for the payment of the debts of the association and the completion of the building. For all purposes, including a small amount for maintenance, an appropriation amounting in the aggregate to $92,315 was made. The Board of Trustees appointed under the law have proceeded in accordance with it promptly and successfully, and the building is completed and nearly or quite ready for the reception of the class of persons for whom it is intended. I am not advised as to whether any or what further appropriation will be required.

THE NEW CAPITOL.

An important question to be disposed of by the Legislature is whether further appropriations for the building of the new Capitol shall be made at the present session. The only necessity for rapid progress hitherto urged has been the inconvenient and insufficient accommodation of the Senate and Assembly in the old building, which, it was thought, now been made at a vast expense to overcome the difficulty complained of. All the important State offices are more conveniently and comfortably situated where they are than they would be in the new Capitol. The amount which has already been expended is $9,276,615 36, and of this sum $4,300,000 have been drawn from the taxpayers during the years of financial disaster and distress which commenced in 1873 and still continues. The question then arises whether the tax-payers ought not to be allowed some respite, and in considering this question account should be taken of the extensive financial destruction and sense of wrong felt by the people of the whole State at the deception practiced upon them and the violations of law committed almost at the outset of the enterprise, and by the persons intrusted by the Legislature, being chapter 485, of which the first section is as follows: "The sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the erection of a new Capitol, authorized by chapter 648 of the Laws of 1865, and the necessary expenses attending the same." But no part of the amount hereby appropriated shall be expended, nor shall the Capitol Commissioners incur any expense on account of the said Capitol, until a plan of such Capitol shall be adopted and approved by them, and which shall not exceed in cost more than $4,000,000 when completed." In 1868 the Legislature emphatically reiterated the condition of the year before. Chapter 630 of the laws of that year appropriated $250,000 for the new Capitol, created a new Board of Commissioners, and farther contained the following explicit language: "The said Commissioners shall review the plans which have been adopted, and may change and may change and modify the same, or adopt others in their place, as they may deem advisable and proper; provided, however, that they shall not proceed to the construction of the said building or buildings until a plan shall be satisfied that the expense thereof shall not exceed, when completed, the sum of $4,000,000." Thus, in two successive years, the people of the State were assured that the new Capitol should not cost them to exceed $4,000,000, and it was made a condition precedent that the Commissioners should not proceed with the work except upon such plans and specifications as would insure its completion within that sum. These acts have never been repealed or modified. They were at once violated, and in effect nullified for all time by the deliberate adoption of a plan under which the building can not possibly be completed for four times the amount fixed as its maximum cost, and the work has gone on until over $9,000,000 have been expended instead of $4,000,000, and there is no reason to expect that the building can now be completed on the scale and in the style in which it has hitherto been carried on at a less total cost than five times the $4,000,000 to which it was originally limited. Even those who favor a partial change of plan was made under the representation that it would reduce the cost, but it had little effect. It was too late. The evil lay in the illegal plan above referred to, and could not be removed without taking down the building to its foundation. The entire eastern, western, southern, and part of the northern fronts are neither inclosed nor roofed. These portions of the building have long remained in this condition. No injury will be done or no injury or inconvenience likely to result from their remaining so as long as may be desired. I recommend, therefore, that the Legislature should carefully consider: First, whether any appropriation shall be made at this session; second, whether, in the further progress of the work a simpler, cheaper, and less ambitious style of finish ought to be adopted, in view of the pledges and conditions of the statutes cited, that the building should not cost over $4,000,000; in view of the fact that near $10,000,000 have already been appropriated, and that the sum of $8,000,000 in the present florid style must cost from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 more, and the equal certainty that when completed its accommodations for every department to be most inadequate it will be far inferior to those now enjoyed, is it not wise, for a short time, to take account of the scanty progress which has been made, and the enormous cost at which it has been made, in view of the present condition of this vast outlay before further appropriations be made? No doubt exists in the mind of any intelligent citizen that a State Capitol, far more becoming in exterior design and internal finish than the present one, and far superior to it in convenience, could have been, or can now be, built at a cost within the limit of the $4,000,000 originally intended, and for half the money yet required to complete the present building on the proposed plan. It may, however, only remains, by frugal management, to secure the best possible use of every dollar given to it. If we consider the artistic merit claimed for the present design, it yet seems to us that in times like these the food and raiment of our people are more to them than the development of schools of art. A million dollar tax cuts deep into the shrunken resources of the people. They are ill able to pay it. Nothing can justify delivery but stern necessity. That necessity no longer exists. They are staggering under a vast load of local debt and taxation, and every dollar taken by the State lessens their power to endure these local demands. In the light of these circumstances, and in the unwelcome fact that the care of this mammoth building, when completed, will annually cost a fabulous sum, I urge that no large appropriation be made for the present, that the Legislature inform itself thoroughly as to the style and cost of the work, to the end that before voting any more millions it may be understood for what they are expended, and whether the completion of the building cannot be secured in some less extravagant and ostentatious style. If, however, in the judgment of the Legislature, it seems best that some appropriation be made, I recommend that it be limited to a small amount, and not made until such an examination as I have already suggested enables you to make it intelligently. There is no proper legal audit of these expenditures entrusted by our State and local governments are drawn in round sums for their moneys. The payments of every other department of the Government are subject to a rigid audit and scrutiny by the Comptroller. I know no reason why those for the new Capitol should not be likewise treated.

THE NATIONAL GUARD.

The National Guard at present consists of 7 divisions, 13 brigades, 1 regiment, and 12 separate troops of cavalry; 1 battalion and 10 separate batteries of artillery, and 23 regiments, 6 battalions, and 31 separate companies of infantry, the whole comprising 1,323 commissioned officers and 16,885 non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, making an aggregate force of 20,208. Several changes have been made by disbanding inefficient skeleton regiments and battalions, with their complements of officers, but very few men. Instead of regiments and battalions where such organizations were not needed and were not full and effectable, new organizations of separate companies has been pursued with the best results, and I am fully satisfied that the State Militia, improperly named in the law as the National Guard, was never in a more good condition, and ultimately as it is at present. Fortunately, the peace and order of the State have been so well maintained by the civil authorities that there has been no occasion to call upon the military for any service during the year. The manner in which the liberal appropriations made by the last Legislature for better equipping the force for field service have been expended, will be detailed in the Adjutant-General's report. It will be found upon examination to have been judicious and to have carried out as faithfully as practicable the objects of the several appropriations. The service to which it was necessary to call the National Guard in 1877, disclosed its lack of suitable equipments for the field. An appropriation was made in the Supply bill at the last session to furnish the troops with the requisite articles. The amount was fixed with reference to expected receipts from the General Government for arms and other materials. These receipts, however, were much less than were fanticipated; consequently the appropriation proved inauficient to fully accomplish the purpose for which it was made. A further appropriation will therefore be necessary, but should be kept at the lowest practicable amount. The information as to the necessary amount will be furnished by the proper officers. I think it my duty to caution the Legislature against applications which are frequently made for appropriations to encourage competition. As the National Guard is now organized, appropriations should be so made as that the whole force may be treated impartially. Special favors shown to any particular company, regiment or brigade are never acceptable and discord, which are injurious to good discipline.

COMMON SCHOOLS.

In my former Messages I have given fully my views in regard to the proper scope and extent of the schools that should be maintained by general taxation. All my subsequent observation has confirmed the opinions expressed upon that subject. The extent of giving to every child in the State a good common school education, sufficient to enable him or her to understand and perform the duties of American citizenship, and to engage intelligently and successfully the ordinary labors of life, the common schools are and should be objects of the deepest concern to the whole community. To the few who desire and are capable of a still higher education, and who have an ambition to shine as professional men and in the arts of literature, music, painting, and poetry, the door is wide open for them, in our colleges and academies. But to levy taxes upon the people for such purposes is a species of legalized robbery, and even the recipients come to know it. Their sense of justice cannot fail to condemn it; it lowers their standard of morality and helps to debauch the moral of purest public opinion. It also breeds discontent on the part of those who are educated, or attempted to be educated, to something above that for which they are fitted. Is really dislike for the home duties and labors to which alone they are by nature adapted, so that not only great injustice but great demoralization is the result of a system which collects money by force from one class to educate the children of another man for callings which they can never fill. The argument sometimes advanced that this system is a benefit to the poor is an utter fallacy. The children of the poor can usually leave the free schools with a common school education, and go to work for themselves or their parents. Yet while the poor man's children are thus at work, his little home is taxed to give to the children of others a college education. So far as the system of free so-called high schools at the public expense, would far better pay their own bills than to have them paid by the people of the State. These views are so manifestly just that I have no doubt they will ultimately prevail. Indeed, there seems to have been already a cessation of efforts to establish high schools, academies, and colleges, and support them by taxation. So far as I can learn, the normal schools established in various parts of the State are, with two or three exceptions, wholly useless and fall almost entirely to accomplish the objects for which they were established, and for which the State is annually paying large amounts of money from the Treasury. I recommend an inquiry into the working of these institutions, and a discontinuance of all those which fail to accomplish the purposes of their establishment. The following is a statement of the number and condition of the common schools and the number of pupils instructed in them during the past year. The full particulars will be found in the annual report of the Superintendent of Public Instruction:

Common School Statistics for the Year Ending Sept. 30, 1878.

Total receipts, including balance on hand Oct. 1, 1877	$11,793,627 67
Total expenditures	10,926,152 69

REPORTS OF CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

The Board of State Charities is much embarrassed by the want of uniformity in the date to which the annual reports are made by charitable institutions aided by the State. It is very desirable, for the purpose of tabulating and comparing the expenses of these institutions, that these reports should conform to the end of the fiscal year observed by all the State officers, namely the 30th of September in each year. But some of them by the terms of their charters, others by general laws, make their reports at various dates in the course of the year, and confusion thus arises in comparing them with the reports of the State officers. At the request of the Board of State Charities, I recommend the passage of an act requiring all of the institutions referred to to make their reports up to the 30th of September of the present year, and up to the same date in all succeeding years.

LOCAL DEBT AND TAXATION.

While the State has paid all its debt, except about $8,000,000 and is rapidly reducing its expenses and taxes within reasonable bounds, most of the cities, counties, and towns in the State are struggling under a load of debt, large expenses, and heavy taxation. In looking over the last report of the various local boards, it seems almost incredible that men of sense should have permitted themselves to be placed in such a condition. Of course, it never would have been done except under the influence of a false financial system, which seemed to deprive men of their reason, and of all capacity to foresee the evil which they were bringing upon themselves and their children. Yet the effect follows debt, and courted taxation as if for pastime. Many have almost buried themselves with bonds, issued for railroads which have never been built, and covered their farms with mortgages which they have received no consideration. Now that the illusion is gone, they are deploring the misfortunes in which is has involved them. Some of them are even hinting at the dishonor of repudiation. Others are appealing for legislative interference. It seems impossible to withhold our sympathies from any of them, but it is equally impossible to discover what material aid the State can give beyond such authority as it may be necessary to confer upon the people to make such arrangements as they may desire for the ultimate redemption of their own debts. Nothing can be done in this respect which will in any manner interfere with the sanctity of the contracts into which they have entered. They should understand that these contracts must be fearried out in good faith by those who made them. The State can do nothing which will relieve them from the assumption of these obligations, or any part of them. The first step to be taken by the localities toward their own relief, is to stop at once and finally the making of any debts for which they are indebted. However great it may be, they should at once resolve not to allow it to become any larger. In the next place, the cities, counties, and towns should insist upon a thorough reduction of their local expenses, which, like their debts, have been swollen beyond all bounds of reason during the unreasoning times that have prevailed. Shirking debts should then be established, which, with such contributions as can be made from year to year with the least possible inconvenience, will commence the reduction of the principal of the debt, and wholly extinguish it within a certain period of years. In many places where the debts are very large this will seem a long and rugged path to compulse relief, but it is the only one which I am able to discover or suggest. By pursuing it faithfully the people will receive an early compensation for what they suffer in learning to reduce their own personal expenses, and in having it impressed upon them in a manner never to be forgotten that debts, both public and private, are an unmitigated evil, and should never be contracted except under the pressure of unavoidable necessity.

NIAGARA FALLS.

The civil jurisdiction over the Falls of Niagara, as well as the shores and waters of the Niagara River, is divided between this State and the Province of Ontario, in Canada. But in one sense the sublime exhibition of natural power there witnessed belongs to the whole world. It is visited by tourists from all quarters of the globe, and it would seem to be incumbent upon both Governments to protect such travelers from improper annoyance on either side. It is, however, well known, and a matter of universal complaint, that the most favorable points of observation around the Falls are appropriated for purposes of private profit, while the shores are infested with sharpers, hucksters, and peddlers, who perpetually harass all visitors. In the course of the last Summer, in a casual meeting and conversation with Lord Dufferin, then Governor-General of Canada, he suggested the propriety of some steps on the part of the State of New-York and the Province of Ontario to remedy these abuses, which he had seen and deeply regretted. His proposition was that the International Park should be established, including a suitable space on each side of the river from which all the annoyances and vexations referred to should be excluded. Contemplating this subject for many years, I returned it without approval, Space, of course, is inadequate to discuss the faults of this measure here. A few of them were stated in the veto Message of last year. As I should regard the enactment of this bill a great misfortune to the whole State, I recommend that you refuse to pass it, and also that you repeal the 13 chapters already upon the statute book. The objection to them is deeper than any technical criticism, and I firmly believe that any partial and imperfect system which these bills represent be continued and completed, the result will be disastrous to our law and ruinous to litigants.

LEGISLATIVE APPORTIONMENT.

I regret that it is necessary for the fourth time to remind the Legislature that an enumeration of the inhabitants of the State was made in 1875, and that the Constitution therein provides that the Legislature at the first session after such enumeration to reapportion the Senatorial and Assembly districts so that each shall contain, as nearly as may be, an equal number of inhabitants, excluding aliens. The requirement shall be done in the most just and explicit than that it should be just and equal when it is done. To make an unjust and unequal apportionment for the accomplishment of some other purpose than that intended by the Constitution is, of course, a very great and difficult labor. It requires expert skill in wrong-doing. But to make a fair and equal apportionment calls for nothing more than common sense, an accurate knowledge of the first rules of arithmetic, and an honest disposition to do right. Yet in each year since the census was taken, the Legislature has met, gone through its session, and adjourned without making any apportionment whatever. These facts require no comment, and I make none, except to repeat the remark made in my last Message referring to this subject: "Certainly we cannot expect that the people will long continue to observe the ordinary requirements and requirements of statute law, if their representatives who make that law utterly disregard and defy the especial mandates of the Constitution they have solemnly sworn to support."

INSURANCE AND SAVINGS BANKS.

In a State with such immense commercial, manufacturing, and shipping interests as this, the subject of fire, life, and marine insurance is of very great importance. Its magnitude led to the conclusion that the Legislature should take charge of it. For the purpose of subjecting great corporations to the control of the Government, a bill was originally proposed. But for the Legislature to undertake to administer the business in all its minute details was a step of more than doubtful expediency. All experience has shown that every legitimate branch of business is most successfully conducted when left to the management of those who understand it, with their hands as free from, and untrammeled by, legislative interference as practicable. The assumption that intelligent business men do not know enough to manage their own affairs, and that the Legislature should undertake the task for them, is both erroneous and mischievous. Influenced by this unsound idea, the Legislature 20 years ago established the Insurance Department. The ostensible purpose of this establishment was to protect the public, the assured and stockholders in the insurance companies. While it confined itself strictly to the accomplishment of that object, it did comparatively little harm and no good. Its whole history shows that the community would have fared much better without it than with it. People who wish to insure their property or their lives, if left to exercise their own discretion in the matter, neglect no inquiry as to the solvency of companies in which to insure, than they will if they rely upon the discretion given them by an agent of the State. The intermeddling of a State official is almost invariably mischievous in its operation and results. I am informed that within the last seven years 30 life insurance companies have failed, involving a loss to citizens of this State of $36,927,000. This shows how little protection the department gives. I am therefore of opinion that the wisest legislation in regard to the Insurance Department would be to abolish it, and to return its few necessary powers to the Controller, and its clerks to the duties from which they were first. It really differs from the other bills referred to only in degree, no additions should be made to this mass of confusion. There is now pending in the courts an action involving the constitutionality of the statute establishing the Board of Estimate and Apportionment. I understand that the question will soon be brought before the Court of last resort, and I trust the great important public interests involved in it will lead to its early and thorough consideration and final decision.

HARBOR-MASTERS AND PORT-WARDENS.

In the interest of commerce I renew the suggestion in the last annual Message, that the offices of Harbor-masters and Port-wardens should be abolished and their duties devolved upon the Police. A few policemen specially charged with these duties would be sufficient, and would relieve the commerce of the port from the heavy expense now imposed for the services of a large array of Harbor-masters and Port-wardens.

COMMISSIONERS OF EMIGRATION.

I learn from the Commissioners of Emigration that the number of emigrants arriving at the port of New-York from the 1st of January 1847, to the 24th of December last was 121,288. The Commissioners further refer to their needs, and also to the bill introduced at the last session of Congress, and now pending before that body, for relief from the effects of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in regard to the emigration laws of this State. The communication of the Commissioners will be transmitted to the Legislature for its information and for such action as may be deemed proper.

EXCISE LAWS.

Again, as in my last annual Message, I advise that you devote careful attention to the condition of our excise laws. No branch of our law needs to be so simple, concise, and intelligible as this, for the administration, especially in the City of New-York, is now marked by continual broils and entanglements. The law is transgressed as often from ignorance as from design. Punishment is often inflicted for its accidental than intentional violation. Continual appeals are made to the Executive to relieve the errors of its working. These errors are unworthy of a free and intelligent people. It is true that the subject of excise law presents a great social problem, but it is also true that a sensible and practical solution of it may be reached if its discussion be approached in an impartial and non-prejudiced way. I commend the whole matter to your reflection as one of the most important likely to be brought before you, and suggest that you substitute a clear, symmetric, and complete statute for the present laws on the subject.

RESUMPTION.

On the first day of the present year the Federal Treasury announced its readiness to pay the legal-tender notes on demand in coin. There is no reason to doubt its ability to meet all demands that will be made. This brings us back, practically, to the money of the Constitution, and relieves us from further suffering by reason of a currency of fluctuating value. On the same day a law of this State went into effect which provides that after the 1st of this month all taxes shall be collected in coin. All private contracts shall be enforced in coin. This restoration of our currency, to which we have been looking forward for many years, as an event over which the country will be wise to rejoice. Since the issue of the legal-tender notes, until now irredeemable, we have gone through first, the madness of a false prosperity, under the stimulus of a debased currency and then the inevitable depression and distress which was sure to follow. The distress is not yet at an end, but there are signs that the process of cure has been begun and will go steadily on. Economy in the expenditure of the people's money by their public agents, and frugality in private life, will, with the abundant production of our country, repair, by degrees, our recreant waste. The readjustment of labor rendered necessary by reversion in some directions to the most painful part of the financial process to which nature subjects us for our disregard of her laws; and this, unhappily, falls on a class of persons which had, originally, the least responsibility for the wrong-doing which has plainly existed, and of honest principis involved in our issue of irredeemable paper money. There is also great distress among many who, having earned a small amount of capital, deposited their savings in the purchase of homes, incurring debt for part of the cost at a time when property was at a false valuation. I sympathize with those who suffer from these causes, and would be glad if the sovereign power had means of immediate relief. Government action can supply any. Relief can be worked out only by patient industry and economy. The quack remedies that have recently been proposed are worse than useless; they would increase and prolong the trouble. Were I, in my present position, to give them any sanction, I should be guilty of a violation of duty equal to that of a physician who would prescribe deadly poison to one suffering with a slight confidence that, although improvement in our condition must be slow, we have entered upon a period of steadily-increasing prosperity. To avoid some inconveniences which it may be necessary to suffer, the State law above referred to is to make United States Treasury notes and national bank notes convertible into gold coin at par receivable in payment of tolls and taxes. I commend the subject to your attention.

UNEMPLOYED LABOR—REVIVAL OF BUSINESS.

The evils which have arisen from great numbers of laborers being thrown out of employment in consequence of the depression and disasters in most branches of business still continue, but I am happy to believe that they are, to some extent, diminishing. That a substantial revival of business has commenced, and is on a solid foundation, from which it can be no reasonable doubt. The great interest which in this country underlies and supports all others is agriculture. With our immense territory, embracing every variety of soil and climate, and producing, with proper cultivation, everything necessary for the support and comfort of the human family, there is no reason why we should not be entirely exempt from the pressure of those periods of disturbance and distress as have marked the last five years. But by the enormous inflation of the currency, the fictitious increase of prices, the overtrading and overspeculation in all branches of manufactures, mining, railroad building, and other enterprises, men were seduced from the more quiet occupation of agriculture into employments which, in their very nature, could not pass through such eras

The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for to-day in this region, rising barometer, diminishing north-west to south-west winds, slightly cooler, clear, or partly cloudy weather.

It appears possible that we shall have the long-sought opinion of Mr. TILDEN in regard to the cipher dispatches. That eminent lawyer, moved perhaps by the mingled amazement and contempt with which his first feeble and insufficient explanation was met, is said to have signified his willingness to appear before Mr. POTTER'S committee and make another attempt. We wish him better luck next time, but we may suggest to him in advance that he has made his task exceedingly difficult by the trifling and evasive manner in which he has once approached it. It is interesting to learn that Mr. B. F. BUTLER has received new light on the question of investigating private telegraphic dispatches. He cannot now see that any right exists to do such a thing. If he had thought of this some years ago, he might have saved the country one, at least, of the many scandals which he has brought upon it.

Mr. BECK is as furious in his wrath as one of the wild bullocks of his home State. He made a labored attack yesterday upon the course of Secretary SHERMAN, with reference to the reissue of legal-tender notes and his policy regarding silver. It was not to be expected that the resolution of the Secretary on the latter matter would escape censure from the extreme advocates of the Silver bill. It is true that Mr. SHERMAN has violated no law in giving creditors of the United States holding matured obligations their choice as to which of the neat assortment of our legal tenders they would have their money in; but he has done what is just as bad in Mr. BECK'S eyes; he has defeated the intention of the silver men in passing the law. A man of milder temper than the Kentucky Senator might reflect that this is not the fault of the Secretary so much as that of the law-makers, and might content himself with either trying to get the law amended, or with self-rebuke for his own deficiencies in the art of legislation. But neither humility nor common sense is Mr. BECK'S strong point.

That Mr. SHERMAN has retired the small notes and replaced them with large ones for the purpose of contracting the currency is a statement for which Mr. BECK may have proper ground; but we are ignorant of what it is. The process, such as it is, goes on indirectly under the operation of the Resumption act as follows: The notes which are presented for redemption, and some of which are, doubtless, small, are accumulated in the Treasury until required to meet the ordinary disbursements of the Government. Meanwhile large notes are exchanged for gold, taking the place of the gold certificates formerly issued. But there is no contraction of the currency and cannot be. In the one case, notes are replaced by gold, in the other, gold is replaced by notes. The currency outstanding remains the same to a dollar. It is, in fact, one of the main reasons why resumption of specie payments has made no disturbance, that, under the prudent policy of the Secretary, there is neither inflation nor contraction caused. The law of May 31, 1878, directing the reissue of the redeemed notes, was meant to produce inflation by the total sum redeemed. Happily, Mr. SHERMAN has been able to find no means of obeying that law, which, like the Silver law, is for the present a mere brutum fulmen.

Mr. OLCOTT, the State Controller, treats the question of transportation with more vigor of rhetoric than clearness of recommendation. He devotes considerable space to showing how much the canals have done toward bringing the products of the West to the seaboard and how much their aid is still needed to maintain the equality, to say nothing of the supremacy, of the State and its Metropolis in commerce. He expresses the opinion that if it were not for water transportation, the business of the State would be at the mercy of the railways, and he condemns in no measured terms the combination between the through lines. But Mr. OLCOTT does not give his views as to whether the canals should be made free or not; as to whether the principal one should be enlarged, and to what extent; or as to what should be done with those canals whose cost is far more than their earnings, and whose maintenance is in itself a heavy tax on the commerce which passes over the main canal. These points are really more practical and more important than some of the generalities on which Mr. OLCOTT expends some well-intended but misdirected eloquence.

By the Associated Press dispatches from Washington this morning, it will be seen that our Consul at Geneva reports a very successful result of the experiment of shipping American coal to that city. He writes, under date of the 17th ult., that the tests of this coal made at several Swiss foundries established the fact that iron made with it was superior in firmness and texture to that made with the coke ordinarily employed in Switzerland. The Consul adds that it was superior in durability also, but that can hardly have been determined as yet. If the statements of the Consul prove to be accurate, the fact reported by him is very important. The present condition of the anthracite coal trade renders an extension of demand most imperative, and it is very doubtful if it can be obtained from home sources, even under the most active revival of trade and industry that can reasonably be anticipated. Against the foreign demand is the high freight, which cannot readily be reduced so long as the current of traffic is outward, and which can only be overcome by some decided superiority in the quality of our coal. From this point of view, the report from Geneva is extremely interesting.

ESPARTERO, soldier and statesman, so long outlived his career that his death will recall to most men the fact that he was just now alive. Since the accesion of ALFONSO he has disappeared from Spanish affairs so completely that even persons conversant with European politics might have been excused if they had paused to ask whether he were not already dead. But the career of this remarkable man will long survive as a brilliant historical episode. No other Spanish subject has been so loaded with the honors and powers conferred upon him. Born in poverty, and of a plebeian family, he lived to be the savior of Madrid, Regent of the Kingdom, a Grandee of the first rank, and the wearer of orders and titles which were unusual even in haughty, ceremonious, and aristocratic Spain. Called from exile and retirement again and again, he seemed to be the only man who could bring order out of chaos and rule jealous nobility and restless commoners. After years filled with the most violent vicissitudes, his reappearances became less and less frequent, and he has died at last at a greatly advanced age, when the occasion for personal government in his native country is less pressing than it has ever been.

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

From the mass of verbiage under which Gov. ROBINSON has thought fit to hide the information which he had to convey to the Legislature the following facts may be picked out. The canal debt remains the only funded obligation of the State, and the net amount of that has been reduced to but little more than eight millions. The State tax of 2 9-10 mills for the current fiscal year, will yield about eight millions of dollars, and if the Legislature will only stop further expenditures on the new Capitol, and cut down the school tax applicable to academies and high schools, there is no reason why the rate for next year should not be greatly reduced. The Controller specifically recommends a rate of 2 17-50 mills for the next fiscal year. The Governor directs attention to the decreased cost of maintaining and managing the canals, and finds an additional subject of congratulation in the gradual approximation between the earnings and expenditures of the State Prisons. He pronounces the Utica and Willard Asylums for the Insane to be very ably and economically managed, makes a brief reference to the flagrant abuses prevalent in county jails and poor-houses, and recommends the conversion of the Inebriate Asylum at Binghamton into an Asylum for the insane. He believes that a new Capitol "far more becoming in exterior design and internal finish than the present one, and far superior to it in convenience," could be built for half the sum which will be necessary to complete the present building, and urges that, for the present, all further appropriations for the use of the Capitol Commissioners be stopped. To levy taxes for the support of a school system which gives anything more than the simple rudiments of education is, in the opinion of the Governor, nothing short of "legalized robbery," and an inquiry is recommended into the working of normal schools which, with two or three exceptions, are pronounced "wholly useless."

In dealing with the question of local debt and taxation, the Governor rises a little above the common-place level of the greater part of his Message. He makes a vigorous protest against the attempts of towns and counties which have loaded themselves with a bonded debt out of all proportion to their resources, to extricate themselves from their difficulties by any other method than the honest and straightforward one of fulfilling in perfect good faith the contract made with their creditors. Rigid retrenchment in local expenses, and judicious provision for sinking funds are, in the opinion of the Governor, the most needful preliminaries to the escape from debt of embarrassed towns and counties. He can evidently be trusted to oppose his veto to any attempt to saddle local indebtedness upon the State. In dealing with the necessity for reform in the administration of the affairs of this City, Gov. ROBINSON is somewhat vague in his recommendations. Rather more than enough has been heard from him already about the establishment of "a local legislature" being the panacea for all our Municipal ills. In 1877 the Governor vetoed certain bills calculated to decrease "the army of useless officials and the extravagant salaries paid to them," mainly because he considered Tammany Hall and the citizens of New-York convertible terms. Last year, he deprived the City of the benefit of similar bills on grounds which were, for the most part, frivolous, but which had all more or less reference to the "local legislature" theory. If the Governor is to continue to veto bills for the relief of New-York tax-payers until he is satisfied about the constitutionality of the law creating the Board of Apportionment, or until a charter is framed giving the City the kind of self-government which he thinks it ought to have, another session may pass without a single contribution either to the economy or efficiency of local administration. But in that case, all the Gubernatorial verbiage would not convince the people of New-York that the Governor's concern for their interests is anything more than the pretense of a rather narrow-minded partisan politician.

That is unquestionably the character in which the Governor appears in his comments on "the organized attempt of the Federal authorities to interfere with the suffrage of our citizens." It is refreshing to turn from twaddle of this kind to the very sound reflections on the failure of the State superintendency of insurance companies and savings banks, and to the vigorous common-sense which the Governor displays in dealing with the questions of resumption and of the gradual absorption of unemployed labor. His protest against fallacious expectations from the revival of business is no less timely than his reminder that "there is no magic by which debts can be paid without money, nor by which individuals and corporations hopelessly insolvent can be restored to credit and prosperity." Prolix and tedious as a whole, absurd in some parts, and evasive in others, as the Message is, it still manifests so honest a repugnance to all forms of waste, extravagance, and jobbery in State and local administration as to compel respect for the motives of the author, and to invite confidence in his ability to protect the people against the evils of hasty or corrupt legislation.

LIFE INSURANCE AT ALBANY.

Gov. ROBINSON has partially adopted the views of THE TIMES. He has come to the conclusion that the Insurance Department does more harm than good, and that the wisest plan would be to abolish it, "and to return its few necessary powers to the Controller's office, whence they were taken." He advises this step "believing that it will benefit the parties interested, and much redound to the credit of the State." The recommendation, considered by itself, is a wise one.

That the State should exercise a certain supervision over insurance, and hold its managers to a rigid responsibility for the administration of the great trusts confided to them, few will deny. The radical defect of the department at Albany, so far as its functions apply to life insurance, is, that it promises what the law does not compel it to perform. Professing to protect policy-holders, it really leaves them helpless. Undertaking to enlighten the public as to the condition of companies, and virtually to guarantee their solvency, it allows almost all forms of mismanagement to go on unchecked, interfering only when the wrong and suffering which it should avert has been experienced. The effect is to beguile the public into reliance upon it as a protective agency, and so to prevent the keen scrutiny of personal interest which would take place if it were understood that policy-holders and intending insurers must care for themselves.

Defects inherent in the department have been aggravated by bad methods of administration. Peculiar qualifications are required for the office of Superintendent, and its occupant should be as independent of the life companies as of political parties. He should have a thorough knowledge of life insurance, and a special aptitude for the varied duties devolving upon him. This standard of fitness has not been respected by either party. Looking at the Superintendency as it is to-day, we find it destitute of the proper qualifications and unworthy of the confidence that is essential to its usefulness. Partisan bargains were at the bottom of the appointment, and partisan influence sustains the appointee in spite of violations of law. The office now has no moral influence. It has not prevented fraud. It has not restrained mismanagement. It has not corrected notorious abuses. It has not in any case guarded effectually the interests of policy-holders. And it is the persistent, unscrupulous opponent of necessary reforms.

But the Governor's recommendation does not go far enough. Besides ridding the State of the sham of supervision, he should have urged such amendments of the law as are required to keep the companies in check, and to give the public the means of judging intelligently of their condition. The Message affirms the propriety of "subjecting great corporations to the control of just and general laws." Indeed, the proposed transfer of what is useful in the functions of the department to the Controller's office presupposes the existence of these laws. Unfortunately, however, the existing laws in relation to life insurance are defective. They do not provide for that full exhibit of a company's affairs which the public are entitled to demand. They do not invest the policy-holders with the controlling power which is theirs of right, or shield them from the wanton exercise of authority usurped by officials who should be their servants.

Let us suppose that "intelligent business men" who, as Gov. ROBINSON says truly, are quite capable of managing their own affairs, including life insurance, attempt to ascertain the condition of a company and the general nature of its management. In their search for information they are referred to the statement prepared by the company in conformity with law. Of course the object of the statement is to furnish the data which business men would naturally seek as the basis of their opinion. But the statement withholds important particulars and so "lumps" others that for the purposes of intelligent criticism it is worth little. Sometimes, in fact, it seems to have been constructed with special reference to the concealment of the details called for in all the parallel concerns of life. There is a fine show of figures. The prodigious total of assets startles the inquirer and leads him to think that life insurance must be a wonderful business. The thought is modified, however, by the discovery that the liabilities are also large; and he is very likely to conclude that more magnitude is not a safe criterion of a company's prosperity. He desires details in regard to the assets, and is amazed at the barrenness of the statement in this respect. It strikes him as an abuse of confidence.

The Governor's "intelligent business men" will look a little further. They understand the danger of "lumping" as applied to the current expenditures of business; and certain items in the company's statement astonish them. Here are "salaries, fees, and commissions" thrown together, with an enormous aggregate. What is the natural inquiry? It is for particulars under each of these heads. Whether the persons in question are holders of policies or are only thinking of becoming so, they want to know what the salaries amount to, what the fees are, and what rates of commission are paid. Experience tells them that there should be a great difference between the cost of acquiring new business and the cost of carrying on business previously acquired, and they suspect that the object of merging one item in the other is to hide extravagance and corruption. Suspicion is strengthened when they reach another large aggregate, purporting to cover dissimilar expenditures; and they begin to imagine that jobbery and waste are familiar characteristics of management. Another item suggests uneasiness as to their treatment should they ever be compelled to surrender their policies, for they find a studied avoidance of the facts required to enable them to estimate the company's fair-dealing toward its unfortunate or dissatisfied members.

Now, any "just and general law," of the kind which Gov. ROBINSON admits to be requisite, would not be thus obviously defective. The law as it stands allows the companies to so prepare their statements as to hide from the public view particulars by which their management may be tested. The consequence is that in the majority of cases the statement is unsatisfactory. It may not be so flagrantly delusive as certain statements which we see advertised in Philadelphia newspapers, but it fails to supply specific information with which no intelligent business man would dispense if asked to give his opinion of a company's merits. If the Legislature does its duty, then, it will amend the form of the statement, and will provide for minute compliance with its requirements by the companies. So much is called for in the interest of the public.

In the interest of policy-holders two other short enactments are required. Whatever be the result of the contest now going on between the officials of the Mutual Life and the policy-holders who resist their abuse of power, the contest itself reveals a remarkable state of affairs. Through the agencies at their command, the officials have obtained proxies to an extent that renders them practically irresponsible. The proxies have accumulated during years, and their possessors, thus intrenched, defy the policy-holders and assert their own unlimited authority in a manner at once offensive and dangerous. They assume power to do as they please with funds belonging to the whole body of policy-holders; they squander funds in buying new business and in vain attempts to manufacture an opinion favorable to their action; they undermine the foundations of the company's strength; they boast of the cruel injustice inflicted upon retiring policy-holders; they avow a determination to go on spending the policy-holders' money to overcome the influence of the policy-holders' remonstrances. Gov. ROBINSON cannot be ignorant of this contest, or of the peril to life insurance involved in the proceedings of the managers of the Mutual Life.

The Legislature alone can apply adequate remedies. It owes to policy-holders some legal guarantee of just treatment in the matter of surrendered policies. At present they are at the mercy of the companies, and avowals made in behalf of the Mutual Life show what that mercy sometimes is. The second remedy is a brief enactment annulling all proxies of an older date than sixty days, and requiring proxies hereafter granted to bear on their face the specific purpose for which they are given. To this measure there can be no honest objection. It is equitable and safe. It is, moreover, absolutely necessary if an end is to be put to the scandalous pretensions of which the Mutual Life management affords a striking illustration.

THE GENERAL AND THE WAR OFFICE.

It is probable that one leading point of attack on the Army bill in Congress will be a feature which has hitherto attracted comparatively little popular attention, partly because the amount of proposed change is not at once visible, and partly, also, because, even when pointed out, its importance may not at the first glance be fully appreciated. This feature is the contemplated addition to the powers of the commanding General. That the members of the Army Joint Committee, however, vividly realized the character of this change is clear from the very noteworthy fact that at least two-thirds of the speech made by Senator BURNSIDE, in introducing its report, was occupied with explaining this single topic, and it is further to be noted that the only interruption for inquiry during his remarkably compact and well-digested speech, was made upon this same point.

This amplification of the powers of the commanding General is attacked upon two grounds: first, its constitutionality; second, its wisdom or expediency. Under the former head, it is claimed that the bill undertakes to restrict the powers of the President in a way not contemplated by the Constitution; under the latter, that the bill confers upon the commanding General a dangerous degree of control over the departments now specially authorized to administer the affairs of the Army and to use the money annually appropriated by Congress. Some who do not go to the length of seeing absolute danger in this admitted increase of control, which, indeed, is far from being autocratic, yet condemn what they consider to be the taking away of the existing degree of independence in staff departments.

Speaking generally, it may be said that the real changes which the new bill effects in existing laws, so far as the power of the commanding General is increased, are concerned mainly with the appointment, assignment, and detail of officers, both in staff and line; the rendering of reports and the issue of orders; inspection and recruiting; the supervision of staff departments, arsenals, the Engineer Corps, the Ordnance Corps, and the Signal Service; the transfer of officers and of enlisted men in completing and conducting the proposed reorganization; the designation of the commanding General's substitute in office duties when he takes the field; and his recommendations for promotions. This array covers an exceedingly broad field, and it would be unsafe to declare that the language of the bill in some particulars, especially in the matter of appointments, promotions, and details, may not be modified to obviate legal objections; while, of course, the question of expediency is an open one with regard to all the proposed changes. It may, however, be said, in general, that the plain purpose of this part of the bill is to furnish the Army with an executive head—a head not fixed upon it in effigy every four years by the varying fortunes of politics, but virtually connected with its body and members, and a part of itself.

The subject is a large one to debate, even if only from its multiplicity of details. But one of the fundamental points to consider is, whether the proposed expansion of the commanding General's power is covered and balanced by safeguards. Now, one decisive safeguard is presented in the fact that by the Constitution, (Article II., Section 2,) "the President shall be Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States," and hence, whatever may be the routine duties imposed upon the General, they are held subject to that provision. More specifically still, the President can now by law remove the General from the command of the Army and put another officer in his place. Section 76 of the new bill merely reiterates existing law when it says:

"The General of the Army, or other General officer assigned by the President as commanding General, shall, under the direction and during the pleasure of the President, have command of the entire Army, line and staff."

Here, then, we find a complete safeguard against any dangerous exercise of power by the commanding General, as well as a warning held out against the temptation to thwart the general policy of the President and his War Secretary. Again, a considerable number of the proposed changes confer a joint authority on the Secretary of War and the commanding General, hitherto only expressed in terms as belonging to the former. This is true of the Subsistence Department, the Engineer Bureau, the Ordnance Department, and, in fact, most of the staff departments. But, on examination, it will be found that "the immediate direction and control" of all administrative bureau duties, and, in fact, of all matters not connected directly with military operations, remain, by section 79, with the Secretary, while the commanding General's orders extend only to those operations. It would be no compliment to these departments to say, as is sometimes said, that the new bill proposes to "put the civil authority under the military." They are military themselves, and hence for all military operations should be under military orders. But a still more comprehensive safeguard is given in section 75, which says:

"That the Secretary of War, under the direction of the President, shall exercise supervision and control over all branches of the military service, not only in those cases where his supervision and control are specially required by law, but in all cases embraced within the functions of the President as Commander-in-chief of the land forces; and such supervision and control may be exercised by the Secretary of War as circumstances may require, either directly or through the commanding General of the Army, and other officers of the Army, or through such agents as the Secretary may appoint in accordance with law."

The purpose of the changes already enumerated is, it is clear, to make a homogeneous military establishment out of what has been a heterogeneous one; to make the commanding General, whoever he may be, an executive head in the Army proper, so that he can use all the departments and all the military power to carry on military operations. For this reason he, no less than the Secretary, needs to have reports made to him from the departments, to have some control over their supplies and material of war, and over the assignment of officers, though subject to the supervision of the President and Secretary. It is almost a distinct question whether he should make the entire transfers of the officers and enlisted men under the reorganization scheme. Yet the power must be lodged somewhere, and to whom else could it more fittingly go? When we come to those very important provisions which declare that certain appointments, promotions, and details for staff duty shall be made by the President on the recommendation of the commanding General, we find a great arena for possible discussion. These provisions, by their terms, make such a recommendation a prerequisite to appointment. Undoubtedly this gives new power to the General—or, rather, it restricts the existing power which is exercised by the President. But the President may decline to make the appointment recommended to him, and require another, so that the General, also, has no final control in the matter. Of course, the purpose is to do away with appointments by the President as a favor, at the solicitation of friends, when the candidate is not in the line of promotion or of fitness.

THE KEY OF TAMMANY.

There is a large brick building on Fourteenth-street, not far from Irving-place, which is known as Tammany Hall. It is the sacred edifice of the Democracy of this City. Thither flock the faithful, on set occasions, to be instructed from the rostrum by such eminent persons as KELLY, CLINTON, SPINOLA, County Clerk GUMBLETON, and J. NELSON TAPPAN. Thither on election nights, throng enthusiastic Tammanyites to hear the returns read by their chiefs. And, on high days, the front of the building is decorated with Chinese lanterns, calico flags, and bunting, while the rank and file of the party in the street hurrah for "John Kellee," and cry, "Thrue for yez, bedad!" in their own seductive Greek, to everything that is said. The building is owned by the Tammany Society, legally known as the Columbian Order. This is a secret society, not unlike those of the Freemasons and Odd-fellows. The head man of the organization is "Grand Sachem." The governing council are "Sachems," pure and simple; and then there are "Wiskinskies," and nobody knows what not, besides. The society controls the building; the Sachems control the society; the Grand Sachem controls the Sachems, and the Grand Sachem holds the key.

One would not suppose that there was any peculiar sacredness about the brick building on Fourteenth-street. Nevertheless, whoever holds the key of that building holds the key of the Democratic Party of this City, of this State, and almost of this Republic. At least, this is the view which every loyal Tammanyite takes of the situation. There can be no lawful meeting of the Tammany Hall General Committee held in any place but Tammany Hall. The reader must not confound the committee with the society. The first is a central committee of a party; the second is a secret lodge, or society. The Tammany Hall Democracy claims to be the simon-pure Democratic organization of this City. All others are fraudulent and irregular. In 1870, for example, a meeting of the Tammany Hall General Committee was called to meet in Tammany Hall on a certain night. There was a quarrel in the party, and a majority of the Sachems were opposed to having any meeting. They accordingly drafted 800 policemen (for the policemen then belonged to Tammany) and stationed this force in and around the building. And there was no meeting in the hall. Therefore, the so-called simon-pure Democracy of New-York had an injunction served upon it, as it were, and was compelled to suspend business for the time. Ten Sachems barred it out into the street, and it was struck with a paralysis.

Such an occurrence as this moved Mr. HENRY L. CLINTON to say, in a public speech, that "the Tammany Democracy is governed, not by men elected to represent it in the General Committee, not by men who should take the foremost rank in its organization, but by a secret society, whose members are elected for life." And Mr. CLINTON explained that "the Tammany Society is a secret society, and it owns the building known as Tammany Hall. By this means it is enabled to say what particular committee shall meet in that building." Obviously, as we have said, the key of the Tammany Hall building is the key of the Tammany Democracy. We do not suppose that Mr. CLINTON has changed his mind on that subject, although he is now one of the holders of the key, instead of being one of those against whom the key was turned.

The Tammany Hall Democracy, which is controlled by the Tammany Society, which is controlled by the Sachems, who are controlled by the Grand Sachem, who holds the key of the hall, has, in times past, done its best to control the Democratic Party in the State and in the nation. During TWEED'S administration in the place now held by JOHN KELLY, a very extensive programme was developed. Having captured the City, the State was next to be assailed. The attempt was successful, and during JOHN T. HOFFMAN'S Gubernatorial term Tammany reigned supreme from Montauk Point to Niagara Falls. It was "on the cards" that HOFFMAN should be Tammany's next candidate for President of the United States, and Grand Sachem TWEED rubbed his hands with glee as he thought of his exchanging the small Treasury of New-York for the grand Treasury of the United States. The Napoleon of Tammany had a downfall, and the scheme was temporarily abandoned. JOHN KELLY has succeeded to the leadership which TWEED relinquished; and he is gradually rebuilding the rudely-shattered fabric. He holds the key of the old concern. He is laboriously extending the walls. KELLY is naturally encouraged. He has won his fight in the State Convention of the Democratic Party. And "the cabal," as Mr. HENRY L. CLINTON called it, which was organized to control the City, has reached out to control the State.

Just now, however, there is trouble near the key-hole. KELLY naturally desires to hold his grip on the key. The council of Sachems may vote to take it away from him. Therefore the Sachems must be looked to, and an importation of new members is KELLY'S mode of meeting the difficulty. A notice of a meeting at which members of the Tammany Society are to be elected must be duly advertised in the newspapers to make it a lawful meeting. KELLY craftily evaded the law of his own society by having the notice printed in an obscure and almost unknown newspaper. The meeting was held, 147 new members were elected, and Mr. KELLY went home and grimly slept with the sacred key under his pillow. The present, at least, was secure. The new members would vote for Sachems who would vote that KELLY should continue to keep the key. But certain other members of the Society, or Columbian Order, object to having their chairs stuffed like a ballot-box with "little jokers." They had no knowledge of the so-called election, and they demand an injunction against the qualifying of the illegally-chosen new members. If the 147 men are enjoined from admission to the Tammany Society, Mr. KELLY loses the key of Tammany Hall.

This is not the fight of one party against another. It is a fight to oust from his position of key-holder a man who has shown his conspicuous unfitness as janitor. When JOHN KELLY does not like a tenant of the sacred edifice to which he holds the key, he throws him out of the window, or kicks him down stairs. Disinterested observers have looked with pity upon the heaps of ejected tenants who weep over their bruises. This process of ejectment, possibly, has been kept up too long. There are more "outs" than "ins." Possibly, the janitor must give up the key.

THE ROTHSCHILDS, of Paris, have been victimized through what they had intended to be a shrewd business operation. A little more than two years ago they sent to the Government Mint at Bordeaux silver, in bars, to the value of 1,200,000 francs, and requested that it might be coined for them. Although uncoined silver was then selling at a considerable discount from its nominal worth as a circulating medium, and although the French Government had ceased coining silver on its own account, yet the laws regulating the Mint did not permit of a refusal to receive and stamp the metal. As a possible means of getting out of the difficulty, the ROTHSCHILDS were told that the pressure of work was so great that the coined money could not be delivered for two years; but, after making an estimate, which showed that they could afford to sacrifice the interest on their money for this period and still make a handsome profit, the bankers replied that they were willing to wait. The silver was turned over to the Superintendent of the Mint, who gave them a certificate of deposit, but when at the end of the stated time they called for their money they were told that it could not be delivered to them, for the silver bars had been stolen, silver-plated copper bars having been substituted for them. To the ROTHSCHILDS this was an unqualified loss, for the Government decrees expressly provide that it is not to be held responsible for bullion sent to its Mints by private persons who desire to have it coined, while in the case of the officials at the Mint it is merely a breach of trust, for which they cannot be held criminally accountable. The primary action on the part of the ROTHSCHILDS was largely colored by what is known as sharp practice, so that the sympathy felt for them will be in some degree mitigated; but the incident will have one result, that unless a change is made in the French laws regulating the coinage of bullion, very little metal owned by private individuals is likely to find its way into the Government Mints.

Young men and women who are at all sagacious will do well not to allow themselves to be drawn into that mild form of buffoonery called a mock marriage. We do not mean by this a ceremony in which one or the other of the two contracting parties is deceived as to its locality, but one in which a desire to momentarily entertain friends is the ruling motive. It is so easy to get married legally, and there are so many persons who possess all the legal requirements needed to declare a union valid, that the make-believe bride and groom can never be certain that they may not be in some way compromised by their perfectly innocent actions. Of course, there would be no difficulty in proving, if such evidence was necessary, an absence at the time being of all intention to consider the act a binding one; but then who wants to be summoned into court to explain the bearings of some seemingly harmless frolic? or have one's peace of mind disturbed by all manner of social forebodings? A case in point occurred a few days since in a neighboring city. There was a church wedding, as large and fashionable as could be desired, but at the entrance—and only one door of the church was allowed to be opened—was stationed a detective for the purpose of preventing the entrance of a certain undesired individual, while near the officiating clergyman was posted a lawyer armed with all the legal documents needed to show, if any one raised the question, that there was no good reason why the marriage should be stayed. The cause for all this preparation was due to the inconsiderateness of the young lady, who had a year or two before been married in sport to some one other than her present husband by a man who turned out to be a Judge or a Justice of the Peace, or some other authority, and in consequence of this fact her life had been made miserable by the assertions of the temporary bridegroom that he would not permit her to be married to any one else. As it turned out, no attempt at interference was made, and the precautions taken were, therefore, needless; but that they were even thought to be necessary indicates as amount of uneasiness which no one would care to lightly assume, and hence the very obvious moral is that the best way to avoid entanglements of this kind is to refuse to participate in any of these mock ceremonies.

History, private as well as public, is forever repeating itself. Mediæval mysteries and horrors are continually represented in contemporaneous chronicles. The trial, now going on, of Mrs. COBB at Norwich, Conn., suggests the wholesale poisonings of Mme. DE BRINVILLIERS, in the reign of LOUIS XIV. Her lover, WESLEY BISHOP, answers to SAINTE CROIX; and she administered deadly drugs to her husband very much as the Marchioness did to her inconvenient liege, giving him dose after dose before she succeeded in dispatching him. It remains to be seen whether BISHOP, like the handsome Frenchman, furnished antidotes to COBB to hinder himself from marrying the partner of his crimes. The Connecticut woman is believed to have given poisons to Mrs. BISHOP under pretense of giving her medicine, as the diabolical MARGUERITE gave hers to her father and to patients in the hospitals. There seems to be no more humanity in the Yankee than in the Gallic murderess, though those seem common-place and vulgar compared with these. The latter had innumerable graces of person and manner and many accomplishments; while the former are ordinary persons in humble life. But the contemporaneous seldom shows poetic. The background of time and distance is required for full pictorial effect. Two centuries and more lend a degree of romance and idealism to MARGUERITE DE BRINVILLIERS and SAINTE CROIX, of which the prosaic to-day is naturally incapable. Nevertheless, the plain New-Englanders had no other motive for crime than unlawful love, while the elegant Parisians had revenge and avarice besides. But, on the other hand, BISHOP has proved to be a very mean rascal. He has turned against the woman who bestowed herself on him, in order to avoid legal punishment. MARGUERITE'S lover, contemptible and mercenary as he was, had the good luck to die dramatically by the fumes of the poisons he was concocting in his secret laboratory. If the miserable BISHOP had swallowed some of the arsenic he had procured for others, when he was first arrested, he would have made a picturesque end at least. But there can never be anything picturesque, dramatic, or endurable in a man who shares a woman's sin, and then appears publicly as her accuser. This is a depth of infamy, to the credit of her sex be it said, to which woman almost never descends.

The generosity of wealthy Americans in giving, either before or after death, large sums of money in aid of educational institutions is so well known as to be looked upon beyond our borders as almost a national characteristic, but there is another custom, an irregular outgrowth of this liberality, which is less known and also less commendable. It has of late become a practice with the Trustees, overseers, or Directors of various institutions of learning, from the high school to the university, in selecting a President or Principal, to take into close consideration his skill as a beggar. The art of appealing successfully to the benevolent instincts of business men is one which some persons possess in a marked degree. They may combine with it high scholarship and rare executive ability, as is the case with two deservedly-popular instructors, namely, President ELIOT, of Harvard University, and President GILMAN, of Johns Hopkins University; but there is reason for believing that these gifts, natural and acquired, are not always found centred in the same person, and that a man may be an admirable teacher who is constitutionally incapable of exciting in the minds of wealthy men a sympathetic regard for the cause of learning. It is true that as our colleges and higher schools are now carried on, they must in a large measure depend for their success on outside help; but would it not be better to make the soliciting of assistance the work of the controlling board, rather than force that duty upon the Principal or his assistants? Furthermore, if the art of asking is thus brought into prominence, by being made a necessary qualification for the success in life of a teacher in the higher branches of learning, is it not probable that men of retiring dispositions will be driven into other professions, where at least they will be judged by their general worth, and not by one quality?

MR. ROBESON'S OFFICIAL CONDUCT.

TESTIMONY IN REGARD TO A CONTRACT FOR THE IRON-CLAD AMPHITRITE—CONFLICTING STATEMENTS BY AN ENGINEER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—Mr. John T. Ganse, of the Harlan-Hollingsworth Ship-building Company, of Wilmington, Del., was before the House Naval Committee this morning at the instance of ex-Secretary Robeson. His testimony was to the effect that the contract made with that company for the construction of the new iron-clad Amphitrite, in part from the old material of the condemned vessel of the same name, was to the advantage of the Government. By the terms of the contract the firm gave one pound of new iron for three pounds of scrap—a very advantageous arrangement for the Government, being far more than it would agree to now, and double what the material would have brought had the ship been sold at public sale. In the progress of the construction of the new ship there had been five contracts, the first two dependent mainly on the disposal of the old material, the last three made contingent upon an appropriation by Congress for the work. It was explicitly stated in these contracts that the Government should not be held responsible unless an appropriation was made by Congress.

Ex-Engineer Wood read a statement quoting records of the Bureau of Steam Engineering to show that Mr. King, ex-chief of the bureau, had recorded himself therein precisely to the contrary of what he had testified before the committee as to the condition of the war boilers, and the kind of boilers and machinery that should be used.

JAN 10 1879

ON THE VOYAGE TO MEXICO.

JOURNEYING TO SOUTHERN LATITUDES.

BALMY BREEZES IN MIDWINTER—A MISCELLANEOUS COMPANY OF TRAVELERS—OFF THE WHITE AND GREEN COAST OF FLORIDA.

From Our Special Correspondent.

OFF CAPE CANAVARAL, Fla., Tuesday, Dec. 31, 1878.

The Cuban and Mexican mail steamer City of Merida, of the Alexandre Line, sailed out of New-York Harbor last Saturday afternoon, pushing her way through cakes of floating ice, half hidden by the snow-flakes, her ten or a dozen cabin passengers shivering in thick coats and furs. On this Tuesday evening, the last evening of the year, your correspondent being one of the passengers, we are sitting in groups on the upper deck, in the soft moonlight, dressed in Summer clothes, spinning yarns and singing songs. The weather, is the weather of June. Could we see the shore, we would see green leaves and blushing roses. But we are too far out to sea for that. We have not seen land since the darkness shut Staten Island out from our sight on Saturday evening. At midnight on Sunday we caught a glimpse of the Hatteras light, (one of the brightest and best beacons to be seen anywhere in the world,) and this evening the Cape Canaveral light is in sight; and these are the only indications of shore that we have had. But the Captain promises us that to-morrow we will be sailing down the southern coast of Florida, within a mile and a half of the shore. We have been keeping from 30 to 50 miles out. "Cape Canavaral," as the Captain says, "is not near anywhere, but is about 100 miles south of St. Augustine." You have seen the bold traveler who has just returned from "Yurrup," and have heard him tell of what a stormy passage he had, and how "the Captain said it was the roughest voyage he had ever made, so you may know it was pretty bad." This gentleman is still abroad, scattering bad French throughout the land; but our trip can discount his little fiction. We have hardly seen a wave since we started. "Look out for Hatteras," everybody said. "Oh, you'll catch it going around Hatteras." "You'll wish yourself well ashore when you strike Hatteras." Hatteras is the worst-slandered place in the United States. When we passed the big, bright light the sea was as smooth as the North River. There was not nearly as much motion in it as there is at some places in the East River. As to sea-sickness, there has not been a thought of it aboard the boat, except in the case of a quiet little black-eyed boy, who has been at school in New-York for two years, and is on his way back to his home in Campeche. He was sick before we were out of New-York Bay, but he got over it long ago.

If ever a mixed lot of passengers went out of New-York in a steam-ship, it is this lot. We have one Englishman, one Frenchman, three Mexicans, three "Down Easters," the boy from Yucatan, and one New-Yorker in the saloon, your correspondent having the honor of being the only "first-class" passenger from New-York; and he begs to assure you that the dignity and honor of the American Metropolis shall be maintained at all hazards.

There is as much Spanish spoken aboard the boat as English, perhaps more. A puzzling little Spanish notice in each of the state-rooms gives warning of something or other, perhaps about being down in time for dinner. It is hard work to coax the passengers down from the hurricane deck, where they sit during the day under the welcome shade of canvas awnings. And speaking of meals, we have five of them a day—an arrangement much more satisfactory than the American plan of only three. On getting up in the morning, at any time after 6 o'clock, a boy brings us a cup of coffee and a plate of hard biscuits. This keeps the internal man in good condition until breakfast, at 9, a good solid meal. At 1 comes lunch, almost a dinner, starting off with soup, and including a rare lot of strange dishes, which digest quite as well as if they had not unpronounceable Spanish names. Dinner at 5, an excellent meal, with half the bills of fare printed in English, the other half in Spanish. Tea and biscuits, at 10 in the evening, and then bed, or sitting on the hurricane deck, in the moonlight. While we were in Northern waters, the smooking-room, forward, was crowded at night, but nobody has been in it since Monday, when we have been given a reception by the porpoises all the way down. The warm water makes them feel frisky, the old sailors say, and they follow the ship and make long jumps out of the water. They do not only come up high enough to show their backs and tails, as they often do near New-York, but make long leaps, sometimes 20 feet, or more, skimming over the water like flat stones. They have a curious habit of keeping ahead of the steamer's bow, for they are very fast swimmers. With one ahead for a leader, they swim often 10 or 15 abreast, keeping ahead of the ship for half an hour or more. The steerage passengers shoot at them with revolvers, and whenever one is hit, he drops out of sight like a shot.

The first picture in the gallery of passengers to be presented to your notice is the Englishman. He is now a resident of Pittsburg; and if there is any place in the world where he has not been, they forgot to put it down on the maps. He has stories of the Rhine and the Mediterranean and the Black Sea; and tales of shipwreck and narrow escape. On our first night out, when we were just going over the bar, the English passenger said to me:

"Do you want to learn something?"

"Certainly; why not? Knowledge, like a trip-hammer, is power."

"I see you are a young man," [sic!] said he, "and I will give you some good advice." And he went on, after taking me mysteriously to his state-room, to explain the uses of the life-preserver, and the quickest way of putting it on, and just the boat that the occupant of my state-room must get into, in case of any accident.

"I have had so many narrow escapes," said he, "in my many voyages, that I always keep prepared for accidents. To-day we are here, before to-morrow we may be in——"

Was he going to say heaven or Mexico? The dinner-bell interrupted him.

Next is our French passenger. Two weeks ago he was visiting in some little French town. He is a Parisian merchant, traveling for his health; was once a sailor-boy, and scrambles about the rigging like a cat. From the town in the South of France he returned to Paris, called for his wife and child, sailed for New-York hotels, and is to return in the next steamer. He is wild to see Niagara Falls, and will hurry back to see them as soon as possible. The hotel in which he left his wife, although a large one, was "out of the world" 10 years ago, and he thinks the New-York hotels are "verra bad indeed."

The three "Down Easters" are from Massachusetts, and some sacrilegious sailor has nicknamed them "the three Dromioe." When the United States is gladdened with their presance, Worcester claims them for her own. They are classical. When they are not discussing matters and things connected with Harvard College, they are quoting Homer. If Mr. Homer were aboard this ship, he would find three congenial spirits, fresh from Massachusetts. Very fresh. They are not quite sure yet whether they will stop in Havana or go on to Vera Cruz. They will have to make up their minds very soon. Of the three Mexicans, two are husband and wife, who have been traveling in Europe and the United States for the last year. The gentleman is a Lieutenant in the Mexican Navy, and son of the man who, for 18 years was Secretary of the Mexican Republic's Territory. For four of the 18 years his father received no salary, and the Congress voted him a grant of fine farming land, 60 miles long. The Lieutenant says that his father could not hesitate to give half of the tract to any one who would cultivate it properly. He travels with a cosy little nest of 13 trunks, and a baby, all of which go to show that they have civilization in Mexico. Speaking of the Mexican Navy, it is said that the Republic once had quite a squadron, but that while the ships were all at anchor in Vera Cruz harbor, a norther came along and stove them to pieces against the stone pier. The officers and men were all drowned, except one Midshipman, who was on shore without leave. Our Commodore now, who is on his way home, is a sphinx. He has not said 10 words since he came aboard: so the school he has been going to ought to be generally recommended. This completes the list of our characters, with the exception of Mr. Louis Jacobs, whose name and face are familiar in the vicinity of the Bull's Head Hotel. He is taking 10 fine horses to the City of Mexico, and spends most of his time in keeping them comfortable.

Since this letter was dated and the beginning of it was written, please to consider a decided change in our latitude, setting us down past the central and lower Florida coast, past the remarkable "Alligator" light, that distinguishes itself by showing five white flashes and a red one, past the Sombrero light, the last glimpse of Florida that we shall have, on the downward trip, the steamer well out in the Florida Straits, sailing through the warm waters of the Gulf Stream. Yesterday, we were sitting in the sun, on the hurricane deck, congratulating ourselves on the warmth, bathing in the sunshine. To-day, the canvas awnings are all up, and we have been glad to get under their shade. This evening there is not a breath of wind, and in the saloon it is chilling. It is August weather now, and no mistake. At 7 o'clock to-morrow morning, the Captain tells us, we will sail past the Morro Castle, and be in Havana. We are quite willing to take his word for it, for he kept faith with us to-day, in carrying us within a mile or so of the Florida shore.

From daylight this morning until nearly dark we have been looking over the starboard rail, over the intervening sea, looking into Florida. More than 100 miles of the white beach we have seen, backed by 100 miles of the deepest green forest of cedars and pines, with here and there a tall palm-tree towering high above its fellows. Every few miles, through openings in the shore, we could see the lagoons, bays and bordered with luxuriant tree and bush. There may have been flowers, but we were too far away to see them. Most of the light-houses down the Florida coast are built on iron rods, a mile or two out from the shore. Each of these hoisted the Stars and Stripes as we passed, and each received a passing salute from our powerful steam-whistle. It has often been said that it makes a man "feel good," when away from home, to see his country's flag suddenly thrown to the breeze. The undersigned is prepared to make solemn affidavit to the fact. The stripes look a great deal brighter, and the blue ground much more worthy to be fought for, when you see them away from home. At one of the light-houses, after raising the flag, the two keepers pulled out to us in a little boat to get some papers. One of them was a shining darky, and all the clothes he had on you could put in a corner of your eye. We threw them some papers, and they hurried back to excite themselves over last year's news.

We have had several shots at sharks to-day, but with no appreciable results. Not the little, New-York dog fish sharks, but regular old man-eaters, 12 to 15 feet long. While we were watching for them, on the upper deck, one of the Mexicans gave us a good story of the surgeon on a Spanish passenger-steamer, who depended entirely upon somebody-or-other's homeopathic specifics, which go by numbers. Number one cures certain diseases, number two certain others, and so on. Number 15 is a certain cure for cancer, corns, ingrowing nails, and seasickness. One of the doctor's passengers was sea-sick, and he went after the No. 15 for him. But, the No. 15 bottle was empty. So, with a happy smile upon his tawny countenance, he poured out half the quantity from No. 8, and half from No. 7. The 8 and the 7, of course, must make 15. The cream of the joke is, that the combination did the passenger just as much good as the original No. 15 would have done.

About four more days southward would cremate us. Happy new year. W. D.

AMUSEMENTS.

"MARTHA" AT BOOTH'S THEATRE.

The severe storm of the early part of last evening doubtless prevented many persons from attending Booth's Theatre to hear Flotow's ever-popular opera of "Martha." There was, nevertheless, a good-sized audience present, who were rewarded for their exertions in attending by a meritorious performance of this bright and sparkling work. The credit for the success of the evening was principally due, as it was the night before, to Miss Cary, whose acting and singing were entitled to the highest praise. Her Nancy is well known to the public, and calls for no further mention beyond the fact that it was in her best vein. She was spirited and piquant, and sang as perfectly as she always does. Miss Litta made her second appearance here in the heroine's part, and confirmed the impression she made on Tuesday. Her voice appeared to advantage in the concerted music, and is without doubt a flexible and pure soprano, which tells well even in fortissimo passages with the orchestra and chorus. In such an aria as the "Last Rose of Summer," in which she was encored, and repeated in English, she shows the lack of physical force and sufficient power of lungs to do herself full justice on the operatic stage. Considering the resources of her voice, she manages it with skill, but her artistic sense and training would doubtless suggest a different rendering if she had more breath at her command. The Lionel was Mr. Westberg, who has a light tenor voice of good quality and an agreeable stage presence. Mr. Gottschalk was a disappointing Plunket. The opera was given smoothly as a whole, and, owing to the efforts of Miss Cary, in a merry and vivacious way, and the performance fairly deserved the applause which several of the scenes received. To-night, the "ballo in Maschera" is announced, with Miss Kellogg, Signor Pantaleoni, and Signor Rosnati, his first appearance in this City.

THE ENGLISH GLEE CLUB.

Last night's concert at Chickering Hall of this admirable company was successful both in the number and musical character of the audience, and the excellent performance of a programme of merit. There were the usual number of glees and part songs interspersed with solos. Among the latter, the gem of the evening was Miss Beebe's two songs by Rubinstein—"The Dream" and "The Lark." These she sang with grace and artistic finish, and responded to an enthusiastic recall with Taubert's "Dame Nightingale." Mr. George Ellard did himself credit in Braham's well-known song, "The Anchor's Weigh'd," in which he was so effective as to receive a genuine encore. Miss Finch and Mr. Aiken were the other soloists, the former singing a song by Von Weber and the latter a song by Mr. Brandeis, whose name generally appears on the programmes of these entertainments. Of the glees, Calcott's exquisite "With sighs, sweet rose," was the most noticeable, and was given with rare skill. The audience were in the mood for the music, and expressed their appreciation in vigorous applause. The next concert of the series will be on the afternoon of Jan 22.

GENERAL MENTION.

Mr. Max Strakosch has arranged a concert for Sunday evening at Booth's Theatre, the proceeds of which, it is announced, will be devoted to defraying the expenses of the musical education of Miss Marie Tuck. Miss Maria Litta, Miss Nannie Hart, Signora Galimberti, Mr. Westberg, Mr. Gottschalk, and M. Remenyi are among the artists who have tendered their co-operation to Mr. Strakosch.

The programme which M. Adolph Neuendorff has arranged for the third public rehearsal of the Philharmonic Society of New-York will be interpreted this afternoon at the Academy of Music. Besides the orchestral forces at the disposal of M. Neuendorff, Mrs. Anna Granger Dow and Mr. Franz Remmel will give their services as soloists. The corresponding concert of the society is set down for to-morrow evening.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

The total loss by the fire at Nos. 347 and 349 West Baltimore-street Thursday night, as estimated by Fire Inspector Holloway, is $79,000. The individual losses are: Leonard Passano, $20,000; insured in the Liverpool and London and Globe, Commercial Union, of London; Lynchburg Fire, of Virginia; Equitable, of Nashville, and Mechanics' and Traders', of New-York, $3,000 each; and Scottish Commercial, $5,000; E. Dalrymple & Co., $18,000; insured in the Liverpool and London and Globe, Scotland Commercial, Imperial, of London, Firemen's and Peabody, of Baltimore; Hoffman, of New-York; Westchester, of New-York; Merchants', of Newark, Buffalo, German Citizens', of St. Louis; Farmers', of York, Penn., $2,500 each; Louis Ash & Son, $15,000; insured in the Liverpool and London and Globe for $1,000; Etna, Baltimore, of Baltimore, and Firemens', of Baltimore, $5,000 each. A fire occured at Emlenton, Penn., yesterday morning which destroyed property, including the Post Office and its entire contents, to the extent of $10,000. The losses were nearly all covered by insurance.

The extensive cigar-factory of N. Katzenbach at Terre Haute, Ind., was burned Wednesday. Loss, $7,000; insured for $4,000 in the Phœnix and Germania Companies.

A fire in the dry goods and grocery store of David S. Taylor, at Spring City, Penn., Thursday night, caused a loss of $10,000; fully insured.

DEATH OF DON ESPARTERO.

THE CAREER OF A PEASANT NOBLEMAN.

SPAIN'S EX-REGENT DIES AT VITTORIA—HIS ADVENTUROUS LIFE AS A SOLDIER AND STATESMAN — BORN A WHEELWRIGHT'S SON, HE IS RAISED TO THE REGENCY OF A KINGDOM.

The death is announced of Don Baldomero Espartero, ex-Regent, soldier, and statesman of Spain, and for nearly half a century a prominent figure in the military and political history of that country. Espartero's life was full of stirring incident and romance. His fortune was variable and capricious as that of his native land. Rising from the humble station of a wheelwright's son to the high rank of the Chief General of Spain, endowed with titles of nobility, and become a Grandee, in the days of his power this man made and unmade Ministries, and at last forced Queen Christine to renounce the Regency, and assumed it himself in her stead. From this height he fell to exile, branded as traitor by his foes. A second time placed at the head of affairs by the turn of political events, a second time he was forced to retire from public life. Through all the vicissitudes and experiences of a long career, as Grandee he still retained something of the rudeness and vulgarity of the peasant.

Born at Granatula, a city of La Mancha, in 1792, the youngest of a family of nine children, Espartero was destined by his parents for the Church, by nature for the Army. Scarcely had he entered upon his ecclesiastical studies when the event took place that developed his passion for a soldier's life, and decided his career. The French invasion of 1808 roused the spirit of every loyal Spaniard, and the Spanish students were in the front ranks of the volunteers. Espartero joined with ardor in the movements begun by his associates, and became a volunteer in the students' corps, which was known as the "Sacred Battallon," and served with mark in the various encounters with the invaders. When this brief service was concluded, young Espartero entered a military school, and was graduated at the age of 23, with the rank of Sub-lieutenant. Assigned at first to a regiment of infantry in garrison at Valladolid, after the retreat of the imperial troops he became attached to the army which was sent, under command of Gen. Morillo, to subdue the insurgent South American colonies. Espartero was promoted to a Captaincy at this time, and in the same year, 1815, rose to the rank of Major. His military talent gained him the position of Lieutenant-Colonel in 1817, and that of Colonel in 1822. Two years later, after the capitulation of Ayacucho, by which Spain abandoned her rule in South America, Espartero returned home in company with a number of men, such as Lopez, Narvaez, Maroto, Alaix, and Laserna, who were to be associated with him in a career he little foresaw at that time. He brought with him from Peru a considerable fortune, which he had won at play. Stationed at Logrono, with the rank of Brigadier, he presently fell in love with the daughter of a rich proprietor of that city, and married her in spite of the opposition of her father. He proceeded with his regiment soon afterward to the Island of Majorca.

In 1832, when Ferdinand VII. abolished the Salic law, Espartero declared himself in favor of the rights of succession to the throne which were conferred upon the Princess Isabella. In the following year, upon the death of King Ferdinand, Espartero was true to his declaration, and resolutely took the part of the young Queen. He offered to march with his regiment against the provinces of the north, which had uprisen in favor of Don Carlos, and during the struggles that followed was successively made commanding General, Field Marshal, and finally Lieutenant-General, thus solving a problem less easy of solution elsewhere, of being promoted so much the more rapidly as he was the more frequently defeated. In May, 1836, during the absence of Gen. Cordova, Espartero became for the time Commander-in-chief of the army assigned to the work of covering Madrid. This gave him the most glorious opportunity of his life thus far, and he improved the opportunity well. By successfully repulsing a daring and sudden attack made upon the capital by the Carlistt troops, Espartero won for himself the glory of having saved Madrid. As a token of gratitude for this he was appointed Generalissimo of the armies of the North, Viceroy of Navarre, and Captain-General of the Basque Provinces. In 1837 he was elected member of the Cortes, and aided in the overthrow of the Calatrava Ministry. In 1838 he met for the same year he saved Madrid for the second time, it being then threatened by Don Carlos in person. Gen. Espartero repulsed Don Carlos beyond the Ebro, drove him from the heights of Lucena, and raised the blockade of Bilbao. This series of engagements was brilliant and decisive, and in reward for his eminent services Espartero received the title of Count of Luena. The new Count signalized his occupation of the command in those regions by vigorous measures and numerous executions at Pampeluna, Miranda, and elsewhere. He also re-established thorough disipline in the Army, and maintained it by his severe rule. In 1838 he defeated the Carlist General, Negri, and dispersed the bands of insurgents which had been devastating the provinces under the leadership of that General.

The great services of Espartero, and his avowed attachment to the Constitution of 1837, marked out for him his political course. He threw upon the Ofalia' Ministry the responsibility of its inaction, and sent to the Queen addresses sealnat Narvaez and Cordova, who were his personal enemies. Through new victories over the Carlists, in 1839, he won increased favor and the titles of Grandee of Spain of the first rank and Duke of Victoria. Profiting by his divisions among the Liberals, Espartero finally concluded with Maroto the famous treaty of Bergara, which compelled Don Carlos to leave Spain, leaving only Cabrera to prolong the civil war.

During all these years of the Pretender, Espartero proved his power by demanding the brevet of General for his Aide-de-Camp, Linage, who had insulted the Minister of War in a public letter. Narvaez, who refused the demand, was constrained to resign, and Linage had his brevet. The other members of the Cabinet, desiring to strike a blow at Espartero, secured the passage of a law through the Cortes restraining the municipal liberties. This law, despite protests, was signed by the Queen Regent. An insurrection followed. Espartero, who had just crushed Cabrera, marched into Madrid in triumph, and was immediately made President of a new Ministry. Queen Christine, at this juncture, renounced the Regency, and by the vote of the Cortes, May 8, 1841, it was intrusted to the hands of Espartero.

To establish and maintain necessary order, the new Regent employed all his resources. He checked the republican movements immediately upon their outbreak; stifled the insurrection incited by O'Donnell at Pamplelina, in favor of Christine; exposed and convicted the military plots of Gens. Concha and Diego Leon, and had the plotters shot; quelled by a reign of terror the incessant troubles in the Basque Provinces, and, after the surrender of Barcelona, re-entered Madrid in triumph. Master of the situation at home, he relied upon the alliance with England for his foreign support, without troubling himself about the intrigues which the Queen was engaged in, with the aid of France. A new insurrection breaking out at Barcelona, in 1842, he resorted to a bombardment, and brought his enemies to terms. Espartero was made of stern stuff, and his measures were little tempered by mercy.

A reign of terror could not, however, be successfully maintained. The progressive party was forced to unite with the moderate partisans of Queen Christine in a decree of general amnesty. Finally a crisis was brought on: Espartero was accused of having made a disadvantageous commercial treaty with England, and uprisings against him occurred in one province after another. Barcelona, twice razed by Espartero in two years, lifted its head again, and became the seat of a Provisional Government, composed of Lopez, Caballero, and Serrano. Espartero was declared a traitor to his country, and stripped of all his titles and dignities. Serrano placed himself at the insurgents, marche upon Madrid, and entered the city without resistance. Abandoned by his troops, Espartero fled to England, where he was received with all the honors due to the head just lost. After five years of residence in London, in 1848 the decree depriving him of his titles was annulled, and he returned to Madrid. Soon, afterward, however, he withdrew to Logrono, and spent many years in absolute retirement. In 1854, Queen Isabella, unable to control the revolutionary spirit raging throughout her Kingdom, saw in Espartero the only man who could save the throne to her, and recalled him to the head of affairs. Thus, a second time she was placed under Espartero's protection, and found in him a reliable defender. He proceeded to Madrid, and formed a Cabinet, in which his old rival, O'Donnell, was Minister of War. From 1854 to 1856 Spain was torn with internal dissensions, the reflex of the divisions between these two Ministers. A financial crisis, constant political disputes, and religious agitations combined to place Spain in an intolerable situation. At last Espartero was forced to resign, in 1856, and O'Donnell formed a new Ministry. In the insurrection which ensued, Espartero remained inactive, and in 1857, resigning his position as Senator, withdrew entirely from public life, and apparently ceased to be interested in the politics of his country.

After the revolution of 1868, and the expulsion of Queen Isabella, Gen. Espartero gave in his adhesion to the Provisory Government, but took no active part in events. In May, 1869, during the discussion upon the adoption of a new form of government, a number of the Cortes proposed to proclaim Espartero King of Spain, but the proposition met with little favor. In February, 1875, Espartero gave to the new King, Alfonso XII., an adhesion not less warm and hearty than that he addressed in 1868 to the men who had dethroned and exiled Queen Isabella, Alfonso's mother. He died in retirement at the ripe age of 87 years, having fairly outlived his career.

AN ACCUSED BANKER DISCHARGED.

WILLIAMSPORT, Penn., Jan. 9.—Horace E. Taylor, banker, who failed some time ago, and was subsequently arrested, was to-day arraigned before the Criminal Court on the charge of embezzling $80,000. The defense claimed that the money on deposit ceased to be the property of the depositors and became the property of the defendant; and therefore he could not embezzle his own funds. The prosecution attempted to prove by depositors that they had placed money in his bank, when Judge Mayer ruled that under the act of Assembly of 1862 the evidence of depositors could not be admitted. The court then ordered a nolle prosequi, and Taylor was discharged.

EAST-BOUND FREIGHT RATES.

THE QUESTION OF POOLING UNDER CONSIDERATION BY THE TRUNK AND OTHER LINES OF RAILWAY.

Representatives of the trunk lines and of various of the Western railroads met in session at the Windsor Hotel yesterday, to consider the question of Western pools on east-bound freight. This meeting is an outcome of the one held at Chicago in December last. The matter of pooling the east-bound freights, so as to establish a uniform freight tariff from the West to Eastern ports, and to stop the reckless cutting that had been carried on, was discussed fully in Chicago, and it was decided that a pooling arrangement similar to that existing in the west-bound freight traffic was desirable. To obtain certain facilities not possessed at the time, the meeting in Chicago was adjourned, and a second meeting was arranged to occur in this City. Among the representatives present yesterday were John King, Jr., Vice-President of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; J. H. Rutter, General Traffic Manager of the New-York Central Railroad; A. J. Cassatt, Vice-President of the Pennsylvania Railroad; George R. Blanchard, of the New-York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad; H. P. Ledyard, General Manager of the Michigan Central Railroad; J. N. McCullough, General Manager of the Pennsylvania Railroad; James Smith, General Freight Agent of the Chicago, St. Louis and Alton Railroad; W. Broughton, of the Great Western Railway of Canada; Stewart, General Freight Agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and John Muir, General Manager of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad. Commissioner Fink occupied the chair.

Little progress was made, it is understood, toward the settlement of the details of the pooling scheme. One of the representatives said that there was a decided hitch in the discussion, and that no conclusion was reached at the time of adjournment. The only action of importance was the appointment of a committee to take testimony regarding the rights of various roads in the matter of allotments. The roads agree as to the advantages of pooling, but the division of the earnings occasions the dispute. Some of the smaller roads are not satisfied with the percentage proposed to be given them, and the committee are to decide in these cases, visiting the headquarters of the companies for the purpose of reaching the facts upon which to base their decisions. The sessions will be continued this morning.

MME. ANDERSON'S GREAT TASK.

STILL TRUDGING ALONG THE TRACK IN BROOKLYN, ALTERNATELY FAST ASLEEP AND WIDE AWAKE.

Mme. Anderson, the female pedestrian, is still tramping bravely on in her weary rounds at Mozart Garden, Brooklyn, and at 6:52 P. M. yesterday had completed her two thousand three hundredth quarter, leaving but 400 more to be accomplished. To all appearances, with the exception of certain hours of the day, when she is almost entirely overcome with drowsiness, Mme. Anderson is as fresh as she was two weeks ago. The quickest time she made yesterday was at 4:15 P. M., when she made a quarter-mile in 0:2:52½. Usually, her worst time is from 8 to 10 P. M., when she frequently walks lap after lap fast asleep, and entirely unable to guide herself. At 8 o'clock last night she was walking at the rate of about a quarter of a mile in five minutes, while at 9 o'clock it was absolutely painful to witness her struggles to keep awake, and it was as much as her escort could do to keep her walking at all. At the completion of the first lap she drank a bowl of beef tea and then started off at a lively pace, which she kept up for two laps, and then again slackened her gait, finishing the quarter-mile in 6:14¾.

The ex-pedestrian seemed anxiously for her reappearance at the expiration of the next quarter, and when, at 9:15 o'clock, she came out of her dressing-room, accompanied by her husband, and started around the track at a rate of speed that soon left her attendants far behind, everybody was astonished, and the cheers and applause which greeted her were almost deafening. Without slackening her pace, she completed a quarter of a mile in 2:54, and at 10 o'clock she was still walking at a little slower rate, having, apparently, recovered from her attack of drowsiness.

THE SEQUEL TO DISSIPATION.

A YOUNG FRENCHMAN SQUANDERS HIS MEANS AND THEN SHOOTS HIMSELF.

Marie Auge Vignes, a Frenchman, 30 years old, committed suicide in his rooms at No. 109 Bleecker-street, yesterday, by shooting himself in the right temple. Vignes had been in this country less than two months. His passport to America gave him leave of absence from his native country for one year, for the purpose of traveling to San Francisco by way of New-York, on a pleasure or speculative tour. He was evidently a well-bred and cultured man, and in personal appearance was strikingly handsome. He appears to have fallen into bad company in this City, and to have so squandered his money as to render himself bankrupt and obliged to seek employment to pay his board until he could hear from his friends. It appears he was so passionately fond of gambling that he could not resist the temptation to play as long as he had money, and it was in that one night records that his money had dwindled to $450, and while fired with the excitement of a game, he staked and lost the entire amount. The next day he wrote home, but being penniless, became melancholy at his fate. He sought employment, however, and secured work in the jewelry manufactory of M. Moussard, at No. 56 South Fifth-avenue, a week before he killed himself. The fact that he had obtained employment did not cure him of melancholy, which daily deepened.

Yesterday about noon he arose and dressed himself, and some time later approached a mirror, and placing a loaded seven-barreled revolver to his right temple, fired. He seems to have died instantly, and fell upon his back.

Mrs. Averringer, his landlady, who lives on the second floor, immediately under Vignes' room, heard the shot and the fall of the body, but for a long time could not summon sufficient courage to go to the room. When she went, finally, she at once raised an alarm, and the Police of the 7th Precinct were notified, and took charge of the room. Late in the afternoon Deputy Coroner Goldschmiedt ordered the removal of the body to the Morgue. Besides his clothing and a number of books, manuscripts, and miscellaneous papers nothing of value was found belonging to the deceased excepting the revolver with which he had destroyed himself and $1 19 in money. Among his papers was found a letter, dated last September, written to "My Dear Marie Auge," and signed "G. Manguin," relating to the advancement of money to Marie, who, it appears, was then about to start on his voyage. In it, the writer complained that he had not received anything from his uncle in 18 or 20 years, and spoke of the writer's necessity of economizing in every possible way. As Vignes had no friends nor relatives in this country, he will probably be buried in Potter's Field.

THE INDEPENDENT GERMANS.

The General Committee of the German-American Independent Citizens' Association for 1879 met last evening at Beethoven Hall to organize, and was called to order by Police Justice Ottenbourg. Mr. Oswald Ottendorfer made a brief speech, in which he congratulated the association upon the result of the last Municipal election, and for its share in the victory achieved. He hoped that the association would continue to work as zealously and with as much success in the cause of good government for this City as it had done hitherto. The following-named gentlemen were elected officers of the new committee: President, Marcus Ottenbourg; Vice-Presidents, Oswald Ottendorfer, Edward J. H. Tamsen, G. C. Roedel; Secretaries, Charles E. Wendt, C. H. Nahrbas. President Ottenbourg delivered an address, in which he explained the objects of the association and the part which it desired to play in politics. "If the recognition which the organization," he said, "was entitled to was slow or retarded, it was due to the fact that neither the tendencies nor the motives which had called it into life eight years ago are generally understood, and, therefore, not appreciated as they would be were it otherwise. Many persons believe that there is no need for a political organization composed of exclusively German-speaking citizens. Such an organization, however, was needed for the political education of Germans not sufficiently conversant with the English language." A platform of principles was adopted in favor of revenue reform, against centralization, in favor of placing railroad and telegraph companies under State control, in favor of civil service reform, separation of Municipal elections from State and national elections, selection of Judges for their character and capacity, a liberal provision for public schools, the establishment of statistical bureaus, and the encouragement and development of agriculture and settlement of the Western country.

A MISSING WOMAN.

Miss Carrie Wright, of Poughkeepsie, left her parents' home on Tuesday last for this City, and has not been seen or heard from since. Her mind is said to be slightly deranged.

NEW-MEXICO INDIANS KILLED.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The following information has been obtained from the Indian Office: In New-Mexico, on Sept. 10, a scouting party under Capt. Tupper killed 1 man and 11 women and children, and captured 13 women and children, of the Ojo Caliente band of Indians.

MORE TALES OF HORROR.

ADDITIONAL PROOF OF DEMOCRATIC CRIME—BLACK MEN KILLED BY WHOLESALE WITHOUT PROVOCATION—GOV. NICHOLLS MAKES AN ADMISSION FOR WHICH HE IS DENOUNCED BY THE DEMOCRATS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 9.—The Teller committee examined 15 witnesses to-day. Concerning Tensas Parish the evidence was confirmatory of yesterday's statements. It was shown that the story of Gov. Nicholls' agents, that the killing and shooting of blacks at Bass' lane, was occasioned by the negroes firing on a party of white Militia, had no foundation in fact, and that the assault was entirely unprovoked and preconcerted. It was proved that at Caledonia, in Caddo Praish, the blacks were attacked on election day, and that at least three were killed and three others wounded near the polls. It was also proved by several eye-witnesses, that two important witnesses of this massacre, while on their way, under the summons of the District Attorney, to testify before the Grand Jury, were taken from the steam-boat below Shreveport, and that they have not since been heard from. The Democrats, it is understood, admit that they have been hanged, but allege that they were arrested on a legal warrant; that in seized from the officers by irresponsible persons and lynched. It was shown that threats of coming violence, specifically directed against the colored leaders, were freely made before the massacre in Caddo occurred.

In Caddo a Republican ticket was run, but although there were 3,832 registered Republican voters, against 1,631 Democratic voters, the Democratic candidates were returned as elected. Gov. Nicholls' admission that the attack on Fairfax's house was utterly without justification, is denounced by the Democratic leaders to-day. The Governor admitted that the assault had a political object—"To influence the local campaign in the parish."

THE TESTIMONY IN DETAIL.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 9.—At the meeting of the Teller committee to-day William D. Rollins, of Tensas, testified that he is a Democrat, but was a candidate on the Independent ticket at the last election; he resides in the northern part of the parish; saw no outrages committed; saw a body of 15 armed men at the polls on election day under Handboro, a Deputy Sheriff, thinks intimidation frightened the negroes so much that they staid away from the polls, and that if the negroes had voted they would have had a majority of 1,000. At the close of the election he demanded a count of the votes at Poll No. 1, but it was refused, and a band of armed men took the box to St. Joseph.

J. D. McGill was recalled, and testified concerning the quarantine at St. Joseph. The negroes thought the quarantine was established to keep them from holding their convention, but the witness did not think this was the purpose.

J. R. Loscey, of Tensas, testified that he was one of the posse of Sheriff Register, summoned to disperse negroes from whom it was reported were massing at Boss' place for the purpose of attacking Waterproof; Register had about 40 armed men; on the way we heard that the negroes had assembled and that they had begun between them and our advance guard of two men; an order was then given to advance and fire; the firing was in the direction of where the negroes were supposed to be massed; the negroes were in their quarters, and when we fired one volley they dispersed; saw no firing by negroes, but understood they had fired before we advanced; two or three negroes were wounded; don't think any were killed; they were not fired at when they dispersed; only one volley was fired; the Boss place is four miles from Waterproof; the event occurred three or four days after the Fairfax affair; none of the negroes in posse were killed.

Frank Watson (colored) was the next witness. He lived eight miles from Waterproof, and was told by a Democratic friend that the place was getting too hot for him, and he better clear out; he ran away, leaving his partly-gathered crop to take care of itself; that day there were 50 or 60 armed men from Ouachita in Waterproof; saw them put a rope around Peter Kelly's neck; Kelly would not answer a question they had asked him; took to the woods, being told that the crowd wanted him; there were four negroes in the woods hiding; witness hid for nine days, and then went to Plaquemines; witness said, "I don't intend to go back, because I don't think it would be exactly safe; as I never did anything to be driven away for, I feel, now that I have testified against them, it would be worse than before."

Vernon Moore, Munroe Brown, John Blackman, and Henry Williams, all colored, testified that on the day of the election there was a riot in Caledonia, Caddo Parish. The riot began after the voting was over, and three negroes were killed. These witnesses were on the steam-boat Danube when a party of men boarded her at Whitehall and took off two negroes.

The witness also testified to the general intimidation of negroes in Caddo.

GOV. PILLSBURY'S MESSAGE.

NEED OF ECONOMY IN MINNESOTA—THE STATE'S GROWTH IN AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRIES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Jan. 9.—The annual Message of Gov. Pillsbury was delivered to the Legislature to-day. It reviews the progress of the state during the year at length. The condition of the Treasury, he says, shows the necessity for cautious appropriations, and the continued need of retrenchment and economy in legislation which have been repeatedly urged. He condemns the making of appropriations in advance of receipts from taxation. Statistics show the total number of farms in the State to be 60,816, covering a total tilled area of 3,429,164 acres. Nine years' progress in agricultural development may be seen by comparing these with similar returns for 1869, when the number of farms was 46,230, with 1,863,316 cultivated acres. The sales in land offices reach an aggregate of 2,344,246 acres, being more than double the total quantity disposed of in 1877, which, in its turn, far surpassed any prior year in the magnitude of land transactions. The number of miles added to the railroad system within the year 1878 was 375, making a total of 2,608 miles.

The Governor recommends a change of the term of State officers to correspond with the biennial sessions of the Legislature. Upon the bond question, he says the recent vote of the people of the State on the proposition to exchange internal improvement land for railroad bonds indicates that they are not prepared to make a settlement of this vexed question. "This I deeply regret," he says. "My convictions, as heretofore expressed upon this subject, have undergone no change, and I earnestly hope that in the near future the people of our State will take a different view of the matter." He recommends the Legislature to reduce the rate of legal interest. In view of the repeal of the National Banking law, he recommends the enactment of a law which shall provide alike for all creditors and strictly prohibit the preference of one creditor over another. Speaking of national matters, the Governor deprecates the exhibition of frauds and violence in the South, and says of finances: "The resumption of specie payments adds another to the proud achievements of a prosperous nation. It corrects, perhaps, the most fruitful of the radical disorders bequeathed us by the demon of civil war. In her dire struggle for life and health, the nation has never seen a more auspicious epoch than that with which she receives the greetings of the new year. There remains now but needful time and rest for restoration to the full measure of her normal strength."

ARREST OF A NEW-YORK SWINDLER.

IN CUSTODY FOR DEFRAUDING DRY GOODS MERCHANTS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 9.—David Levine, a dry goods dealer, was arrested here to-day by Detective Richard O'Connor, of the District Attorney's office, New-York, on an extradition warrant issued by Gov. Bishop at the request of the Governor of New-York. Lev

THURSDAY, Jan. 9—P. M.

Dullness again constituted the prominent characteristic on the Stock Exchange, and the market was purely a brokers' one. Investors evidently prefer to put their money in first-class Government and railroad bonds, from which they are sure of a return, rather than run the inevitable risks attendant upon dabbling in the fancy speculative shares, and in this respect doubtless exercise sound discretion. The great bulk of the dealings to-day was confined to comparatively few stocks, among them being the Grangers, Lake Shore, the coal shares, Michigan Central, Erie, and Pittsburg. Among the Granger stocks, North-western preferred recorded an advance of ⅞ ₱ cent on the day's transactions, while the common showed a slight decline. The St. Paul shares were firm. At intervals there was some pressure to sell Lake Shore, which declined ¼ ₱ cent, with closing sales at a recovery of only ⅛ ₱ cent. The coal stocks were dull and featureless. Michigan Central, notwithstanding the circulation of preposterous reports that the company would earn 10 ₱ cent. for the current year, made but a slight improvement, the closing transactions showing an advance of only ⅜ ₱ cent. for the day. The greatest advance was in Pittsburg, which rose 1½ ₱ cent. Illinois Central was more active than usual, and after advancing ¾ ₱ cent., fell off ¾ ₱ cent. It is officially stated that the net gain in the traffic of the company for the year 1878 will amount to over $400,000. The total net income for the year, including land collections, was over $3,000,000. The Directors are expected to meet in a few days and declare a dividend of 3 ₱ cent. Erie continues to be firmly held. The market closed quiet.

The transactions aggregated 126,447 shares, including 36,650 North-western, 15,650 Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, 13,900 St. Paul, 11,825 Lake Shore, 7,279 Michigan Central, 7,600 St. Louis, Kansas and Northern, 6,980 Erie, 6,025 Pittsburg, 5,250 Western Union, 3,280 Pacific Mail, and 2,650 Illinois Central.

North-western common advanced from 51¼ to 51⅞, and fell off to 51½, closing at 51¾. The preferred rose from 78⅜ to 79, and finally sold at 78⅞. St. Paul common rose from 35¼ to 37⅛, and the preferred from 76½ to 76¾. Delaware, Lackawanna and Western rose from 44 to 44¼, and declined to 43⅞. Lake Shore fell off from 67⅝ to 67, and closed at 67⅛. Michigan Central declined from 76¾ to 76⅜, and after rising to 77⅛, reacted to 77⅜. St. Louis, Kansas and Northern common rose from 7¼ to 7⅜, and the preferred from 27 to 28⅝, with a reaction in the latter toward the close of ⅜ ₱ cent. Erie sold alternately at 22½ and 22⅝. Pittsburg rose from 86 to 87½, and receded to 87¼. Western Union advanced from 95⅛ to 95⅝, and closed at 95⅜. Pacific Mail declined ⅝ ₱ cent., selling down to 67⅛. Illinois Central advanced 1 ₱ cent., to 82½, but subsequently reacted to 81⅞. New-York Central rose from 112⅜ to 113⅝, and closed at 113½. Rock Island sold at 119½, Chicago, Burlington and Quincy at 119½, and Chicago and Alton at 80@80¼.

The Money market worked easily and borrowers on call readily supplied their requirements at 3@3½ ₱ cent. There were some few transactions early in the day at 4 ₱ cent., but at the close there were abundant offerings at 2½ ₱ cent. Discounts remained unchanged. The following were the rates of exchange on New-York at the undermentioned cities to-day: Savannah, buying, ¼ to ⅜ discount; ¼ to ½ premium; Charleston, easy, none offering; New-Orleans, commercial, ¼@5-16, bank, ⅜; St. Louis, 50 premium, and Chicago, firm, buying, 1-10 discount, selling, 1-10 premium.

The foreign advices reported no change in the Bank of England discount rate, which remains 5 ₱ cent. In the open market, however, the rate of discount for three-months' bills has declined to 4 ₱ cent. The weekly statement of the bank shows an increase in specie of £560,000, the proportion of reserve to liabilities being 28⅛ ₱ cent., against 27 7-16 ₱ cent. last week. To-day the sum of £90,000 bullion went into the bank on balance. Consols were strong, especially for money, which advanced ¼ ₱ cent., to 95⅝@95¾, the same as the account. United States bonds were steady and unchanged, except for 1867s, which declined ⅛ ₱ cent., to 103¾. Illinois Central advanced from 83 to 84¾, and reacted to 84. Erie rose from 22⅜ to 23, and the preferred declined from 37¾ to 37½. New-Jersey Central fell off from 36 to 35½, and recovered to 35¼. At Paris, Rentes declined to 113f. 47½c. The weekly statement of the Bank of France shows an increase in specie of 19,750,000f.

The Sterling Exchange market was weak for cables and demand and rather steadier for 60-day bills. The nominal asking rate for demand was reduced by the leading drawers from $4 88 or $4 87½. Actual business was as follows: Sixty days, $4 82¼@$4 82¾; demand, $4 86¼@$4 86½; cables, $4 87@$4 87½, and commercial, $4 82¼@$4 82¾.

Government bonds were less active, but the market remained firm, and prices were well maintained. There was no change in 1867s, notwithstanding the decline of ⅛ ₱ cent. in the bonds at London. The business in railroad mortgages was even larger than on yesterday; the dealings footing up $1,364,000, of which $842,500 were in Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern Firsts. These bonds advanced in the early dealings to 71¾, but toward the close declined, under a heavy pressure to sell, to 70. The remainder of the list was strong, with a further advance of ½ to 1½ ₱ cent. in prices. The New-Jersey Central issues were active, and sold at 89¾@90¼ for adjustment 7s, 74½@75¼ for consolidated Firsts assented, and 74⅛@74¾ for convertibles assented. Lehigh and Wilkesbarre consolidated, assented, sold up to 42, and closed at 41½, against 40¾ yesterday. The Toledo and Wabash issues advanced sharply, Firsts, ex coupon, selling up to 110, Seconds to 70; do., ex coupon, to 64½; St. Louis Division, ex mortured coupon, to 95½, and consolidated convertibles to 67½. Great Western Firsts, ex coupon, rose to 108½; do., Seconds, ex coupon, to 83¾; Rock Island 6s to 109. Cincinnati and Springfield Firsts to 77, Missouri, Kansas and Texas consolidated assented to 51¼, and the consolidated Sinking Fund to 100, Chicago and Northwestern consolidated to 115, do. gold coupons to 103⅞, Hannibal and St. Joseph convertible to 103, Canada Southern Firsts to 78¾, Central Pacifics to 107, do. San Joaquin Branch to 97, Pacific of Missouri Firsts to 106½, Cleveland and Pittsburg consolidated Sinking Fund to 112¾, Fort Wayne Firsts to 120, Morris and Essex consolidated Firsts to 88½, and Delaware, Lackawanna and Western convertible to 100. New-York Elevated Firsts rose to 105½, and afterward declined to 105. Sales of Metropolitan Elevated Firsts were made at 97⅝@97¾. State bonds were quiet and without important change, except for Virginia 6s, among them $10,000 at 30¾, which rose to 30¾ bid and 31 asked, and Louisiana Consols, which declined to 64 bid and 64⅜ asked.

TWO DAYS ON A LIFE-RAFT.

HOW THE EMILY B. SOUDER WAS LOST.

ARRIVAL IN THIS CITY OF TWO OF THE SURVIVORS—THEIR STORY OF THE WRECK—THE EFFORTS WHICH WERE MADE TO SAVE THE VESSEL—LAUNCHING OF THE BOATS AND RAFTS.

Theodore Steinert, quartermaster, and O. A. Anderson, seaman, and, so far as at present known, the only survivors of the ill-fated steamer Emily B. Souder, which foundered at sea Dec. 10, when two days out from New-York, on her way to San Domingo, arrived in this City yesterday on the steamer Atlas, of the Atlas Line, from Kingston, Jamaica, whence they had been taken by the schooner Abbott Devereaux, of Boston, as heretofore published. The Atlas had no sooner touched her pier than the survivors were besieged by a crowd of the friends of the unfortunate passengers and crew of the lost steamer, among whom was a friend of the Captain, and also Sergt. Edmonson, of the Jersey City Police, the father of Julian Edmonson, aged 18 years, who was employed as pantryman on board the Emily B. Souder. To all the anxious inquiries of these persons Steinert and Anderson could give but slight hope that any of the other persons on board the steamer had been saved. To a TIMES reporter Steinert told the following story of the shipwreck:

"We left New-York Sunday, Dec. 8, with a full cargo, mostly of provisions, 10 passengers, and 28 officers and men. In addition to the cargo in the hold, we had a heavy deck-load of lumber, machinery, &c. The wind was blowing a light breeze from the west-south-west, and we went along without any difficulty until Monday night, when the wind freshened, and before morning it was blowing a gale. We were then about 300 miles from New-York. Early Tuesday morning the vessel sprung aleak, the gale increased in fury, the waves were running very high, and the ship rolled and pitched in a frightful manner. The machinery all worked well, the pumps were manned, and every effort made to keep the water down and the vessel afloat. It was of no use, however, the rotten old hulk was leaking at every seam, and between 9 and 10 o'clock A. M. it became evident that something else must be done, or the vessel would soon go to the bottom. Capt. Knebl ordered the deck-load thrown overboard, still the water gained, and between 2 and 3 o'clock in the afternoon the foremast was cut away. This not bringing the required relief all hands were ordered to work throwing the cargo out of the hold. After working at this for three hours, and the water still gaining, inch by inch, and foot by foot, it finally became a settled fact that the vessel could not last much longer, and preparations were made for the disastrous end. It was evident could not be long delayed. Finally the chief, engineer came forward and told the Captain that the water had reached the furnace-doors, and was rapidly gaining upon the pumps; that the doors and hatches were broken, the deck-houses gone, and that the waves were breaking over the vessel at every returning roll. At 3 o'clock the stern boat was cut out, and the two life-boats were lowered to the deck, and preparations made to save those on board. There were three boats and one life-raft. The first boat was put over-board, and placed in command of the chief engineer, two men to manage it. Eight passengers were placed in this boat, which upset before it got clear from the ship, and the last we saw of the boat she was floating, bottom up, with the persons on it clinging to it, and her clinging to her mast. I do not know who they were. Then the second boat was lowered, with 10 persons on board, and she got clear all right; and that was the last we saw of her or those who went into her. The boat also got away all safe, and the fate of her and her passengers I do not know. That left 10 persons on board the steamer—the Captain, chief engineer, second mate, Anderson, a passenger named Crosby, a German boy, a German passenger, whose name I do not know, and myself. The Captain, chief engineer, second mate, and Crosby went to work and made a raft out of the loose lumber lying about the deck, which they threw overboard, and then jumped in after it. That was the last I saw of them. Then there were six of us left. Anderson and the German passenger and myself went to work on the forward hatch, long for it to float off, as it was so heavy that we could not move it, and the two cooks and the boy were in the pilot-house. The vessel was half under water, going down stern foremost, and the waves were washing her from stem to stern. Finally a big wave came and washed off the forward hatch, and with it the three who were clinging to it. We clung to the hatch for about 10 or 15 minutes, when the life-raft, which had been washed overboard, came floating by, and Anderson and I left the hatch and got on the raft. The passenger who was with us was very much frightened, and would not jump for the raft, but went back to the hatch. Finally a big wave came along and separated the hatch from the raft, and that was the last we saw of the passenger or the hatch. Just then the vessel gave a lurch and disappeared, and I think the three persons in the pilot-house went down with her. We were on the raft about 48 hours when we were picked up by the schooner Abbott Devereaux and taken to Kingston. Our experiences on the raft were terrible. We were fortunate enough to pick up a box of oysters and a box of tripe, which were floating about, having been thrown overboard from the sinking steamer. These gave us plenty to eat, such as it was, and we had a keg of water, but of course we suffered considerably from thirst. Then the water was very rough, and the life-raft, for want of ballast, was thrown bottomside up every five minutes. As a consequence, we were in the water all the time in the water. I lost my hat and boots, and saved nothing except what I had on my back. The American Consul at Kingston gave us $10 apiece, and we worked our way to New-York on board the steamer Atlas."

Steinert is about 35 years of age, a native of Germany, and unmarried. He lives, when in port, at No. 85 Greenwich-street. He has been in the employ of Clapp & Eagle for the past seven years. Anderson is a native of Sweden, is about 25 years old, and also unmarried. His place of abode, when in this port, is Staten Island. Both men spoke very highly of Capt. Knebl, and said that he did everything in his power to save the ship and those on board. He maintained the strictest discipline during the trying hours while the vessel and those on board were in peril, and never for a moment lost control of himself or his men.

CAPT. BOGARDUS' GREAT FEAT.

Capt. Bogardus last evening completed his two days' task of glass-ball shooting in Gilmore's Garden, and accomplished the wonderful feat of breaking in that time 6,000 balls out of 6,013. His labors of the previous day were so trying that it was thought he could not stand the second day's work, but he came to the scratch promptly at 11 A. M., and shot with but few intermissions up to 9:30 P. M. Up to 7:30 he had not missed a ball, and had broken 5,680 successively, but the next one escaped him, and was followed quickly by several others. It was evident that he was thoroughly tired, and his friends persuaded him to take a short rest, but he soon resumed his gun and finished the score, with 13 misses to his debit. As he had wagered to break 6,000 balls in 6,100, he continued to shoot until he had broken 13 balls to replace his misses, and this he did without a break. A like feat was never before attempted, and the unerring aim, steady nerve, and wonderful powers of endurance of Capt. Bogardus shown in this match are marvelous. He was much exhausted at the close, and suffered from a sore shoulder, cramp in his left arm, and sore hands from cocking the gun and handling the hot barrels. The latter were never cleaned, or even wiped out, during the entire two days' shooting. At the close of the shooting Mr. Abe Kleinman, of Chicago, the champion wing shot of America, fired at 400 balls, on a wager, against the last 500 shot at by the Captain on each of his days' shooting. On Wednesday evening Mr. Kleinman missed six balls against the clean score of his opponent, and last night he had to miss seven to tie the Captain on his 13 misses. This he exactly did, and thus the match was declared a tie. In shooting the 400 balls last night Mr. Kleinman's shoulder was terribly cut by the recoil of the gun, and he declared that no amount of money would induce him to attempt to shoot at as many balls as the Captain had just done.

HORSE-WHIPPING AN EDITOR.

Jacob Horandt, a Swiss, foreman of the weaving department in Poigram & Meyer's silk mill, at Paterson, N. J., was arrested in that city yesterday afternoon and held to bail in the sum of $200 for assault and battery on Otto Stutzbach, editor of the Passaic County Journal, a German weekly newspaper published at Paterson, and started a year or two ago as a Greenback paper. Wednesday's issue of the Journal contained an article headed "By Their Fruits ye Shall know Them." In this article reference was made to a recent movement among the Paterson Germans for the relief of the families of the two Germans lately killed by the rendrock explosion at Preakness, and it was darkly hinted that a certain "boss" was taking too much credit to himself for having originated the movement, and it was said: "This person is not respected in the least by the Germans, and it is the public impression that his taking hold of the matter will greatly injure the cause of these unfortunate families." Mr. Horandt thought this reference was to him, and late on Wednesday night he went to the Journal office with his son Christopher, and the two visitors chatted coolly with the editor about the article. Suddenly, Jacob drew a heavy riding-whip, and before Stutzbach could save himself he had received three or four severe blows on the head with the butt end. When he collected himself he warded off several other blows, and the Horandts, threatening loudly, took their departure. The Grand Jury saw sitting will doubtless indict the assailants.

PRODUCE EXCHANGE MATTERS.

A letter was received yesterday by President Franklin Edson, of the Produce Exchange, asking him to call a meeting of the provision trade to consider the advisability of extending the limits of the "contract deliveries," "in view of the increased and commodious facilities afforded by the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company for the handling of property at the foot of Fifty-ninth-street, North River, where they have erected a large covered pier, convenient and accessible for cartage, lighterage, and other deliveries." The letter was signed by Messrs. Ward & Foster, Armour, Plankinton & Co., E. S. Jewell, E. O. Lamson, E. A. Harris, Samuel Colgate, Charles H. Smith, Stephen A. Post, V. W. Macfarlane & Co., David Dows & Co., E. A. Kent & Co.

SHALL TAXES FORM A FIRST LIEN?

A QUESTION OF MUCH INTEREST TO NEW-JERSEY MUNICIPAL AUTHORITIES.

A question of great interest to the municipal authorities of New-Jersey has been raised in some foreclosure proceedings on a mortgage, the taking of testimony regarding which is now going on before Mr. Douglass, of Jersey City, as Special Master in Chancery. The decision may also seriously affect the value of millions of dollars of mortgages held by insurance companies on property in New-Jersey. The plaintiff is the Globe Mutual Life Insurance Company, which is foreclosing several mortgages, in the aggregate amounting to upward of $200,000, given in February, 1873, by Archibald Warren and wife, of Elizabeth, on unimproved property at Riverside, in the north-eastern part of Paterson. Much of the property has since changed hands, and among the defendants are John J. Anderson, Frederick W. Gill, Hiram P. Crofut, John Hickman, Henry P. Ackerman, Michael Sweeney, James M. Sweeney, George Barton, James W. Chisholm, James Bell, Josephine Russell, and several others, who bought lots subject to the Warren mortgages. The Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Paterson are also made defendants, and herein is involved the principal issue of public interest. Taxes assessed on the property in the Summers of 1873, 1874, 1875, 1876, and 1877, are still due and unpaid, to the amount of $1,216, and for the arrears of 1873, 1874, and 1875 much of the property has been sold by the city and bought in. Hence, the city claims to have a lien on the property, and that this is a peremptory lien, that is, that the taxes are a lien taking precedence of all other liens, even of a first mortgage. The insurance company contends that as the taxes were levied after the execution of the mortgage, the mortgage has the precedence, and the taxes are not a peremptory lien, so that the property must be sold and the proceeds applied first to the satisfaction of the mortgages, and that the taxes can be paid only out of the balance, if there should be any.

In all the large cities of New-Jersey great tracts of land were bought in the suburbs in the flush times 10 years ago, and laid out into building lots, streets being graded at the expense of the city. Taxes and assessments have been piling up ever since, being as a rule unpaid on the unimproved property. The first speculators almost invariably gave mortgages to the owners of the farms thus metamorphosed into city lots, and in many cases borrowed heavily of insurance companies to prosecute their enterprises. The great bulk of the enormous total of arrears of taxes which the cities are trying vainly to collect, and in anticipation of the collection of which they have issued millions of dollars of bonds, are due from this unimproved, (that is, unbuilt upon,) suburban property. Now, if the Chancellor decides that the mortgages are a peremptory lien, having the precedence of the taxes subsequently assessed, it will work very serious injury to all the municipalities, for it does not appear that any of them, with, perhaps, two or three exceptions, contain provisions in their charters making taxes a peremptory lien. If, on the other hand, the taxes are declared a peremptory lien, the mortgagees must pay the arrears of taxes before they can realize on their mortgages.

Most of the insurance companies require their mortgagors to bind themselves to pay the taxes, under penalty of foreclosure; but if the taxes are only a second lien, this provision will be of little consequence to the mortgagees. The cities will doubtless apply to the Legislature, at its coming session, to enact that taxes shall be a peremptory lien, until paid, but the mortgagees will naturally oppose this, and a lively contest may be expected.

Ex-Senator H. A. Williams appears for the City of Paterson in the foreclosure suit referred to above.

DEATH OF A NEW-JERSEY RECLUSE.

AN OLD MAN FOUND DEAD IN HIS ROOM—SUSPICIOUS CIRCUMSTANCES IN CONNECTION THEREWITH.

The people of the village of Springfield, Union County, N. J., are excited over the death of Matthias Richards, better known among his neighbors as "Old Uncle Mat." The old man, who was 70 years of age at the time of his death, was well known about Springfield. He had never been married, and always led the life of a recluse. Several years ago he took up quarters in a rickety old house on what is known as the Camptown road. Rumor, who never hears of a recluse without ascribing miserly habits and wealth to him, asserted that "Uncle Mat" had laid by in some corner of his uninviting apartments a little store of gold, which he was jealously hoarding. Two or three months ago a stranger, like himself advanced in years, presented himself at his door, and asked for alms. His old age seems to have touched the heart of the old recluse, and the stranger was invited in. He remained, "Uncle Mat" allowing him the use of a room in another part of the building. The two old men did not consort together. As far as known, they never met, except in the hallways or on the street. Neither ever sought the room in which the other lived.

"Uncle Mat" had been in the habit of going to one of the village stores every day or two to purchase the scant supplies of nourishment on which he sustained himself. He was seen occasionally by the neighbors, making his way to the well or to the outbuildings on the premises. Within the last week he had not been seen in the village, nor could the neighbors recall any occasion within that period when he had been seen on his grounds, and the conviction that he had died everywith an accident or his death prevailed. The old man who shared with him the house in which he lived was seen meanwhile going in and out in a casual, listless way, with a perfect indifference. Mr. Lasak, nothing daunted, said that he had performed his duty in presenting the protest of gentlemen representing a majority of the association, and that the matter would be carried before the Central Committee for investigation. "I have," he said in conclusion, "presided at many meetings of this association, and succeeded in preserving order, but I had not to contend with a set of scallawags." An excited German moved that the speaker be put out, but though his motion was not seconded, Mr. Lasak was roundly hissed as he retired.

A "Committee on Patronage" was also appointed at the request of a gentleman desirous of serving the City in some lucrative position.

The regular party, having a roll of 207 members, met at Continental Hall, Eighth-avenue and Thirty-fourth-street, and waited for the return of its President, Henry G. Leask, who had gone to the Montgomery meeting to lodge his protest against the election of the officers. At 8:55 o'clock he returned, and Mr. Moses Goodkind, First Vice-President, having called the meeting to order, Mr. Leask made his report to the effect that he had received no satisfaction, and he therefore advised all members of the association who had not been allowed to vote at the primary election to make their affidavits to those facts, and the Secretary, Eugene D. Wheelock, would forward them, with the protest, to the General Committee for its action. James P. Robinson and Philip Backus, two intelligent men, said that they, too, had not received fair treatment from the other branch of the party, and they had not been allowed to vote. An adjournment was then taken until after the meeting of the Central Committee.

THE TAMMANY SOCIETY'S INJUNCTION.

Several additional affidavits substantiating the charges made against the officers of the Tammany Society by Messrs. Hubert O. Thompson and Edward H. Gurk, on whose application the injunction was granted, were served yesterday on Grand Sachem Schell. One by John Y. Savage sets forth that he has been a member of the Tammany Society for 20 years, that he has also been an officer in it; that he had not received any notice of the meeting complained of; that he endeavored to find out the circulation of the Mercantile Journal, the paper in which the meeting was advertised; and that he failed to ascertain anything in regard to it. An affidavit of Douglas Taylor is to the effect that he has been a member of the society during the past 25 years; that he formerly filled the office of 6th Sachem, and that it has always been the custom to advertise the meetings in two daily papers. A deposition by Casper C. Childs is to the effect that he was initiated a member 30 years ago; that he was at one time its Secretary and Treasurer, and that he also knows it to be the custom to advertise all meetings of the society in two papers. Mr. Nelson J. Waterbury deposes that he is well acquainted with the usages of the organization, and that never before in its history was a notification of its meetings confined to a weekly paper. He adds that the election of 147 members at one meeting is a very unusual thing; that that number is as many as is usually elected in two years, and that if properly conducted the election would have lasted many hours. A general affidavit of a somewhat similar tenor, signed by 14 persons, was also served. Mr. John D. Townsend and ex-Judge James O. Spencer, counsel for the respondents, were in consultation late yesterday afternoon at the office of the latter, preparing their case.

A LITTLE SCHEME THAT DIDN'T WORK.

Paul Smith is a young German, residing at No. 186 Ludlow-street, in which house live Mrs. Elizabeth Rebach and her daughter, who are employed at good wages by W. S. Kahnweiler & Son, of No. 61 Wooster-street. Smith, so it is alleged, became aware of this fact, and on Tuesday last sent a letter, written in a feminine hand and signed with Mrs. Rebach's name, to the firm, stating that her husband was dead and asking them to send her $10 out of her week's wages to pay funeral expenses. This epistle he delivered to the firm and obtained the money, at the same time writing Mrs. Rebach a postal card, purporting to come from her employers, stating that the store was to be closed for a few days owing to the death of one of the firm. Having thus apparently guarded against discovery, he once more, it is alleged, wrote a forged letter to the firm asking for more money for Mrs. Rebach, for which he said a gentleman would call yesterday. In the meantime, however, Mrs. Rebach called at the store to ascertain which of the firm had died, and for the first time discovered Smith's operations. The Police were notified, and yesterday when Smith called for the second installment of money he was arrested by a Police officer, and on being arraigned before Justice Wandell, at the Jefferson Market Police Court, he was committed in default of bail to answer for obtaining money by false pretenses.

THE NORTH SIDE ASSOCIATION.

DISCUSSING WESTCHESTER PROPERTY INTERESTS—SUGGESTIONS FOR IMPROVEMENTS.

The North Side Association met yesterday in the Athenæum, at the Morrisania Station, S. R. Filley presiding. The Rapid Transit Committee reported that the time was now favorable for the putting forth of efforts to secure the extension of rapid transit facilities beyond the Harlem River. A report was presented describing the progress made in the improvement of the Harlem River. The contractors were now estimating upon the bridge to be erected across the river from Madison-avenue, and progress was being made on the suspension bridge to be erected one-half mile above High Bridge. Gen. Newton had also made progress in the Government improvements. He had made out maps, plans, estimates for three routes from the Hudson to the Harlem River—at Spuyten Duyvel, Dikeman's Meadow, and Tubby Hook—favoring the selection of the two latter routes, rather than the first named, which would be circuitous and costly. The Local Improvement Committee also presented a report, in which it called especial attention to the need of proper drainage and sewerage in the annexed district. In reference to reform in street-opening, the report offered a proposition to group together in one proceeding all the streets which are necessary to be opened for drainage purposes, and to request the court to appoint three reputable citizens from the annexed district as Commissioners—gentlemen who will serve without pay, and who will conduct the entire work on business principles, and not with a view of making a "job" of it. The report of the Committee on Taxes and Assessments urged a revision of the present system of assessment to accord with the steady depression that has been taking place in real estate since the system was adopted. The reports of the various committees were all adopted, and after electing a committee to choose officers, to be nominated at the annual meeting, the association adjourned. Hon. Jordan L. Mott, speaking of the meagre amount allowed for improvements in the annexed district, assured them he would endeavor to provide more liberally for such improvements in the next year's estimates, in the discharge of his duties as a member of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment.

THE WILL OF TWEED'S PARTNER.

The trial of the contest of the will of the late Daniel Berrian, William M. Tweed's former partner in the brush-making business, was continued yesterday before Surrogate Calvin, after an adjournment of over six months. Berrian's will is dated June 6, 1877, and his death occurred in February, 1878. The contested will disposes of about $120,000, of which $10,000 is left to Mrs. Josephine H. Steel, of Staten Island; $10,000 to each of her two daughters, and the remainder to his heirs at law, Theodore and Daniel Berrian, Julia A. Kerrigan, Mary E. Wilks, and Cornelia B. Donnelly. The will is contested by the latter, who says it was not the last one of this deceased; that at the time he was out of sound mind or memory, or capable of making a will; and that the instrument was obtained by fraud practiced by Josephine H. Steel and others. Dr. Alexander De Mercy and Otto Fuchs, witnesses to the will, were briefly examined as to the mental condition of the deceased. They said that Berrian was a man who was addicted to liquor; that he talked wildly of unlikely speculations, and that he showed evidences of insanity at various times. The case is to be continued to-day at 11 A. M.

MEDICINE FOR DEMOCRATIC ILLS.

The following advertisement, which appeared in several of the newspapers yesterday morning, provoked some comment among politicians and others:

DEMOCRATS OF NEW-YORK CITY WHO DESIRE to select as well as elect their candidates, and who believe that they can manage their own business without interference from either Tammany or Irving Halls, and without bolting the Republican ticket, will please address P. M. J., Post Office Box No. 255, New-York.

Box No. 255 has been leased for the present year by E. Duncan Sniffen, who good-humoredly undertook to tell all he knew about this latest political movement to a TIMES reporter. He said a doctor, who has an interest in the sale of patent medicines, engaged him to insert the advertisement, which Mr. Sniffen looks at as a pure matter of business. He has allowed his own Post Office box to be used as a receptacle for the answers which he feels sure will come. Any answers, of course, which will be received will show that the spirit of discontent is rife. Then the medicine man supposedly believes he has the remedy for the ills affecting the Democracy of the county.

A WIDOW'S SHARE KEPT INTACT.

The late Augustus Cleveland, a wealthy resident of this City, was at Nice, France, in 1872, and while there made a second codicil to his will, giving his wife all the pictures and other objects of art in his house at Carmansville, and also the income of a fund of $60,000, specially set apart. At her death the principal sum was to be divided among several charitable institutions. After Mr. Cleveland's death the persons charged with the duty of executing the provisions of the will were somewhat confused in going about their work, being unable to determine whether the bequest of the income of the $60,000 fund took the place of a provision in the will giving Mrs. Cleveland a life interest in the whole estate, or was auxiliary to it. A suit was brought in the Supreme Court for a construction of the will, and the case was tried before Judge Van Vorst, who decided yesterday that the codicil does not interfere with Mrs. Cleveland's right to the whole income of the estate during her life.

BODIES WANTED FOR DISSECTION.

The Faculty of the United States Medical College have found great difficulty in obtaining subjects for demonstrations in anatomy and dissection. They applied recently to the Commissioners of Charities and Correction, asking that board to furnish the college with subjects from the Morgue or other public institutions on the same terms as other medical colleges are supplied, but the Commissioners refused to comply with the request. The college yesterday applied to Judge Barrett, at Supreme Court, Chambers, for an order to compel the Commissioners to furnish bodies to the institution. Assistant Corporation Counsel Dean opposed the motion in behalf of the Commissioners, urging that the college was not legally incorporated; that the petitioners should have been incorporated under the act of 1853 by the Regents of the University, and not under the general act of 1848. The court reserved its decision.

CONSISTENT DEMOCRATS.

A committee appointed by the Board of Supervisors made a report on Dec. 26 advising a reduction of $30,000 in county salaries. The report was taken up by the Supervisors in sections, the adoption of any part of it requiring the votes of a majority of the members of the board. The sections not defeated by Democratic votes cut down the salary of Gerard M. Stevens, Deputy Clerk of the Supreme Court, from $5,000 to $3,000 a year, and made a reduction of about $600 on the whole amount paid to the clerical force of the board. These two resolutions were yesterday vetoed by Supervisor at Large Guthrie, who has proved himself to be one of the most subservient henchmen of the Ring. The veto was based on the assumption that the Supervisors had no power under the law to make the reductions.

A CASE FOR A STRUCK JURY.

The case of Schneider against ex-Collector Barney, on a claim for alleged overcharge of duties on imported dress goods, which has been dragging along for over 12 years, will be tried before a struck jury at the next term of the United States Circuit Court. Included in a panel of 25 are the names of William H. Vanderbilt, Russell Sage, Sinclair Tousey, J. W. Harper, and B. E. Arnold. The case was tried in 1866 and resulted in a verdict for the Collector. A new trial was granted and the plaintiff received a verdict. The case was appealed to the United States Supreme Court, where the decision was reversed and the case ordered to be submitted to a struck jury, which is to determine whether or not Saxony dress goods and all woven dress goods not imported to this country prior to 1866 were similar to the delaine manufactured in the United States. The plaintiff claims that the Collector was wrong in his classification.

THE ITALIAN SCHOOL FESTIVAL.

The Christmas festival of the Italian school, last evening, was in every way a success. The band of the school played several selections, and the children did their share in entertaining the audience with songs, and elicited hearty applause in the chorus from the opera of the "Crusaders." The feature of the occasion, however, was the performance of Mr. Edward Remenyi, the violinist, who was assisted by Mr. Vogritech, the well-known pianist. The President, Rev. C. L. Brace, gave a brief history of the school, and called the attention of the audience to the industrial work exhibited in an adjoining room. Among the audience were L. Bailey, E. G. Fabbri, Count Marafoschi, Italian Vice-Consul; Rev. J. G. Ager, Rev. A. P. Rogers, Charles H. Coster, Prof. V. Botta, and Robert Jaffray, Jr.

BROOKLYN'S INDICTED OFFICERS.

Commissioners of City Works John W. Flaherty and George C. Bennett, with Water Purveyor Milne and Superintendent of Sewers Dady, of the same department, appeared in the Court of Oyer and Terminer, yesterday, before Judge Pratt, to plead to the indictments found against them on the 31st of last month. After some argument between counsel, Judge Pratt decided to give the defense until Monday next to prepare their pleas. Assistant District-Attorney Wyckoff announced that he would move for the trial of the accused on Wednesday, the 15th inst.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

There were 22 new cases of scarlet fever and 8 new cases of diphtheria reported at the Sanitary Bureau yesterday, and during the 24 hours ending at noon yesterday 8 deaths occurred from the first-named disease and 5 from diphtheria.

Harry Smith, known to the Police as a shoplifter, was arrested yesterday on a charge of stealing pictures of the value of $600 from Louis De Jonge & Co., of No. 71 Duane-street. He was taken to the Tombs Police Court and remanded until to-day.

John W. Irving, of Engine No. 29, who perished in the disastrous Vesey-street fire of Tuesday last, was buried yesterday in Green-Wood Cemetery. His funeral services, at the residence of ex-Assemblyman Irving, No. 302 East Twenty-first-street, attracted a large assemblage of mourners.

An English steam-ship, showing the letters "J K O N," was spoken in latitude 45° 45′ and longitude 29° 30′ on the 24th of December by the steamship Valmar, which arrived from Rosenvalen yesterday. One of her engines had broken down, and she was proceeding slowly to the eastward. Offers of assistance were declined.

The jury in the case of the Bank of the Metropolis against Frederick A. Conkling, tried in the Supreme Court before Judge Potter, rendered a verdict for the plaintiff for $2,177 16. The suit was brought to recover a judgment alleged guarantee of discounts in behalf of the Secor Sewing-machine Company, of which he was a Director.

The various charitable institutions continue to report many cases of destitution among the poor, which ought to appeal strongly to the charitable public for aid, pecuniarily and otherwise. The Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, and the Children's Aid Society, will gladly devote any subscriptions sent them to the purpose of relieving this wide-spread distress.

The Lincoln Club of the Seventh Assembly District has elected the following officers for the year 1879: President, Cornelius Van Cott; First Vice-President, C. Volney King; Second Vice-President, Dr. John J. Horn; Treasurer, James H. Stevens; Secretary, Alexander H. Reid; Trustees, William Morgan, William Terhune, Edward C. Graves; Sergeant-at-Arms, Daniel J. Kelley.

Among the passengers by the outgoing steamer City of New-York yesterday were six Italian boys, who, having been taken from the custody of padrones, were being sent back to their native places at the request and expense of the Italian Government. Their names are Stefano and Carmo Antonio Fosco, Francisco Cortes, Rafael Jeramo, Giacamo Breschi, and Michael Musso.

Assignments were filed in the County Clerk's office yesterday by the following persons: Josiah F. Fowle, of No. 57 Warren-street, a limited partnership, William A. Brown, Jr., being special partner, to John F. Folk; Jeanette Schiff to William Sherburne Fosdick, of No. 293 Broadway, and Thomas B. Fish & Robert H. Simpson, dealers in fire-arms and sportsman's goods, to William C. Southwick.

BROOKLYN.

Fifteen of the 2,400 members of Plymouth Church held an annual meeting last night for the election of three Trustees in place of J. B. Hutchinson, Henry and A. Storrs, whose terms of office expired yesterday. Fourteen votes were cast, of which all but one were for the three gentlemen named, all of whom were declared re-elected. The Treasurer's report showed that the receipts for the year had been $23,593 13, and the disbursements $45,014 84; leaving a balance in the treasury of $878 26. Henry Chapin, Jr., was elected Clerk, and R. W. Ropes and M. K. Moody, Auditors of Accounts, after which the meeting adjourned.

The special committee of the Board of Aldermen appointed to investigate the manner in which the business of the Board of City Works has been conducted since the appointment of Commissioners Flaherty and Bennett met last evening in the Common Council Chamber, and adopted a resolution calling on the Mayor to furnish the committee with all the evidence laid by him before the Grand Jury, and upon which Messrs. Flaherty and Bennett have been indicted. The committee also directed the Sergeant-at-Arms to summon a number of the men who, as alleged, contributed to the fund to which they were appointed by the indicted Commissioners. The committee will meet again on Wednesday evening next.

NEW-JERSEY.

John C. Rankin has been elected President of the Board of Education of Elizabeth.

Rev. W. W. McNair has been appointed Chaplain of the Essex County Prison to succeed the late Rev. Bartholomew Weed.

School Commissioner E. L. Dobbins, of the Ninth Ward, has been unanimously re-elected President of the Board of Education of Newark.

Hugh McKeevit, a printer, without home or money or friends, yesterday asked Justice Davis, in Jersey City, to commit him to jail. He was accommodated for 30 days as a vagrant.

John Mahan, the pugilist, was put under $1,000 bonds by Justice Davis, in Jersey City yesterday, to keep the peace. He had been arrested for creating a disturbance in a variety theatre on Grove-street.

In obedience to the order of the Passaic County Common Pleas, Justice Loftus yesterday produced all the papers he could find in the stitchdown case, which was given in THE TIMES yesterday. The court spent the day in hearing the case, and then adjourned it until Monday next.

The funeral services over the remains of Rev. Bartholomew Weed, of the Newark Annual Methodist Episcopal Conference, who died at his residence in Newark Sunday last of heart disease, were held yesterday at Central M. E. Church of that city. The services were conducted by Rev. Richard Vanhorne, the Presiding Elder, and Rev. W. V. Kelley, the Pastor of the church.

Officer Mallone, of the First Precinct, was badly beaten by a crowd of roughs on the northern end of Grove-street, Jersey City, yesterday afternoon. The boys were engaged in abusing and assaulting one another when the officer arrested one of them and started to take him to the station-house, when he was set upon by the crowd, knocked down, and severely beaten. While this was being done his prisoner escaped. Mallone drew his revolver, when his assailants fled. The officer's face and head were badly cut.

EXPENSIVE JERSEY CORONERS.

Five or six years ago the Coroners' system had become so expensive a luxury in Hudson County that legislation was had to correct it. Original jurisdiction in all cases of sudden and violent death was conferred upon a County Physician appointed by the County Board of Freeholders, and only in such cases as in his judgment required investigation, and only upon his precept, could the Coroners act. The intent of the act was that in cases in which the death was accidental or from natural causes, and in cases in which an inquest would not add in determining the cause of death, the County Physician should himself make the investigation and grant the certificate for the burial of the remains. The observance of the intent of the act has not been left to the few cases for expensive Coroners' inquests, and, it was hoped, result in large reduction in the expenditure of the county funds. During Dr. Buck's administration the assignment certain that direction was realized, but of late the County Physicians have granted precepts for inquests in every case in which it was possible to find grounds for inquest. Bodies of men taken from the rivers, of persons who had fallen dead from natural causes, and even of still-born infants are not buried nowadays without the formality of a costly Coroner's inquisition; and in most of the cases the County Physician, who had informed himself by his post-mortem examinations, has been the only witness to tell the jury what the cause of death had been. During last year Coroner Crane charged the county $5,745 49 for inquests; Bouen, $1,779 22, and Coroner Gannon, $3,537 95, making a total of $11,062 66. These figures have been presented to the tax-payers of the county, and a petition is in circulation asking further legislation, or the abolition of the office of County Physician.

ARRIVALS AT THE HOTELS.

John M. Forbes, of Boston, is at the Brevoort House.

Rev. Dr. Barclay, of Baltimore, is at the Metropolitan Hotel.

Gen. Tevfik, of the Turkish Army, is at the St. Denis Hotel.

Gen. George A. Sheridan, of Louisiana, is at the Fifth-Avenue Hotel.

Judge Pacificus Ord, of California, is at the New-York Hotel.

Dr. J. H. Kinsman, United States Army, is at the Park-Avenue Hotel.

Paymaster G. C. Goodloe, United States Marine Corps, is at the Sturtevant House.

Sir Edward Thornton, the British Minister, and Lady Thornton, were at the Clarendon Hotel yesterday, on the way to Canada.

Hon. James S. Pike, of Maine, and Lieut. S. E. Rodivnoff, of the Russian Navy, are at the Everett House.

Albert Keep, President of the Chicago and North-western Railway Company, and Louis D. Pilsbury, Superintendent of New-York State Prisons, are at the Windsor Hotel.

Hon. Josiah G. Abbott, of Boston, and Hon. C. L. M. Gwinn, of Baltimore, are at the Clarendon Hotel.

Gen. John C. Robinson and Judge E. C. Kattell, of Binghamton, are at the Coleman House.

A BRUTAL ASSAULT ON TWO LADIES.

John Barry, a resident on the Bergen Point Plank Road, Jersey City, was committed for trial yesterday by Justice Davis, on a charge of having assaulted Hannah O'Brien and Ann McAuliffe. The ladies whose names are given repaired to the house of a friend on Jersey City Heights, New Year's Day, to receive calls. Toward evening Barry reeled in, much under the influence of liquor. He offered one of the ladies an indignity, and when both remonstrated, he hauled off and knocked first one and then the other to the floor by a brutal blow in the face. Miss O'Brien quickly regained her feet, but before her companion could rise, Barry had kicked her with his heavy boots on the head and body. Miss McAuliffe has since been confined to her bed, and at one time her injuries were regarded as critical. Complaint was made against the assailant, and his arrest and arraignment followed.

OUR COUNTRY'S PERILS.

MR. JOSEPH COOK ON SOCIALISM—HOW HE WOULD AVERT THE EVILS OF CLASS OPPOSITION AND WHERE HE THINKS THE DANGER LIES.

Inclement as last evening was, it did not prevent the lecture of Mr. Joseph Cook on "Socialism," at Association Hall—the first of the secular series—from attracting a large audience. The prelude drew a parallel between the principle of unity in the ancient Roman Empire and that which binds modern States together. The lecture discussed the Socialistic and Communistic tendencies of the age, with special references to the social and political perils which must necessarily arise in this country as the development of wealth continues and conditions of society become more and more diversified. When a Bishop of Paris, in 1871, was brought into the presence of one of the boldest of the Communist leaders—one Rigeau—his salutation to the raging mob was, "Children, what is your business with me?" "You speak thus to your betters!" said Rigeau. "Who are you?" "The servant of God," answered the Bishop. "Send the man to prison," cried the Communist, "and issue an order of arrest for God." The order was issued, said Mr. Cook, but God has not yet been arrested, and until God is arrested, Communism and Socialism will never succeed in this world. Communism means what the abolition of inheritance, the abolition of the family, the abolition of property, the abolition of religion—the arrest of God. At the bottom of Socialism, of the German extreme type, lay substantially the same series of doctrines, although Socialism did not necessarily imply the abolition of inheritance, or the abrogation of the right of property. The German Socialists proposed to attain these ends by another route. The abolition of the family almost necessarily extinguished the right of inheritance and the doctrine of property rights, of which that right was an offshoot. The real question under all this was, whether God should, or should not, be arrested. The supreme powers were levelers, to be sure, but the question was whether they were levelers upward or levelers down. "Our country," said Mr. Cook, "with its democratic institutions, is incapable of being seriously affected by the social theories of the Old World, springing from conditions that are entirely absent here. But I beg first to raise the question in how far it is susceptible to the inroads of a certain kind of Socialistic ferment. This question, I shall remind you, is one of vast import to you all, and you will pardon me if I answer it by slow sequences. First, the United States will ultimately, and not by very distant date, become the wealthiest nation on the globe. Secondly, history has shown that great national wealth tends to the great inequality of individual wealth. Thirdly, therefore, it follows that the time must come when there will be great inequality of social conditions here, with the same equality of political rights that now prevails. Fourthly, in such a political organization as ours the question is sure to become a factor in politics. Fifthly, the massing of capital strengthens capital, while the massing of labor weakens labor. When capital masses it is strong; when labor masses it is weak, because of the competition for employment. I hear that 1,500,000 voters in the United States are members of secret societies, and you all know that the motive of the working men to-day is political power. You may call me an alarmist, but I see a profound danger in this, unless the means of safety are applied."

The means of safety against such tendencies lie, according to Mr. Cook, in taking precautions against the formation of certain classes—an ignorant class, an indigent class, an unemployed class, and an unprincipled class. The unprincipled class lies at the very bottom of the problem, because it is from such that demagogues are created, who work upon the discontent of the poor, the idleness of the unemployed, and the stupidity of the ignorant. The commercial wealth of England annually dazzles the eyes of economists, but, according to Mr. Gladstone, America is passing Great Britain at a canter. Mr. Gladstone has no disposition to quarrel with such a prospect, and regards Great Britain as having no more title to declaim against America for her advancing commercial supremacy than Venice had to declaim against Britain for the same reason. After expatiating upon the great physical resources of this country, Mr. Cook drew a picture of the time when our population will equal 200 to the square mile. What was the struggle between Cæsar and Pompey for supremacy in Rome to the struggle between some future Tilden and Hayes for the Presidency of the United States? It seemed absurd to look forward to the time when New-York would be as large as London; but that time was not very far off; and there would possibly be another London where now a little village at the Golden Gate stood trembling before the verbal gym

THE NEW ELECTORAL PLANS

DEMOCRATS OPPOSING ACTION AT THIS SESSION.

MR. THURMAN AND HIS FOLLOWERS ANXIOUS TO ENACT A PARTISAN MEASURE IN THE NEXT CONGRESS—SENATOR BAYARD'S PATRIOTIC POSITION—MR. EDMUNDS' BILL THE BEST THAT CAN BE SECURED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—At present the appearances are that the differences between the Senate and House on the bill to provide for counting the Electoral vote for President and Vice-President cannot be reconciled, and that a bill of this character will not be passed at this session. To-day Senator Bayard and Representative Southard had an extended conversation upon this subject, but it resulted in no plan for adjusting the differences.

Mr. Southard, it is believed, in opposing the Senate bill, merely represents Senator Thurman, who is opposed to any change in the present law. Mr. Thurman believes that it would be impolitic to make any change at this time, in view of the fact that the Democrats will be in a majority in both branches of Congress after March 4 next. This opposition to a change is based entirely upon partisan grounds.

Senator Bayard takes a different view of the matter. He recognizes what is plain to Senator Thurman and every intelligent man, and advocates a change because of the imperfections of existing laws upon this important subject. Senator Bayard, speaking of the matter to-day, said: "I regret that there should be such a difference of opinion between the House and Senate upon the Edmunds bill. I followed my conscience in advocating it, as affording us perhaps the best and the only thing we can secure. It does not give us quite what we want, but is a vast improvement over our present method of counting the Electoral votes. It destroys the power of the President of the Senate over the vote; it vests in each State the settlement of the question as to which are its legally-elected and qualified Electors, and, in case there are conflicting decisions, it provides that the two houses must concur to elect. I can't see any good grounds why there should be objection to this. The Edmunds bill, it seems to me, is better than the Southard bill, because it disposes of the Vice-President's power over the votes, which the latter leaves anything but settled; and, I think, too, that the Southard bill is weak in opening the door for Federal interference in the matter of deciding the qualifications of Electors. You will see by examining both bills that under the one presented by Mr. Edmunds the States are given the most unqualified and absolute control over the settlement of this question, and this safeguard is so thoroughly democratic that I am at a loss to understand why Democrats should oppose it. The Edmunds bill wants the House, in case of conflict, to concur to accept the returns, whereas the Southard bill requires that they shall concur to reject. I hardly see how these opposing ideas can be reconciled, and I can't see where the danger is to come from by adopting the Edmunds proposition, when the State tribunals are given such controlling power. I hardly take the argument that some of our people use, when they say 'let us wait until we get control of both Houses.' This does not seem to me wise or statesmanlike, when such vast interests are at stake, and, possibly, the peace of the country. And then they seem to lose sight of some very important facts. There is such a thing as a veto, and that we could not overcome. Now, if we drift along and pass no bill, it should be remembered that the present presiding officer of the Senate will have the handling of the next set of Presidential returns, and he might, possibly, under the present law, arrogate to himself the same dangerous power over the votes which the Edmunds bill effectually disposes of. The party in power, as a rule, always construes the law in contests to suit its own partisan ends, and probably always will, and I believe that a matter of this kind should be settled beyond the power of forced construction for party purposes. My position, briefly is that we can obtain reforms and protection under the Edmunds bill, and it would be wiser to accept it than leave the question unsettled to become the subject of controversy again. I would be willing to make many sacrifices before I would see the title to the Presidency decided by another Electoral Commission.

THE SUGAR TARIFF.

THE HEARING BEFORE THE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE CONCLUDED—AN EFFORT TO BE MADE TO PREPARE A BILL ON THE SUBJECT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The Committee on Ways and Means to-day concluded taking testimony in reference to the proposed changes in the tariff on sugars, and will meet to-morrow to consider the various propositions advanced by the importers and refiners during the past three days. The testimony taken shows that while the polariscope is not an absolutely trustworthy means of determining the saccharine strength of sugar, it is being adopted by all countries producing and importing that commodity as the nearest approach to accuracy. It is probable that the committee will agree to adopt the polariscope in any bill which may be reported, and that some changes will be made in the present rate of duties. Certain members of the committee seem to favor a proposition to provide that all sugars not above No. 10, Dutch standard, and testing by the polariscope 92° and over, shall pay the same duty as is chargeable on sugars above No. 10 Dutch standard, and not above No. 13 Dutch standard, namely, 2¼ cents per pound, and 25 per cent. additional. There is a disposition also to reduce the rate on sugars above No. 13, Dutch standard, ¼ cent per pound. The committee will make an effort to prepare a bill upon this subject, so that it may be reported to the House on Jan. 15, the day specially assigned to this committee for reporting bills.

A UNIFORM STANDARD OF VALUE.

MR. BUCKNER PROPOSES A SUBSTITUTE FOR MR. HEWITT'S BILL—THE BANKING AND CURRENCY COMMITTEE DIVIDED ON THE SILVER COINAGE CLAUSE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The Committee on Banking and Currency held a meeting to-day, but no action was taken on any of the measures before the committee. Mr. Buckner submitted a bill which he thinks of offering as a substitute for the bill of Mr. Hewitt, to secure a uniform standard of value. Mr. Hewitt's bill provides that the gold and silver coins which are a full legal tender, shall be interchangeable upon the demand of the holder, at the office of the United States Assistant Treasurer at New-York, in sums of $100 and upward, and makes it the duty of the Secretary to provide for such interchange and to cause to be coined such amounts of silver dollars as may be found necessary to meet the demand for such dollars. It also repeals all laws fixing or limiting the amount of silver dollars to be coined. The repealing clause of the bill is what recommends it to Messrs. Chittenden, Hardenbergh, and other advocates of hard money on the committee, and it is this clause that makes it objectionable to Mr. Buckner and other members of the committee who act with him. The advocates of sound money favor the bill because they believe that if the issue of silver dollars is confined to the public demand for those coins, the amount which will be coined and issued will be regulated by the demands of trade, and will cause no commercial inconvenience by reason of redundancy.

The substitute prepared by Mr. Buckner is substantially the same as Mr. Hewitt's bill, omitting the clause repealing that section of the Silver act of last session which requires a minimum coinage of $2,000,000 per month. The substitute was simply read for the information of the committee, and no formal action upon it was proposed. Mr. Chittenden expressed decided opposition to the substitute, and proposed, as a compromise, that if the committee would not agree to report the Hewitt bill, it should be reported with an amendment providing that the coinage of silver dollars shall continue as prescribed in the act until the amount of such dollars coined shall reach $50,000,000, when the coinage shall cease. This proposition seemed to be regarded favorably by some of the advocates of silver, and there are indications that it will receive the support of a majority of the committee. Messrs Hardenbergh, Hart, Chittenden, and Eames favor the Hewitt bill, and it is believed Mr. Yeates is disposed to give it support. Should Mr. Yeates vote for the bill, it would still leave it one the advocates of silver, and there are indications that it will receive the support of a majority of the committee. Messrs Hardenbergh, Hart, Chittenden, and Eames favor the Hewitt bill, and it is believed Mr. Yeates is disposed to give it support. Should Mr. Yeates vote for the bill, it would still leave it one the advocates of a majority, and there is no prospect that the additional vote required to report it the House can be obtained. There is reason to believe, however, that the necessary number of votes to report it to the House can be secured for the bill with the amendment proposed by Mr. Chittenden.

It is probable that Mr. Buckner will make an effort on Monday to pass, under a suspension of the rules, the substitute prepared by him for the Hewitt bill. Such an effort cannot succeed, but Mr. Buckner would by this method obtain an expression of opinion from the House, which is all he expects to accomplish. The next meeting of the committee will be held on Monday.

POTTER COMMITTEE TROUBLES.

AUTHORITY TO BE ASKED FOR AN INVESTIGATION OF THE CIPHER DISPATCHES—THE AFFIDAVIT OF AN ACKNOWLEDGED PERJURER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The Potter committee met to-day, and there being some doubt as to whether or not they have authority to go into an investigation of the cipher dispatches, the following preamble and resolution were adopted, and Mr. Potter was instructed to report them to the House:

Whereas, Alleged dispatches in cipher have been published, indicating that attempts were made, after the Presidential election of 1876, to influence, by money or other fraudulent methods, the votes of Electors or the action of returning officers in the States of Louisiana, Florida, South Carolina, and Oregon; therefore

Resolved, That the Chairman of the committee be directed to apply to the House for authority to investigate the same and any other matter connected with the said election in said States, and for the means of conducting the inquiry.

Mr. Potter did not have an opportunity to present the resolution to-day, but he will probably do so to-morrow.

One of the white elephants which the committee has on its hands is a person named St. Martin, of Donaldsonville, La., who appears to have been summoned at the request of the Republicans, but now who seems to find but little favor with either party. Mr. Cox, of the committee, has secured from St. Martin an affidavit to the effect that Dr. A. M. Gibson, the Washington correspondent of the New-York Sun, gave him $450 for perjuring himself before the Investigating Committee at New-Orleans; that he did the work required of him, and afterward returned the money. This affidavit the Republicans desire to place in evidence, but the Democrats insist that if this is done St. Martin shall at the same time be placed upon the stand. So the matter rests at present.

CONGRESSIONAL TOPICS.

A SOUTHERN WAR CLAIM DEFEATED—THE EFFECT OF THE PROPOSED REDUCTION OF THE TOBACCO TAX.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The bill for the relief of William and Mary College of Virginia, which was partially destroyed during the rebellion by Federal troops, was rejected to-day by the House after a spirited debate. This bill came over from the last session, and has been the occasion of considerable discussion, and has stood at the head of the private calendar for a long time, to the obstruction of other business. It was opposed by the Republicans upon the ground that its passage would establish a precedent for the granting of claims to numerous churches and claimants of like character, applying for relief in consequence of damages sustained during the rebellion. Messrs. Loring, of Massachusetts, and Monroe, of Ohio, advocated the bill, but were unable to divide the Republican vote, which, with four or five exceptions, was given solidly against the bill. A large number of Democrats also recorded their votes against it.

Gen. Raum, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, was before the Senate Finance Committee this morning, explaining the effect on the revenue of the proposed reduction of the tax on tobacco. He claimed, and enforced his claim with arguments, that the proposed reduction would cost the revenue $11,000,000 per annum—$2,000,000 on cigars and $9,000,000 on tobacco. He was cross-examined at some length by the friends of the reduction, but his argument was not in any way affected. The committee will meet again to-morrow morning and remain in session all day, or until the matter is finally disposed of. An adverse report will probably be the result, but the friends of the measure nevertheless claim strength enough in the Senate to pass it. The bill passed the House last session, and has been with the Senate committee ever since.

THE ROBESON INVESTIGATION.

MORE TESTIMONY FAVORABLE TO THE EX-SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Henry W. Gardner, Treasurer and Agent of the Providence Steam-engine Company, called by ex-Secretary Robeson, was examined by the House Committee on Naval Affairs to-day, in relation to the sale to him by the Navy Department of some $50,000 worth of old material in December, 1876, the amount to be credited on account of his contract for repairs on the Kearsarge. Witness stated that he paid the highest market rates at that time for the material. The amount realized by the Government was 50 per cent. more than could be realized for the same material now and double what it would have brought had it been sold at auction. In reply to further inquiries, Mr. Gardner stated that he had done work for the Navy Department to a large amount, from 1861 to the present time; had never known work for machinery done under advertisement for proposals; his contracts had always been made by correspondence; in his business intercourse with the department his dealings had invariably been with the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, and never with the Secretary; had no recollection of being present at the Boston Navy-yard when the material was condemned; was certainly not there in connection with the condemnation of the material, and did not know when it was condemned.

The committee adjourned until 10:30 A. M. to-morrow.

DEATH OF CONGRESSMAN SCHLEICHER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Shortly before 11 o'clock Representative Schleicher breathed his last. The greatest solicitude has been felt for this gentleman since the commencement of his rather brief illness, and his great personal popularity was made apparent by the numerous inquiries from all sides that have been made as to his condition. It has not been thought, either by his physicians or friends, since Wednesday, that the chances were favorable to his recovery, owing to the great complications of the disorders with which he has been afflicted. A meeting of the members of both houses of Congress from Texas, and other friends of the deceased, will be held immediately to take proper steps concerning the disposition of his remains. Mr. Schleicher was born at Darmstadt, Germany, Nov. 19, 1823, and was educated at the University of Giessen, in the Grand Duchy of Hesse-Darmstadt. He was engaged as a civil engineer in the construction of several European railroads; and emigrated to Texas in 1847. After passing some time on the frontier he settled down at San Antonio in 1850; and was a member of the State House of Representatives in 1853-4, and of the State Senate in 1860-61. He was elected to the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses, and re-elected to the Forty-sixth Congress as a Democrat. He leaves a wife and several children.

THE LATEST FOREIGN NEWS

ENGLAND'S ASIATIC VICTORIES.

GEN. ROBERTS' RECENT VICTORIES—RUMORS THAT KANDAHAR HAS BEEN ABANDONED BY THE AFGHANS—A STRONG FEELING AGAINST RUSSIA AND SHERE ALI.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—The Viceroy of India telegraphs confirming the news of Gen. Roberts' victory over the hostile tribes, but says that owing to rumors of threatened attacks by the Mongols, Gen. Roberts intends to return to Khurum, concentrating his forces, which are now much scattered. Friendly letters have been received from several Sirdars of Kabul. The general feeling in Afghanistan is very strong against the Ameer and Russia.

The enemy opposing Gen. Roberts in the fight of Tuesday numbered 6,000. The British loss was two killed and four wounded.

CALCUTTA, Jan. 10.—Major Sandeman reports that authentic intelligence has been received that Afzah Khan has disbanded his army and left Kandahar. Gen. Stewart was one day's march from Kandahar on the 8th of January. He expected no opposition.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The Standard's correspondent with the Quettah column, telegraphs from Sifoodin on Tuesday as follows: "One hundred and forty British cavalry yesterday defeated a body of Afghans, killing 24 and capturing 9. Twelve hundred Afghan cavalry were subsequently forced to abandon the heights by a cannonade. Seven of the British were wounded. It is thought this skirmish will cause the Afghans to decide not to defend Kandahar.

THE TURKISH SETTLEMENT.

OPPOSITION TO THE CESSION OF PODGORITZA BY THE ALBANIANS—RUSSIA AND THE EASTERN ROUMELIAN GOVERNMENT.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—Reuter's telegram from Constantinople says that matters relating to the cession of Podgoritza have been satisfactorily arranged; but, according to a Ragusa dispatch, the Albanian notables have declared their intention to oppose the cession by force.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 10.—The Minister of Finance threatens to resign unless the Council of Ministers immediately take measures for the relief of the financial difficulty.

PARIS, Jan. 10.—The papers here publish the following dispatch from Vienna: "The Porte has asked that the Eastern Roumelian Commission be prolonged three months. It is stated that Russia is not averse to this proposal, but declares that she will continue the administration of the province until its Constitution has been promulgated."

LONDON, Jan 11.—The Daily News states that Count Schouvaloff had an interview with Lord Salisbury yesterday and that the latter immediately afterward wrote to Lords Beaconsfield and Cranbrooke.

ENGLAND'S LABOR AND BUSINESS.

THE RAILWAY STRIKERS GRADUALLY RESUMING WORK—FAILURE OF A MALTSTER—THE COLLIERY TROUBLES.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—The Midland Railroad employes have offered to submit their case to arbitration. The company state that the guards at Sheffield have resumed work. The men admit that an average of six employes at each station have yielded.

It is rumored at Sheffield, that the coalmasters will withdraw their notices of reduction of wages.

The Secretary of the Kent-Sussex Laborers' Union writes that 900 laborers are still locked out, the farmers refusing to employ them unless they abandon the union.

The Midland Railway authorities state that 12 of the goods guards in London have resumed work, and that the remainder are deliberating whether to return to work or not.

J. D. Fairman, a prominent maltster of Bishops' Stortford, has failed, with liabilities of £100,000 to £150,000.

BURNSLEY, Jan. 10.—The coal miners are not in favor of submitting to the proposal of arbitration. They consider that the case does not admit of argument.

LEEDS, Jan. 10.—The miners at the Rock Collieries struck this morning against a 10 per cent. reduction of their wages.

THE REPUBLIC OF FRANCE.

THE MINISTERIAL PROGRAMME—THE BROGLIE-FOURTOU MINISTRY TO BE IMPEACHED—PROSPECTUS OF THE NEW CABLE COMPANY.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The report of the forthcoming programme of the French Ministry, which appeared in the Paris dispatch of the Times yesterday, is confirmed, with the addition that the Government proposes to grant individual pardons to all the Communists, except 400 ringleaders and participators in the massacres.

It is also announced that at a recent meeting of Delegates of the Left, M. Dufaure, President of the Ministry, favored intrusting the great military commands to Generals favorable to the Republic. He acknowledged that modifications in the magistracy were necessary, but objected to a wholesale change.

PARIS, Jan. 10.—The sub-committee on the acts of the Broglie-Fourtou Ministry (the Ministry of the 16th of May) have arrived at a decision in favor of impeachment.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—A telegram from Paris, published in London to-day, states that the new French Cable Company has been constituted. Its prospectus was issued yesterday. The telegram confirms the statement in the dispatch from Paris on the 27th of December last that the capital is 52,000,000 francs, and the number of shares 84,000. The company propose to lay two cables, one from Brest to Cape Cod, and the other from Land's End to Nova Scotia, both by the way of Saint Pierre.

CHURCH AND STATE IN GERMANY.

BERLIN, Jan. 10.—In the Lower House of the Landtag, to-day, debate was opened on the second reading of the estimates for public worship. The Ultramontane Deputy, Herr Windthorst, spoke at length on the conflict between the Church and State. He considered that the negotiations with the Vatican had failed, and added that the Emperor desires the people to continue in religion, but the forthcoming debates would show how his Majesty's words were interpreted by the Ministry of Public Worship.

Dr. Falk, Minister of Ecclesiastical Affairs, replied that at a later stage of the debate he would make this reproach the subject of serious consideration, carefully examining the sources of some of Herr Windthofst's complaints, with a view of finding a remedy wherever necessary. But relative to the great question of principle, there would be no modification of his recent declarations. The question of peace was in the hands of the Centre Party. The Government desired peace, which would be obtained if the Centre, trusting the Government, would obey, the State Let the Centre secure the welfare of the Church by promoting its external interests, instead of embittering the struggle within the Fatherland.

CURRENT TOPICS ABROAD.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—Dispatches from Scotland report great snow-storms and severe gales. Telegrams from Crookhaven, Ireland, state that a fearful storm has prevailed there since yesterday afternoon, increasing to a hurricane late last evening. Many vessels in the harbor dragged anchors during the afternoon and evening. The bark Great Surgeon, Capt. Arbecam, from Boston, Nov. 29, for London, which arrived at Crookhaven Jan. 4, nearly drifted ashore in the gale, but was towed into safe harbor.

Ice is flowing down the Thames in great quantities, and steam-boat traffic between Chelsea and Woolwich is entirely suspended. Many barges along the river are frozen in.

ROME, Jan. 10.—The encyclical letter of the Pope appeals to the Governments to restore to the Church the degree of liberty which would enable her to employ her influence efficaciously in favor of society. The Italie says the encyclical letter is the commencement of a crusade against modern institutions.

The Fanfulla's Berlin correspondent says Prince Bismarck and the Emperor William are favorably considering a project of inviting the European sovereigns to Berlin to consider concert common action against the Socialists.

PARIS, Jan. 10.—Gen. Grant arrived in Paris this evening.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 10.—The Director of the Ministry of the Interior states that the reports respecting the plague in Astrakhan are exaggerated.

HUGHENDEN, Jan. 10.—Lord Beaconsfield's attack of gout has almost passed away.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—A dispatch to the Post, from Berlin, says the negotiations relative to the prevention of collisions at sea have resulted in the compilation of a code of regulations, which has been approved by a majority of the powers interested, and which, it is expected, will be shortly embodied in an international convention.

Mr. McCarthy Downing, member of Parliament for the County of Cork, is dead.

The Times' Berlin correspondent telegraphs as follows: "Some persons believe that the bill giving the Reichstag power to punish its own members for improper utterances has been introduced so that its rejection may give Prince Bismarck excuse for a dissolution. The bill is exceedingly unpopular. A national liberal organ suggests that it would be better to establish a dictatorship at once. It is generally believed that the bill will be passed in a modified form."

THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEES.

NOTHING TRUSTWORTHY TO BE LEARNED ABOUT THEM—GEN. HUSTED NOT ASKING FOR PLACE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—There is nothing new in reference to the standing committees to be learned to-night. All the floating rumors about the make-up of the committees must be set down as simply gossip, having no other basis, as a general thing, than surmise or guess-work. Mr. Alvord declines, very properly, to make known his committees in advance, or to assign any name to a particular place on any committee. The statement that inadvertently crept into yesterday's dispatch that Mr. Husted had asked for the Chairmanship of the Insurance Committee, investigation shows to have been unfounded. Gen. Husted says he has not asked for this or any other position, and would not think of embarrassing the Speaker by preferring such a request.

ILLINOIS' SENATORIAL CONTEST.

A BITTER AND PERSONAL FIGHT BETWEEN LOGAN AND FARWELL.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 10.—The Legislature met at noon to-day. The Governor's Message was delivered. It speaks of the resumption of specie payments as one of the grandest achievements in the financial history of nations, and an evidence of wise policy and the enormous resources of the country. The total balance in the State Treasury is shown to be $1,991,080; the receipts for the past two years were $6,659,771, and the disbursements $6,538,628.

The Senatorial contest promises to be a spirited one. The Logan men are trying to force the fighting, and have called the caucus for next Tuesday night, against the wishes of the Oglesby and Farwell men, who demand more time. They desire to postpone it until one week from Monday, the day before the balloting in the Legislature. The Logan men, fearing a bolt, desire time to mend matters in case of a defection. If they insist on a caucus next Tuesday there will be trouble, and it is probable that there will not be a full attendance of Republicans in the caucus. Five or six threaten to stay out if the caucus is held Tuesday. The contest is personal and bitter between Logan and Farwell, and they are determined to defeat each other if possible. To-morrow's papers will contain a letter from Farwell, offering to withdraw and support Oglesby, if Logan will do the same. Logan will not accept the proposition. He claims to have a majority of the caucus.

MARINE DISASTERS.

QUEENSTOWN, Jan. 10.—The British steamer Linhope, from Boston for Liverpool, which arrived here yesterday, lost her boats and a number of cattle on her passage.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—The British steamer Barsard Castle, before reported ashore at the Skaw, northern coast of Denmark, has been floated again.

The German bark Argonaut, Capt. Bramer, is ashore at Blankenese, on the River Elbe.

The British bark Day Star, Capt. Sawyer, from New-Orleans, Nov. 28, for Liverpool, put into Crookhaven, having lost two men overboard. She afterward went ashore, and now has seven feet of water in her hold.

A Lloyd's telegram from Queenstown says that the steering gear of the Inman Line steamer City of Chester, which left Liverpool yesterday for New-York, gave way while she was entering Queenstown Harbor this morning.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 10.—The schooner Capacity, loaded with flour and bricks, for Norfolk, was sunk at the wharf here during the night by floating ice.

BALTIMORE, Md., Jan. 10.—The British steamer Bolivar, which cleared on Jan. 6 for Liverpool, is still aground near the mouth of the Patapsco. The ice-boats will get her off to-morrow.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The brig Don Quixote, Capt. York, from New-York Dec. 16 for Limerick, was spoken on Dec. 31 by the steam-ship Nurnberg. The Don Quixote had lost her stanchions and her master, mate, and two of her men were washed overboard. The Nurnberg put three men on the Don Quixote.

MR. MAPLESON'S LAST NIGHT IN BOSTON.

BOSTON, Jan. 10.—This evening Mozart's "Il Flauto Magico" was given to the largest house of the season, hundreds being unable to obtain seats. Mme. Marie Röze appeared for the first time in America as Pamina, and met with a great success. The occasion being her first appearance this season in opera, she was greeted with a most enthusiastic reception. As the opera progressed her singing received numerous encores, and she was several times recalled. The duet between Pamina and Papagena was the greatest success of the evening, and received a double encore. Signor Foli was in fine voice, and made a marked impression by his superb singing. The company leave to-morrow for Chicago.

BIGGINS' SUIT AGAINST GEN. GRANT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The case of Thomas J. Biggins against ex-President Grant for false imprisonment, in causing Biggins' arrest and commitment to the insane asylum, came to an abrupt close this morning. The Judge instructed the jury to bring in a verdict for the defendant, which was promptly done, counsel for plaintiff having acknowledged that the testimony was not what they supposed it would be.

RUMOR ABOUT CENTRAL PACIFIC'S TITLES.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 10.—The rumor circulating in the East to the effect that the titles to the Central Pacific Railroad and its branches are now in the hands of the Flood & O'Brien firm, having been transferred in settlement for borrowed money, is pronounced to be false by a gentleman who speaks for Mr. Flood.

SUED FOR REFUSING A STATEMENT.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 10.—The Government has brought suit against the Central Pacific Railroad Company, to recover $10,000 for the refusal of the company to render a statement of its business to the Auditor of Railroad Accounts.

INDICTMENTS FOR PERJURY QUASHED.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 10.—Eight indictments for perjury against J. C. Duncan and H. Katzhal, late Manager and Cashier, respectively, of the Pioneer Bank, were dismissed by the County Court to-day.

GENERAL TELEGRAPH NEWS

THE MUTUAL LIFE'S NEW MOVE.

MEETING OF POLICY-HOLDERS IN PROVIDENCE—ANOTHER GATHERING NEXT WEEK.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PROVIDENCE, Jan. 10.—The adjourned meeting of the Providence policy-holders of the New-York Mutual Life Insurance Company this evening was largely attended. Something like $5,000,000 of policies being held here, the action of the Providence policy-holders is watched with great interest, both in New-York and Boston. Influential parties were on hand from both cities—from the former Hon. Benjamin H. Bristow, Judge Fullerton, and Mr. George H. Andrews, and from the latter ex-Alderman John T. Clark, Mr. Elizar Wright, and Mr. John C. Rose. It was rumored that an attempt was to be made to capture the meeting in the interest of the innovation, but the feeling of the assemblage was strongly in favor of the protesting policy-holders. Mr. George H. Andrews, of New-York, one of the Trustees of the company, made a speech of over an hour in defense of the step taken. He said there could be no difference between the interests of the Trustees and of the policy-holders, and he defended President Winston as a most faithful and capable servant of the company. The step proposed was simply to meet competition boldly, and to act wholly for the interests of the policy-holders. He read figures to show how the action could not fail to result in a gain to the company. He refuted the charges of extravagant advertising that had been brought against the company. He hoped the meeting would appoint a committee to confer with the Trustees as to the best method by which the greatest good would be done for the greatest number of the policy-holders. Judge Fullerton said he would not complain of what had been done, for the corporation had thereby been benefited and the company had been enabled to show to the public the splendid condition of its affairs. Grave charges had previously been brought on several occasions, and the investigations had resulted to the good of the company. The change of rates of insurance in the company had in previous years been frequent and important, giving a precedent for the present action. The rates must necessarily be flexible; one of the leading companies of New-York secured new business by allowing takers-out of new policies commissions; other devices were followed by other companies, and they all aimed at the same end. He felt that the opinions as to the legality of the rebate system advanced by Prof. Gray and others were founded on a misapprehension of the facts—the action was merely to protect the policy-holders. Neither banks nor insurance companies were to be tied up by inflexible rules which could not be departed from when circumstances required. Another large New-York company, not mutual, had already quietly instituted a like policy, and was now reaping the fruits of it. He closed with an appeal to trust the judgment of the men who had so well conducted the affairs of the company, and made it the foremost institution of the kind in the world.

Mr. Alvord, of Boston, followed. He had felt that the course adopted was a great wrong to the policy-holders, inasmuch as they were robbed for the benefit of new-comers. The opinion of Prof. Gray was endorsed by every State Attorney-General in New-England. Judge Fullerton had admitted that the company was going to seed, and so, to repair itself, had got to go to work and rob its policy-holders. He wanted the meeting to understand that they did not propose to stand this treatment in Boston, and he did not believe they would in Providence. Mr. John C. Ropes, of the law firm of Ropes, Gray & Loring, read a petition from Boston policy-holders against the action, and giving reasons why it should not be taken. Mr. Ropes said that he objected to the creation of a fund out of the policies of retiring members, as great injustice was thus done to those for on retiring they ought to be paid as much as possible. Such an application of the money as was proposed was inequitable, and could not stand in a court of equity. The whole machinery was disingenuous; the company was a mutual one, and could not lawfully take an action which a stock company could. The trouble was that Mr. Winston was applying the principles of a stock company to a mutual one. Honesty was the best, both on a principle which destroyed the mutuality. Hon. Benjamin H. Bristow, representing the petitioners, spoke from a purely professional stand-point, saying that if the action was carried out there was the great danger of converting the company into a stock company. He questioned the methods by which the confidential circular had been sent out. He did not question the honesty of the officers, but there was a bad odor about the matter. He believed the policy-holders would stand by the bridge that had borne them over, but would not knock the props from under it, and that the old trustworthy methods would not be allowed to be changed. The meeting adjourned for one week.

LARGE FIRE IN CINCINNATI.

TWO BUILDINGS DESTROYED BY THE FLAMES—ANOTHER DEMOLISHED BY FALLING WALLS.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 10.—P. Wilson & Sons' extensive carriage trimming and saddlery establishment in Main-street, below Fourth-street, has been entirely destroyed by fire. Also, M. Werk's unoccupied building adjoining. The loss on the former is estimated at $140,000, almost entirely covered by insurance. The loss on Werk's building is estimated at $40,000. At Wayne & Son's cutlery store, next above, the stock is badly damaged by water. The thermometer being at zero, the firemen have had great difficulty in handling the hose. The walls of Werk's building fell upon the rear of the Commercial Bank building, demolishing it, with the exception of the vault, which remained intact after the walls around it had fallen. The loss is unknown. The building is owned by C. W. Woolley. All attempts to get at the interior of Wilson's and Week's buildings have been frustrated by smoke and ice, the building both backand front being covered with the latter, presenting a beautiful spectacle. The telegraph wires in front of the burned building were broken by the weight of ice which formed on them. To-day piled to the height of from five to six feet in Main and Hammond streets. At the doors of the buildings at which the firemen were at work, the street-car tracks were frozen under so deeply that it took a gang of workmen several hours to get at them. The buildings were erected 12 years ago by Messrs. Slevin at a cost of $300,000.

The following local companies had risks on Wilson & Co.'s stock: The Union, Citizens', Eureka, Firemen's, Miami Valley, and Kenton, $2,500 each; Globe, Fidelity, Enterprise, Eagle, Western, and Germania, $5,000 each. The following are the foreign companies concerned so far as known: Washington, Merchants' and Manufacturers', and Ætna, $5,000 each, and $40,000 in other companies whose names cannot now be ascertained. Insurance on Wilson & Co.'s building: Manhattan and Lamar, of New-York, and National, of Cincinnati, $5,000 each. Werks' building, adjoining Wilson's, was insured in the Washington and Merchants' and Manufacturers' for $5,000 each. The Commercial Bank Building was insured for only $3,000 in the National, of Cincinnati. J. L. Wayne's loss was chiefly by water and will be slight, and fully insured. D. S. Carrick, saddlery, building injured by a falling wall. His stock was somewhat damaged by water.

SNOW, RAIN, AND ICE.

A SNOW BLOCKADE IN OHIO—RAINS IN THE SOUTH—DELAYS OF VESSELS BY ICE.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 10.—A heavy snow-storm, the heaviest for 20 years, visited Southern Ohio yesterday, extending as far south in Kentucky as Richmond, delaying trains on all roads in that region, and in some instances stopping them entirely. At Maysville the snow is 16 inches deep on a level, drifting to a depth of 5 feet. Farmers apprehend the loss of their stock. At Ironton, Ohio, no trains have been able to leave the city, and the mills have been obliged to stop because of a lack of coal. The ice in the river remains firm.

A special dispatch to the Times says the Kanawha River is rising. The ice has cut down the tow-boat from Harrow and carried away a large number of coal barges.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 10.—The recent rains have caused a rise in the James River, and a consequent breaking up of the ice. The water here is 12 feet above the ordinary level and is still rising. A rise of five or six feet is reported at Lynchburg.

The water, at 11:30 P. M., is still rising, and is now perceptible upon the streets in the lower part of the city. All wharves are submerged, and the water has run over into the dock from Seventeenth-street to the ship-locks at the river shores. It is also making its appearance in Carr and Franklin streets through the sewers. Families are moving out from houses in Rocketts, near the river, and merchants along these named points are busy removing goods. The flood is attributed mainly to the ice gorge below, and the consequent backing of water.

HONORS TO A DEAD CONGRESSMAN.

SAVANNAH, Jan. 10.—The remains of Hon. Julian Hartridge will arrive in the morning, by way of Augusta, and will be received by the Mayor and Aldermen and a detachment of the Chatham Artillery, of which Mr. Hartridge was an ex-officer, and escorted to the Council Chamber, where they will remain in state until Sunday, when they will be removed to Christ Church. There the funeral services will be conducted by Bishop Beckwith. The officers of the courts and the State and city officials will attend in a body. The escort will consist of United States troops and the volunteer military of the city.

THE CADDO PARISH BULL-DOZERS.

MORE COROBORATIVE TESTIMONY OF THE DEMOCRATIC OUTRAGES—HOW REPUBLICAN SPEAKERS WERE INTIMIDATED AT A JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO PARTIES.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 10.—Benjamin Williams and William Harper, of Caddo, testified before the Teller committee to-day, corroborating the testimony of other witnesses as to violence and intimidation in the parish, and the placing of polls at out-of-the-way places without due notice, thus preventing colored men from voting; they knew of only two colored Democrats in the parish.

A. H. Leonard, District Attorney, testified as follows: Was confined to Caddo Parish by quarantine during the last campaign; prior to the election was told by prominent Democrats that they meant to carry the election; asked them how they would do it, in view of the fact that the negro voters were greatly in the majority. The reply was that negroes would vote the Democratic ticket. Later, a fixed determination on the part of the Democrats to carry the election became evident. This determination was finally intensified into acts of intimidation. The Republican Convention put a ticket into the field which was really unobjectionable, even to Democrats; it was conceded, however, that this ticket would only receive the negro vote. Mr. Leonard then gave an account of a meeting at Spring Ridge, where a joint discussion was agreed upon, but the Republican speakers were interrupted and insulted by the Democrats with profane and abusive language, the general character of which is shown by the following: Mr. Leonard said: While I was speaking, Mr. Jeff Sullivan and a number of others arose and said my statements were —— lies; several persons advanced while I kept silent; in a few moments order was restored and I finished. Mr. Hill followed me. Mr. Ellsener (Republican) was the next speaker. He was interrupted frequently by such remarks as, "You are a radical scoundrel." "That's a lie." &c. Mr. Crane (Dem.) then spoke. He was followed by Mr. Harper, (Rep.,) who had not spoken three minutes when the whole house was in a tumult and cries of "Kill the Radicals," "We have the leaders," "Shoot them." I looked for an advance on Harper, when, all at once, some 15 men began coming toward me. The leader appeared to be Jasper McMillan. He got to me first. McMillan began cursing, calling me a Radical thief, a coward, and a scoundrel. This sort of thing lasted 10 minutes. I knew they wanted me to resent these insults, and then a row would take place, and we would be killed and nobody know who did the deed; I kept my mouth shut, as did all of our party; at this point a stranger to me, Caleb Foster, came to McMillan and took him by the neck and dragged him out of the house. This act opened a passage and I joined Harper upon the platform. My party then walked out through the front door, and went to where our buggies were; nobody followed us and we left; on my arrival at Shreveport I was told that the town was in a terrible state of excitement, and that we were to be killed if we held another meeting; I asked who said so, and was told all the town repeated the statement. Witness then detailed various acts of violence, threats, and fraud, such as placing ballot-boxes at inaccessible places, the organization of cavalry companies throughout the parish for the avowed purpose of carrying the election; not permitting Republican Supervisors to discharge their duties, and refusals to allow negroes to vote who had registered, on the ground that their names were not on the books.

J. R. Hornsby, of Nachitoches, testified that he had been ordered to leave the parish, and had done so.

C. H. Newell, of Tensas, stated that in his ward there was no intimidation or trouble; he saw armed bodies, both white and colored.

H. C. Rogers, L. Templeman, G. A. Simpson, and J. H. Shepherd, of Caddo, were called by the Democratic members of the committee, and had no instance to detail with statement Floyd H. Crane, who came to testify about Cobb's telling him that he ate arsenic, and Charles Tracy, who was to say that he, a married man, gave Mrs. Cobb presents, just as Bishop did, purely in a friend

STRANGLED IN LEGAL FORM.

DISGRACEFUL SCENE AT THE HANGING OF HUNTER.

THE CONDEMNED MAN NEARLY DEAD FROM ATTEMPTED SUICIDE WHEN HANGED—THE SHERIFF'S UNSUCCESSFUL EXPERIMENT WITH THE GALLOWS—A RUFFIANLY CROWD OF SPECTATORS—A TERRIBLE SCENE AVOIDED BY HUNTER'S WEAKNESS.

CAMDEN, N. J., Jan. 10.—Benjamin Hunter came very near being his own executioner. Through the negligence of his keepers, he became possessed of two pieces of tin, and sharpened their edges to a keenness equaling that of a razor. Hunter subsequently said that he obtained the material for these weapons from the sheathing in one of the prison rooms. The famous iron cage in which the murderer was confined has heretofore been described in these columns, but to understand what follows, a short sketch of the Court-house—which is also the jail and was the place of execution—is necessary. The Court-house is a rectangular, three-story building, about 100 feet long by 40 deep, and fronting toward the south. The sides are even with two streets, but there are wide court-yards, inclosed by iron railings in front and rear. The first floor above the basement is intersected in both directions by corridors, which cross each other in the centre. On the next floor is the court-room, and on the floor above that, in the north-western corner, is a large room, about 15 by 22 feet, in which the cage stands. This is composed of half-inch iron bars, set about three inches apart in a solid iron slab, which composes the floor. The bars are continuous from one side to the other, and form the roof or top. The cage is 12 by 5 feet in dimensions, and there is a space of five feet on every side of it from the walls of the room, permitting an unobstructed view from every direction. The previous Sheriff had a special keeper stationed in the room day and night to guard against a probable attempt at suicide on the part of the condemned murderer, and under his administration nothing of the sort took place. When Sheriff Calhoun came into office, two months ago, these precautions were kept up, but two of his friends were substituted for the former efficient keepers.

On Sunday night last Hunter appears to have given up all hope of a reprieve, and to have screwed his courage to the point of attempting to make away with himself. With a keeper in front of him, and supposed to be watching him, he actually cut the arteries of both feet just above the instep, and had nearly bled to death before the act was discovered. The keeper's story is that Hunter was in the habit, before retiring for the night, of disrobing himself and sitting for a while on a chair, toasting his feet at a stove which stands near one side of the cage bars. On Sunday night he went through the same performance, but this time he drew an old piece of carpet over his legs, at the same time complaining of the cold. The keeper was knitting to pass the time, and did not pay much attention until Hunter's regular hour for going to bed had long passed. Then he looked up from his occupation and called the prisoner's attention to the lateness of the hour. Hunter answered that he was not sleepy, but there was a faltering in his tone and a pallor in his countenance so unusual that the keeper was startled, and he again pressed the prisoner to retire. Hunter made another excuse, and this time his manner gave such strong indications that something was wrong that the keeper peremptorily ordered him to bed. Hunter showing no disposition to obey, the keeper sprang up and with a quick movement, grasped the piece of carpet, and despite Hunter's efforts drew it away. He saw the life-stream running out of both the prisoner's feet into a large spittoon, on which they were resting, and which was then nearly overflowing with blood. With a sharp cry of alarm, the keeper bounded into the cage, and succeeded in wresting from the desperate but thoroughly-weakened man the sharpened bit of tin which Hunter was endeavoring to plunge into a vital part. In a few moments the room swarmed with jail attendants and Hunter was handcuffed and laid upon his cot, while the County Physician was hurriedly summoned. The latter said yesterday that four minutes more and he would have been too late. As it was, after dressing Hunter's wounds, he was obliged to resort to injection to get the necessary stimulants into Hunter's body. The prisoner rallied on this from his mad. They could not by any possibility see anything. Ropes were stretched across both ends of the street to the westward, and policemen in uniform similar to that of New-York firemen guarded each side of the line. The side entrances to the court-house through which those having tickets of admission entered, after having passed through the little brick Recorder's office, on the north-western end of the lot, were to this reason for those approaches were kept rigorously clear. All the other windows and doors of the building were tightly closed, but the crowd remained and continued to increase in numbers as the hours went by until, by 11 o'clock, there were between 4,000 and 5,000 persons in a compact mass around the three open sides of the square. The various trades were represented, and there were many women and children. The women seemed more curious than the men, and they eagerly questioned everybody who would stop and talk to them. They were particularly anxious to hear "when it would be brought out of" [illegible], evidently in the hope that their waiting would be rewarded, if not with a sight of the distorted corpse, at least with a glimpse of the coffin. Two peanut-venders took advantage of the popular outpouring to add a red-letter day to their financial calendar, and a four-horse advertising truck, with a noisy street band on board, passed up and down lauding the virtues of a Philadelphia dry goods establishment.

Meantime, a continuous string of coarse-looking men—some with shiny hats, abnormally red faces and big watch-chains, others meanly attired and ragged as to the edges of their trousers—filed through the corridor of the Recorder's office and diagonally across the faded green, disappearing into the western basement of the Court-house, whence they passed up an iron staircase to the first floor of the building. Among the other features of this place of execution was a ceiling but 14 feet high, against which it would seem a decent jerk upward would dash the culprit's brains out. The spaces reserved for the spectators, press, jurymen and physicians were the three arms of the intersecting corridors facing north, east, and south, two of them less than 20 feet long and the other about 40 feet long, with a general width of about five feet. At 11 o'clock these were packed so full of human beings that not another one could possibly have been wedged in. Nearly every man smoked, and the noise, laughter, and vulgarity of conversation that prevailed would have disgraced a rat bait. With the exception of a few reporters and physicians, it was as rough an assemblage as a prudent man would care to venture into. The atmosphere was thick with cigar smoke, and fairly reeked with villainous odors from the mass of perspiring bodies. Across the front of the western arm of the longitudinal corridor was a permanent iron gate which was kept closed, access to it as a favored spectators. The Sheriff, a cigar in his mouth, entered twice through this gate and described, with evident pride, the details of his experimental gallows to friends. At such times the conversation and laughter ceased. Another episode that interested the crowd amazingly was the appearance of a Deputy Sheriff, also with a cigar in his mouth, who brandished a huge bar of yellow soap and vigorously rubbed the noose with it in every part, satisfying himself by frequent trials that it worked smoothly.

At 6:30 o'clock an attempt was made to get Hunter to eat some breakfast, but he obstinately refused to eat or drink. At 10:30 o'clock the County Physician approached the cot where the moaning culprit lay and felt his pulse. It was beating at the rate of 100 to the minute. It had been as high as 180 at intervals during the past few days. Hunter's brother and son-in-law, Rev. Mr. Allen, and the Sheriff and his assistants were present, but the prisoner did not appear to recognize any of them. He answered some of their questions, but in a dazed sort of way. Dr. Allen offered a prayer, and when he had finished asked whether he had any hope of the future. Hunter muttered, dreamily, "I trust in my Redeemer," which was the most intelligent thing he said, and immediately relapsed into seeming unconsciousness. He lay, with his eyes closed, in a sort of stupor, and was evidently fast passing away. Stimulants were immediately injected into him, and at 11:02 the dose was repeated, but without visible effect. At 11:18, there being no prospect of his rallying, the Sheriff gave orders to his assistants to lift him in their arms and carry him down stairs. The order was promptly obeyed by four men, two of whom grasped his shoulders and two others his legs. In this manner the procession, if it may be called such, slowly descended the two flights of iron stairs and crossed the two intervening landings, entering into the reserved arm of the corridor by a door on the north. Every step they took could be plainly heard below. The minister and the condemned man's relatives remained behind. Hunter presented a ghastly spectacle as he was thus borne beneath the noose and seated in a chair which had previously been placed there. He was a man of large frame and prominent features, with jet-black hair and beard, which contrasted horribly with the corpse-like hue of his shrunken face. He was attired in a black suit, and wore a collar and black necktie, which nobody had had the common sense to remove. The insertion of carrying his trousers had pulled his coat and waistcoat up about his shoulders, leaving a broad ridge of shirt exposed between the bottom of the latter garment and the waistband of his trousers. His legs hung perfectly limp and his head swung helplessly from side to side. His eyes were tightly closed, and his mouth was open. He seemed already dead. When placed in the chair his head fell back toward with a jerk, and being lifted by one of the attendants, dropped forward on his breast. His hands were handcuffed behind him.

Just before the arrival of the condemned man all hats were removed, and silence fell upon the noisy assemblage. Now a general forward movement was made from all sides which threatened to break down the frail barriers of the plank and overwhelm the horrible object in the chair. As it was those in the front row could have touched him with their hands. Those in the rear climbed upon door-knobs and other projections near the letter to see. After some trouble the noose was placed by clumsy fingers about Hunter's neck and a white cap was stuck upon his head. He was then lifted to his feet by the attendants, his head still hanging down his breast. Sheriff Calhoun, seizing a small axe that lay near, turned toward him and asked, "Have you anything to say?" The dying man did not answer. In a louder voice the Sheriff asked, "Benjamin Hunter, have you anything to say?" The head hung limp, the eyes remained closed, and no word issued from the bloodless lips. Benjamin Hunter was entirely oblivious to what was passing around him. The white cap was drawn down, and the next moment—at 11:25 o'clock—the Sheriff cut the rope, Hunter, who had dropped into a heap when let go of, was drawn by two quick jerks to about his full height. His feet remained on the floor. A cry of horror broke from the crowd. The Sheriff jumped for the rope, and, with the aid of two assistants, dragged the prisoner's form clear of the floor. Hunter swung rapidly round a few times, until an obliging bystander put forth a hand and stopped him. The knot had lodged behind his left ear. A deep breath or two, and the slightest possible twitching of the muscled fingers were all the signs he gave that he was slowly strangling to death. While the hangman held on, the physicians stepped forward and noted the pulsations of the prisoner's pulse. They were taken down as follows: 11:26, 64; 11:27, 102; 11:27½, 112; 11:28½, 128; 11:30, 112; 11:30½, 144; 11:31, 144; 11:33, 128; 11:33½, 92; 11:35, 80; 11:37, 34. Dr. Reynolds could find no pulse, and he was allowed to hang until 12:05. The rope was then cut and the body lowered, and after the usual formalities it was given to the dead man's brother, who took it to the residence of the widow, in Philadelphia, whence the funeral will take place privately to-morrow.

Thomas Graham, Hunter's hired assistant in the assassination of Armstrong, and the witness whose testimony convicted him, occupied a cell during the execution on the first floor of the jail, within a few feet of the gallows, where he could distinctly hear everything which was going on. An indictment has already been found against him, and he will be tried during the present term of court. The Public Prosecutor will ask for a verdict of wilful murder against him, but it is generally believed that he will escape capital punishment by pleading guilty to murder in the second degree, and being sentenced to imprisonment for life. After the first shock was over, and before Hunter was fairly dead, the disgraceful conduct of the spectators broke out worse than before. Some of the language that was applied to the dying wretch was vile and filthy beyond description. A gentleman who happened to be in the throng was so disgusted that he vigorously denounced one of these men to his face, and for a few moments a fight seemed imminent. In front of the ferry landing, in Philadelphia, was gathered a morbid crowd, awaiting the arrival of the corpse. All the day saw a pine coffin in an undertaker's wagon, which dashed rapidly by them.

Thus was exploited one of the most dastardly murders in criminal annals. The story that Hunter left a detailed confession is officially denied. The following affidavit of his keepers, while in prison, seems to have furnished the foundation for the report:

Jacob Nisson and William H. Swindell being duly sworn according to law depose and say that they are keepers employed to take charge of Hunter; that Hunter about 8:30 o'clock on the evening of Monday, Jan. 6 last, said: "Graham gave me away fearfully, did'nt he? It will make my poor family suffer so."

I, Swindel, said to him, "Did Graham tell the truth in everything he said?" "No: he didn't," Hunter said. "The idea that I ran after him to do this job! On the contrary, Graham ran after me to arrange to do it."

I, Swindell, then asked Hunter if he struck Armstrong at all. He said, "No; how could I find the time to take a hammer to do it, when the three could only hear him breathe and not see it?"

"When he got away," Hunter said, "Graham told me he sunk the hammer into his head the first blow he struck him."

Sworn and subscribed before me, this 6:h day of January, 1879. R. S. JENKINI, Magistrate Camden County.

JACOB NISSON,
WM. H. SWINDELL.

BUNGLING AT CANADIAN GALLOWS.

TERRIBLE SCENE AT THE HANGING OF FARRELL—LAST MOMENTS OF THE CONDEMNED MAN.

QUEBEC, Jan. 10.—Father Winn, who has been unremitting in his attentions to Farrell, the condemned murderer, spent the night with him in his cell. At 7:30 o'clock this morning the jailer and hangman proceeded to pinion the felon, and at 7:45 o'clock the large bells of all the Roman Catholic churches in the city began tolling, as the signal for Roman Catholics to pray for the man about to be executed. At 8 o'clock, which is the hour fixed for execution, the Archbishop performed a solemn mass in St. Patrick's Church, at which a large congregation was present. At 7:30 the members of the press, officers of the courts, physicians and all other persons who had obtained tickets of admission from the Sheriff, passed into the jail yard in front of the scaffold. At 8:02 o'clock the black flag required by law was hoisted upon the cupola of the jail, and at the same time the hangman, covered with black linen from head to foot, and looking, as he afterward proved to be, awkward, clumsy, and ignorant, made his appearance and slipped the other end of a rope through a hook in the top of the beam, leaving a loop dangling in the air. About 8:07 o'clock Farrell was brought to the scaffold, led by Fathers Winn and Barker, with whom he had spent the last few hours. He walked steadfastly and the three men knelt on the scaffold, where one of them prayed. The Sheriff, jailer, and other officers of the court followed. Farrell said nothing to the spectators, and scarcely looked at them. He arose from his spiritual advisers, and then took his place on the drop. The priests again knelt to pray for Farrell after holding a crucifix to his lips.

The drop should now have fallen, but many seconds elapsed before the executioner could get the bolt to work, and the murderer turned a painfully supplicating look on him. With his pinioned hands he reached for the rope as he felt the drop falling, and thus he hung between life and death, presenting an awful spectacle. One of the spectators fainted at the sight. The poor unfortunate uttered a piercing cry. By continual shaking, the hangman righted the rope and Farrell fell another foot, but not lifeless, for his limbs made convulsive movements for several minutes after the fall, and death did not ensue until nearly 8:25 o'clock. The body was left hanging the customary time, when it was cut down and the usual inquest held. It will be buried in the cholera burying-ground.

THE CHINESE QUESTION.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION CONDEMNED

REPORT OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR—CONGRESS URGED TO LIMIT THE IMMIGRATION OF CHINESE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The House Committee on Education and Labor to-day made a report to the House on the subject of Chinese immigration, to accompany House bill No. 2,423. The first question considered is whether Congress has the power, in view of the existing treaty with China, to limit immigration. After quoting the treaty obligations, the Constitution, and various legal opinions, the committee conclude that "Congress has the right, by appropriate legislation to change or abrogate any existing treaty. Indeed, Congress has in one instance expressly exercised this power. The act of July 7, 1798, declares that the existing treaties with France are no longer obligatory upon the United States." Continuing, the committee say: "The evils of Chinese immigration have been fully recognized upon the Pacific slope for many years. Welcomed at first as a unique addition to the society and a valuable ally in the development of the material resources of their new home, the Chinese, by their sordid, selfish, immoral, and now amalgamatory habits, within a very short time reversed the judgment in their favor, and came to be regarded as a standing menace to the social and political institutions of the country." The report then reviews the various legislative efforts to obtain relief, and then says: "Your committee, in view of the importance and urgency of the question, after a patient hearing of the evidence and argument on both sides at an early date after its organization, presented a resolution which, with a slight modification, passed both houses of Congress. This resolution again called attention to the obnoxious features in the Burlingame treaty, and requested prompt action on the part of the Executive Department, in securing its change or abrogation. In view of the almost unanimous sentiment of the people of the Pacific slope as to the necessity of such action, it was hoped that these successive resolutions of Congress, together with the various petitions, memorials, and official data in the possession of the Government, would cause negotiations to be opened for that purpose. Such action would have been preferable to direct interference by Congress, inasmuch as it would have been free from all doubt as to its legality, and would not have jeopardized the friendly feelings and commercial intercourse between the two countries. However desirable such a result may have been, it has thus far not been accomplished. The petitions for such remedial legislation were presented within a year after the ratification of the Burlingame treaty. These were vigorously renewed at every subsequent session, until finally, in the Forty-fourth Congress, the resolution already referred to was passed, calling the attention of the Executive Department to the necessity of change in the treaty. This resolution was again presented and passed at the second session of the present Congress, but has not, as far as your committee is informed, called forth any practical effort at action. So long a period of non-action proves either the unwillingness of the treaty-making power to cope with the question. In either event your committee consider that further delay would work great injustice to the people of a large portion of our country, provided the evils whereof they complain are well founded."

In conclusion, the committee says: "This whole question is not one of right, but of policy. There is no principle on which we are compelled to receive into our midst the natives of Asia, Africa, or any other part of the world. The character, source, and extent of immigration should be regulated and controlled with reference to our own wants and welfare. The different problems, economic and political, resulting from the presence of the red and black races would be renewed in a more aggravated and dangerous form by the yellow race. The Mongolian, unlike the Indian, is brought into daily contact with our social and political life, and, unlike the African, does not surrender any of his most peculiar traits on account of that contact. It is neither possible nor desirable for two races as distinct as the Caucasian and Mongolian to live under the same Government without assimilation. The degradation or slavery of the one or the other would be the inevitable result. Homogeneity of ideas and of physical and social habits are essential to national harmony and progress. Equally grave objections may be urged against the Chinese form of religious belief. Our laboring people cannot and ought not to be subjected to a competition which involves the surrender of the sacred and elevating influences of home and the sacrifice of the ordinary appliances of the civilization of the age. The question is, therefore, not one of competition, but of a substitution of one kind of labor for another. No self-governing country can afford to diminish or destroy the dignity, the welfare, and the independence of its citizens. Justice to the people of the Pacific slope, the dictates of common humanity and benevolence, as well as the plainest suggestions of practical statesmanship all combine to the proposition that Chinese immigration shall be solved while it is yet within the legislative control."

A TRIBUTE TO THE LATE CALEB CUSHING.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—A well-attended meeting of the Bar of the United States Supreme Court was held in the court-room to-day, to take action in relation to the death of Caleb Cushing. On motion of Mr. P. Phillips, Secretary Evarts was called to the chair. Mr. Evarts appointed a committee to draft resolutions, consisting of Messrs. P. Phillips, Roscoe Conkling, George H. Williams, A. T. Ackerman, Gen. Pike, and Attorney-General Devens. Speeches were made by Messrs. Williams, Hackett, Garnett, and Pike expressive of the respect and esteem in which Mr. Cushing was held by his associates at this Bar, and of the profound sorrow and regret with which they received the intelligence of his death. The committee then reported the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That the Bar of the Supreme Court of the United States has been informed with deep regret of the death of Caleb Cushing, for many years their associate as an able practitioner before this court.

Resolved, That while the memory of Mr. Cushing deserves to be cherished as a citizen and a soldier, as a scholar and a historian, as a statesman and a diplomatist, the Bar desire especially to remember him to-day as a wise legislator, as an accomplished publicist, and as a profound and learned lawyer, whose services in all these capacities have been most honorable to himself and most valuable to the Republic.

Resolved, That the Secretary be requested to communicate these resolutions to the press and to move that they be entered on the record; and

Resolved, That they be communicated to the family of Mr. Cushing with the expression of the earnest condolence of the Bar.

ARMY AND NAVY INTELLIGENCE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Surgeon C. C. Gray, United States Army, is relieved from duty in the Department of the Missouri, and will proceed to his home in Chester, N. Y., and await further orders.

Surgeon B. G. Semig, now on leave of absence, will report in person to the commanding General of the Department of the Missouri for assignment.

Commodore C. H. Baldwin, Capt. C. H. Wells, Capt. W. P. McCann, Commander Byron Wilson, Commander J. F. McGlensey, Commander J. J. Read, Lieut.-Commander Charles McGregor, United States Navy, and Chief Engineer Thomas Parsons, Marine Corps, have been detailed as the members of a court-martial for the trial of Commander D. W. C. Kells, United States Navy.

PARIS EXPOSITION STATISTICS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The Consul-General of the United States, in a dispatch to the Department of State, gives the number of visitors arriving at Paris during the Exposition—May to November—as 571,792, or about 46,000 more than during the previous Exposition. These statistics refer only to those who put up at hotels or occupied furnished rooms during their visit; the number of persons visiting without lodging in hotels or furnished rooms is not known. The number and nationalities of foreign visitors during the same period were as follows: English, 68,000; Germans, 28,000; Belgians, 21,419; Americans, (United States,) 14,550; Italians, 14,550; Swiss, 13,284; Spaniards, 10,234; Austrians, 9,072; total foreign, 170,677.

AN ADJUTANT-GENERAL TO RESIGN.

BOSTON, Jan. 10.—Gov. Talbot sent a communication to Adjt.-Gen. Cunningham yesterday afternoon requesting his resignation of the office of Adjutant-General. Cunningham has filled the position since the removal of Gen. Schouler by Gov. Bullock. It is reported that Cunningham will be succeeded by Col. A. T. Wood, Assistant Inspector-General. Col. Isaac F. Kingsbury, the present Assistant Adjutant-General, is also a prominent candidate for the place.

BUSINESS EMBARRASSMENTS.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 10.—The Tiffin (Ohio) Woolen Mills, which until within a few years have been paying largely—in 1872 declaring a dividend of 31 per cent.—suspended yesterday. Last year the mill lost nearly $50,000. The liabilities will reach $90,000; assets unknown.

ALLENTOWN, Penn., Jan. 10.—It is said, on what is believed to be good authority, that the Lehigh Valley Iron Company, at Coplay, is unable to meet its liabilities, and that it will either make an assignment for the benefit of its creditors, or be sold at Sheriff's sale. This will throw out of employment a large number of working men, and will be a heavy blow to the Town of Coplay. The capital stock of the company was originally $150,000, and was subsequently increased to $600,000. The liabilities are very small in comparison with the value of the property of the company.

BOSTON, Jan. 10.—Smith & Forbes, dealers in boots and shoes, of Charlotte, N. C., and Boston, have made an assignment to J. M. B. Reynolds, of the Boston firm of Loring, Reynolds & Co. It is reported that the liabilities are $125,000 or $150,000, and assets nominally $100,000. Most of the liabilities are to houses in Boston and its vicinity. The firm's office in this city was its purchasing headquarters.

TAUNTON, Mass., Jan. 10.—At the first meeting of the creditors of Charles F. Stickney, of Fall River, to-day, claims were allowed by Judge Bennett, in the Insolvency Court, amounting to $67,566 76.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

A fire originating in the picking-room of the Troy Manufacturing Company's textile mill, at 10:20 o'clock A. M., yesterday, quickly communicated to the card-room, and instantly the structure was in flames. The firemen succeeded in confining the flames to those departments. The loss on the building, stock, and machinery will aggregate $15,000, which is fully covered by insurance. The mill was in full operation and employed 250 hands. Great excitement prevailed among the employés, and many escaped by jumping from the windows. Timothy Ahearn was badly, and it is feared fatally, burned. Several persons were slightly injured. The building was a fine structure and was valued at $150,000. The picking-room, where the fire originated, was 34 by 90 feet, and the carding-room 41 by 90 feet. This part of the building was three stories in height. The main building, 50 by 122 feet, was saved. The fire was confined to the picking and carding rooms. The machinery is damaged almost wholly by water. The fire will cause a complete suspension of work for several weeks.

The woolen mill of J. Barker & Brother, at Barksville, Mass., was destroyed yesterday morning by a fire supposed to have been caused by spontaneous combustion. The loss on stock, machinery, and building is estimated at about $80,000, insured as follows: In the Liverpool and London and Globe, $7,500; Queen, $5,000; Pennsylvania, Royal, Franklin, of Philadelphia, Lancashire, Insurance Company of North America, Howard, St. Paul, Commercial Union, Firemen's Fund, Royal Canadian, and Phœnix, $2,500 each; Cotton and Woolen Manufacturers' Mutual, $5,000; total, $45,000. One hundred hands are thrown out of work.

Much excitement was created in Trenton last evening by the breaking out of a fire in the United States Court-room, in the Government Building. Fortunately, it was extinguished without much damage, having consumed a quantity of waste-paper and a small portion of the floor.

A planing mill, formerly occupied by Poole & Co., in Buffalo, was destroyed by fire yesterday morning. The mill was not in use at the time, and was probably set on fire. A number of carriages stored in the building were burned. The loss is over $22,000; insurance, $13,700.

The bark C. W. Cochran, with 2,998 bales of cotton on board, took fire Thursday night at Galveston, and will prove a total loss. The cotton will be partly saved. The vessel has been sunk in 20 feet of water.

G. B. Markle & Co.'s building, the express and Post Office buildings, and a quantity of mail matter, in Jeddo, Penn., were destroyed by fire yesterday morning. The loss is from $35,000 to $40,000.

A fire occurred at Ainsworth, about 25 miles south of Chicago, on the Pan Handle Railroad, Thursday night, destroying the Union Rendering Company's establishment. Loss, $85,000; insured.

ESSEX COUNTY (N. J.) FREEHOLDERS.

At the meeting of the Board of Freeholders of Essex County, Thursday, the County Auditor reported that the uncollected taxes for the year 1878 amount to $558,397 39, and prior to that year $28,812 18. The Legislative Committee presented a bill for introduction at the approaching session of the Legislature which provides for the abolishment of the Public Road Board, and that the work now performed by that board shall hereafter be done by the Board of Freeholders. The bill was approved. Freeholder Poinier, of the Fourteenth Ward of Newark, stated that he had been informed that one member of the Legislative Committee of the Board of Freeholders had, last year, worked secretly against the repeal of the Road Board bill. He had also been told that the members of the Road Board had subscribed $50 each to be expended for defeat the passage of the bill. Mr. Peck denied the truth of the statement, and called Mr. Plonier a liar. Mr. W. Smith, also a member of the Road Board, denied the statement. Moses Bailey, Free holder from Livingston, who was a member of the Legislative Committee, said an imputation had been cast upon him, and demanded the appointment of a committee to make an investigation of the charges. The motion was lost, as the committee would have no power to call persons. The matter caused considerable excitement.

RAPID-TRANSIT ANUNCIATOR.

A new invention for the convenience and comfort of rapid-transit travel was exhibited at the Central office of the Metropolitan Elevated Railroad on Thursday morning. It consists of a double-faced dial of some 15 inches in diameter, on which is painted, in plain black letters on a white ground, the name or number of each station, from Rector-street to Fifty-eighth-street. A hand like that of a clock, rotating on acentral pivot, indicates the next stopping-place. The motor is electro-magnetic, so that, as the train passes one station, contact with a metallic surface, conveniently placed, by means of proper connecting wires between the instrument in the car and a small battery placed in the station, moves the hand from left to right going up, and the reverse going down. The appropriate place for the dial, as designed, is suspended to the roof of each car at the centre, so as to be distinctly visible on entering either end of the car. The stranger, or even the habitual traveler who may be momentarily oblivious of his exact position, can glance at the dial and be set right and avoid the necessity of asking questions. On exhibition it works satisfactorily, and is pronounced the best thing of the kind yet offered.

A STEAM-SHIP THROWN ON HER BEAM ENDS.

The steam-ship Rhiwindda, of the Edwards Line, which arrived from Cardiff, Wales, with a cargo of tin, late on Thursday evening, came up to the City yesterday. Capt. Allan reports that the passage took up 28 days, nothing but westerly gales and head seas having been met with during the whole time. At 2 o'clock on the morning of Dec. 27, during a terrific gale, a tremendous sea struck the steamship's starboard quarter, and broke over the port bulwarks and stanchions, washing everything movable, including the binnacle, overboard, and breaking in the skylights. The force of the heavy sea caused the cargo to shift to port, throwing the vessel on her beam ends, and the water, which flooded the decks, rushed into the hold through the hatches, which had been badly broken. A binnacle, with another compass was lashed near the wheel as soon as possible; a donkey engine was at once at work pumping the water out of the hold, and all hands were sent below to throw the cargo back to its former position, and, as the tin was extremely hard to handle, it was not until the afternoon of the third day after the steamer was thrown on her beam-ends that the crew succeeded in righting her.

BURGLARY IN FORTY-FIFTH-STREET.

Between 6 and 7 o'clock on Thursday evening, while the family of Daniel Mace, the well-known horseman, were at dinner in the basement of their residence, No. 66 West Forty-fifth-street, unknown sneak-thieves entered the premises by unlocking the front vestibule door with a latch-key, and, ascending to the second floor, entered the front bedroom. With a small "jimmy" they forced open a drawer in the dressing-table in the room and stole a very cluster diamond pins, a cluster diamond ring, a solitaire diamond ring, a ring with three pearls, a set of enamelled jewelry, and three scarf pins, valued in all at $1,400, with which they decamped. The robbery was not discovered until one of the ladies of the family, on going up stairs after dinner, found a pet terrier dog lying dead in the hall near the bedroom door. The barking of this dog had been heard by the inmates of the house while they were at dinner, but as it continued but a short time no attention was paid to it. The advent of the thieves had caused the dog to bark, and they quickly prevented an alarm by strangling the little animal. On investigation the front vestibule door was found open, and as there were no marks of violence about it, it was apparent that the entrance had been effected with a false key. No clue to the thieves has been obtained.

THE PROPOSED NATIONAL MILITIA.

The Executive Committee of the proposed National Militia met yesterday afternoon, Col. R. C. Ward, of the Twenty-third Regiment, in the chair. The Secretary, Gen. Wingate, read the names of delegates to the coming National Convention as introduced by the Adjutant-Generals of the following States: Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, New-Jersey, Illinois, Iowa, Tennessee, California, and Massachusetts. The delegation representing this State comprises Brig.-Gen. William G. Ward, First Brigade; Gen. G. W. Wingate, State Inspector of Rifle Practice; Col. W. H. Brownell, Forty-seventh Regiment, and Lieut.-Col. Louis Fitzgerald, Seventh Regiment. Col. J. H. Cowperthwait, of the Committee on Hall, reported that Col. Clark, of the Seventh Regiment, had offered the room of the Board of Officers in his armory for the use of the convention, and it was decided to meet there at 10 A. M. next Thursday. On motion of Major M. B. Farr it was decided to call a meeting of the officers of the several divisions, brigades, and regiments of this City and Brooklyn at the Coal and Iron Exchange on Monday next at 3:30 P. M. for the purpose of arranging a plan for the entertainment of the visiting delegations.

IMMIGRATION STATISTICS FOR 1878.

The following statistics of the immigration of 1878 have been collated by Secretary Jackson, of the Board of Commissioners of Emigration: The total arrivals in 1878 were 121,369, of which 75,347 were aliens. Germany's continent was 23,057. Ireland contributed 13,013; England, 9,344; Italy, 4,208; Sweden, 4,163; Russia, 3,346; Norway, 2,500; Denmark, 2,249; Switzerland, 1,023; Bohemia, 1,006; Scotland, 1,852; France, 1,645; Austria, 1,001; Spain, 767; West Indies, 660; Wales, 651; Hungary, 613; Holland, 594; Belgium, 223; South America, 182; Canada, 176; China, 145; Luxembourg, 122; Central America, 112; Mexico, 109; Nova Scotia, 83; Africa, 31; Australia, 27; Turkey, 27; East India, 25; Isle of Man, 15; Armenia, 14; Portugal, 13; New-Brunswick, 12; Greek, 10; Jerusalem, 7; Asia, 5; Japan, 4; Malta, 4, and Heligoland, 3. These figures show a falling off in Ireland's quota of 32 per cent; Germany's, 24.83; England's, 32.39] as compared with the previous year.

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

THIRD SESSION—Jan. 10.

SUMMARY.

Several petitions and remonstrances from citizens of New-York were presented in the Senate, after which Mr. Allison introduced a bill for the payment of additional bounty to the soldiers of the rebellion. A short executive session was held, and then the Senate took up the Indian appropriation bill. Several amendments were reported and agreed to, and then a debate took place on the concentration of Indians in the Indian Territory. An amendment striking out the clause prohibiting the removal of the Apaches from New-Mexico was voted down. The bill was finally passed, and the Senate adjourned till Monday.

In the House of Representatives a long debate took place on the William and Mary College bill. Mr. Conger, of Michigan, led off with a satirical speech, in which he denounced the measure as a Southern war claim, for which no Northern man could vote, and ridiculed Mr. Loring, of Massachusetts, for his support of the bill. The bill was warmly advocated by Mr. Loring, Messrs. Goode and Tucker, of Virginia, and Mr. Monroe, of Ohio, but was defeated by a vote of 127 nays to 87 yeas.

SENATE.

NEW-YORK PETITIONS AND REMONSTRANCES.

Mr. KERNAN, of New-York, presented a petition of the business men of New-York City, favoring the passage of the bill to regulate inter-State commerce. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. KERNAN also presented the petition of Dr. Mary E. Walker for a pension. Referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Messrs. KERNAN and CONKLING, of New-York, presented a resolution of the New-York State Senate remonstrating against the passage of the bill to reorganize the Army, or, at least, that portion of it forbidding the manufacture of arms at the arsenals of the United States. Laid on the table, the bill having been reported to the Senate.

THE INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The unfinished business, being the bill to amend the Patent laws, was laid aside informally, on motion of Mr. WINDOM, of Minnesota, and the Senate proceeded to consider the Indian Appropriation bill.

Mr. WINDOM said the amendments to the bill were few in number. As it passed the House it appropriated $6,681,278 68. The estimates were $4,933,244 80; so it would be seen that the House had substantially conformed to the estimates. The net amount added by the Senate Committee on Appropriations was $58,777 25, and the most important items in the amendments were $2,500 for the Northern Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians, $23,400 for the Sioux, and $29,400 for the pay of Indian Police.

The amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations were agreed to as follows: For the pay of 71 Indian agents, instead of 74, as in the House bill; increasing the appropriation for the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes from $35,000 to $37,500, and that for the Sioux of different tribes from $15,000 to $38,400.

The committee reported an amendment to strike out the clause directing the President to prohibit the removal of the Apaches and other Indians of Arizona and New-Mexico to the Indian Territory.

An amendment of the committee increasing the appropriation for the support of the Tonkawa Indians at Fort Griffin, Texas, from $2,000 to $5,729 was agreed to; also, amendments of the committee increasing the number of privates for the Indian Police force, and the number of officers from 50 to 100, and the appropriation for that service from $30,600 to $60,000.

An amendment reported by the committee, to strike out of the House bill the clause authorizing the Secretary of the Interior, under direction of the President, to use any surplus that may remain in any of the appropriations made by the bill for the purchase of subsistence for Indian tribes, and to supply any subsistence deficiency that may occur for any tribe, providing, however, that funds appropriated to fulfill treaty obligations shall not be used, was agreed to.

The bill, when considered in Committee of the Whole, was reported to the Senate, the amendments made in the committee were concurred in, and the bill was read a third time and passed.

The Senate, at 5:30, on motion of Mr. ALLISON, of Iowa, went into executive session, and when the doors were reopened, adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THE NEWTOWN CREEK BAR.

Mr. BLISS, of New-York, presented a petition of Francis Pidgeon, the Devoe Manufacturing Company, South Side Railroad Company, and others for an appropriation for the removal of the bar at the mouth of Newtown Creek, on the East River, New-York. Referred.

A SOUTHERN WAR CLAIM.

The House, at 1:15 P. M., went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Burchard, of Illinois, in the chair, on the private calendar, the first bill being the William and Mary College bill.

Mr. CONGER, of Michigan, opposed the bill. There had been no war Congress which had brought to its aid so much eloquence and rhetoric, and yet which contained so little substantial legal merit as the William and Mary College bill. He considered it the most gigantic and successful conversion of hundreds and thousands of war claims involving millions of dollars. This peaceful abode of learning, about which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Loring] spoke, was used as a prison-house at the time it was captured by the Union Army. He appealed from the fancy sketches of the gentleman from Massachusetts about the home of the muses where the sacred nine tripped along the grass to the music of the lyre, to the Clerk's desk to the Clerk's desk and had read a letter to the Evening Post from its war correspondent, giving a description of the filthy condition of the college when the Union forces obtained possession of it.

Mr. GOODE, of Virginia—What is the name of the gentleman?

Mr. CONGER—I cannot tell you.

Mr. GOODE—An anonymous scribbler.

Mr. CONGER—The bill was permitted to go with the United States Army to report to the people the events of the war. Continuing, he said that this was a scheme to wheedle money out of Congress by the risen sun of the sweet ministers of Virginia, aided by the tuneful alto of Massachusetts. [Laughter.] Listening to them, he was himself almost willing to vote away to that college the American dollar with the American eagle on it, and the motto "In God we Trust," and all that. [Laughter.]

Mr. LORING, of Massachusetts, said he was not in condition physically or mentally to reply to the eloquent, lofty, and clear speech and logic which we had from the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Conger.] He wished he had some of the strength which he had when he had addressed the House before, not with a view to surrender his views of the general policy of this Government, but with the desire to let his people and his country know that the time had come when, looking beyond all local trials and all the difficulties of the great conflict, they should seize the bright and luminous spots of the conflict and turn their attention to peace. He had come here believing in the exalted motives and intentions of the country, and the old moss-grown colleges which had sent such scholars forth into the land to guide the councils of the nation. He had come here in the expectation for the first time that education had been increased instead of diminished by the attacks made upon them. He was determined to love them, notwithstanding the attempts made to wrest them away.

Mr. CONGER said he had made a gentle personal allusion to the gentleman from Massachusetts, so mild and so gentle that he had thought it but just to him,

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE DEVIL.

DEMONOLOGY AND DEVIL-LORE. By MONCURE D. CONWAY, M. A. In two vols. London: CHATTO & WINDUS. New-York: HOLT & CO.

It is the boast of the philosophers of Germany that they have had no devil in the fatherland for nearly half a century. His satanic majesty has been abolished among certain advanced schools of thought in America and England any time these 20 years, and there are numbers of other wise orthodox people who no longer fear the devil, except in his ideal form of an accusing conscience. To these persons, and to all students of theology, demonology, and the other kindred ologies, Mr. Conway's two volumes will be of intense interest. For the author has herein not only raised the devil, but he has exorcised him. Not alone does he tell us the story of the fallen angel, but he "biographizes" every imp that ever existed in history or tradition: the demons that were in Hades before the war in heaven, the fiends, witches, serpents, fire-gods, water-gods, vampires, goblins, monsters, and all the devil's relations in every quarter of the globe. This remarkable work is the result of several years of research, commenced in America and finished in Europe, where it is good to know demons are most plentiful and demonalatry has been most largely practiced. It is not surprising to learn that in trying to conquer the histories of the monsters of the Old World and the New, in the ages of darkness, and in the gleams of supposed light, Mr. Conway has occasionally imagined them swarming and gibbering around him in a mad comedy which travestied their tragic sway over those who believed in their reality. "Gargoyles extended their grin over the finest architecture, cornices coiled to serpents, the very words of speakers started out of their conventional sense into images that tripped my attention. Only as what I believed right solutions were given to their problems were my sphinxes laid; but through this psychological experience it appeared that when one was so laid, his or her legion disappeared also."

We can promise the reader similar sensations if he will settle down earnestly to master Mr. Conway's book. In these days of realism it is something to get a genuine thrill, a real shock, a startling surprise, out of anything. It is impossible to quit this notable work without having experienced many and serious sensations. Mr. Conway is no half-and-half philosopher. He is not stayed by prejudices, poetic or otherwise. He makes a clean sweep of Old World views and sentiments concerning devildom; in doing so he is apt to pull down and trample upon theories and beliefs concerning brighter and holier things. Here and there we come upon outspoken arguments and declarations touching Christianity which will certainly remain unindorsed by the churches; nor shall we enter into any controversy upon the subject. We prefer to regard Mr. Conway's work as a treatise upon demonolatry and the devil, and we should do him scant justice if we did not admit that his new book is the most exhaustive, intelligent, and intellectual treatment of the subject which has ever come under our notice. It is easy to trace in these pages the gradual growth of this study of myths and gods, of idols and giants, of fables and fairy tales, of superstition and its victims. A cultivated man, Mr. Conway went to Europe from Harvard College with a mind like a sponge for the wonders of ancient cities, and with a fancy full of curious sympathy for all that is strange and antiquated. He must have reveled in the dark unsophisticated corners of Italy, Germany, Spain, and France, and buried himself in the musty archives of old English colleges, museums and official libraries. He invoked all the devils in Christendom, and in these two tomes before us he has exorcised them. The devil has always been an attraction for the American preacher and littérateur. As early as 1859 he contributed, as one of the American Tracts for the Times, a pamphlet entitled The Natural History of the Devil. Subsequent researches in the same direction, after he had gone to reside in Europe, revealed how slight had then been his conception of the vastness of the domain upon which that first venture was made. In 1872, while preparing a series of lectures for the Royal Institution on Demonology, it occurred to him to print these lectures with some notes; but the greater part of the materials he had selected would even then remain unused, and he resolved to finish the subject completely, which he has certainly done, with the pen of a scholar and the well-stored mind of a courageous man.

The first volume is devoted to Demonolatry, a worship which is described in every phase, from solar mythology to fatalism; from the days when demons were at the height of their power to their influence upon modern religion. A valuable feature of the volume is the author's personal researches, the facts and anecdotes he has picked up, and the careful way in which he has passed traditions and history through his own intellectual sieve. His familiar illustrations are full of suggestiveness. For example, treating of the ordeal of fire and water, he says William Craft, an African, who resided for some time in the Kingdom of Dahomey, informed him of an incident he had witnessed there: "The sacred serpents are kept in a grand house, which they sometimes leave to crawl in the neighboring grounds. One day a negre from some distant region encountered one of these animals and killed it. The people, learning that one of their gods had been slain, seized the stranger, and, having surrounded him with a circle of brushwood, set it on fire. The poor wretch broke through the circle of fire and ran, pursued by the crowd, who struck him with heavy sticks. Smarting from the flames and blows, he rushed into a river; but no sooner had he entered there than the pursuit ceased, and he was told that, having gone through fire and water, he was purified and might emerge with safety. Thus, even in that distant and savage region, serpent-worship was associated with fire-worship and river-worship, which have a wide representation in both Aryan and Semitic symbolism." In this popular style Mr. Conway traces many apparently modern customs and celebrations back by curious connecting links to barbarous practices in barbarous times. Touching the general leanness of demons, as portrayed in pictures of them, Mr. Conway says: "No Northern devil is fat. Shakespeare ascribes to Cæsar a suspicion of leanness—

> "'Yond' Cassius hath a lean and hungry look:
> He thinks too much: Such men are dangerous.'

"When Anthony defends Cassius, Cæsar only replies, 'Would he were fatter!' This mistrust of leanness is a reflection from all the hungerdemons; it interprets the old saying, that "a devil, however fair in front, may be detected by hollowness of the back, and that he is usually so thin as to cast no shadow." In all the popular superstitions which now connect devils and future punishments with fire, the author traces, with consummate skill and patience, a blending of both the apotheosis and the degradation of demons, and he gives many familiar and interesting illustrations of his belief, down to modern bonfires. Referring to the accepted Christian idea of hell, Mr. Conway, as an instance of "the irony of etymology," points out that the word hell means a place of fireless darkness, and that Christ's own phrases, "outer darkness" and the "gnashing [chattering] of teeth," suggests a picture of extreme cold alternating with excessive heat.

We merely note these brief examples of Mr. Conway's method as straws upon a stream denoting the course. It is impossible, in a current notice of a work of this kind, to do more than give the newspaper reader a glimpse of its character. The second volume deals more particularly with "the Devil," whose career is traced from the war in Heaven to the present day. We are introduced to Satan in his original form, as he appears in priestcraft; we make his acquaintance disfied and in the serpent; we see him in Eden as the Evil One; face to face with Christ, he is shown to us as the tempter; he is depicted as an angel of light, as the presiding genius of witchcraft, and all his many characterizations, in all lands and in all times. In a chapter headed "The Divine Devil," Mr. Conway introduces a tribute to the art of Henry Irving, the English actor. "Any one," he says, "who has witnessed Mr. Irving's scholarly and masterly impersonation of the character of Louis XI. has had an opportunity of recognizing a phase of superstition which, happily, it were now difficult to find off the stage. Nothing could exceed the fine realism with which that artist brought before the spectator the perfected type of a pretended religion from which all moral features have been eliminated by such slow processes that the final success is unconsciously reached, and the horrible result appears unchecked by even any affectation of actual virtue. We see the King, at sound of a bell, pausing in his instructions for a treacherous assassination to mumble his prayers, and then instantly reverting to the villainy over which prospective success he gloats. In the secrecy of his chamber no mask falls, for there is no mask; the face of superstition and vice on which we look is the real face which the ages of fanaticism have transmitted to him. Such a face has oftener been that of a nation than that of an individual, for the healthy faces of life work amid the homes and hearts of mankind long before their theories are reached and influenced." It is in these every-day interpolations that we find the principal charm of Mr. Conway's book. They are apt, and they serve to lighten the more prosaic and solemn scholarship of the main thread of the argument. The story of Eden, though it differs materially from the Mosaic account, is admirably told, and the various mythological and other traditions with which philosophers associate the Bible record are set forth with a masterly command of all the many explanations which have been offered to the student. The author does not spare those religious sects who revile the theatre and the arts. He unearths Boehme, who related that when Satan was asked the cause of God's enmity to him, and his consequent downfall, he replied, "I wished to be an artist," in which quaint sentence Mr. Conway sees a very true intimation of the allurements which, in ancient times, the arts of the Gentile possessed for the Jews and Christian Judaizers. "Indeed," he remarks, "a similar feeling toward the sensuous attractions of the Catholic Church and Ritualistic churches is not uncommon among the prosaic and puritanical sects, whose younger members are often thus charmed away from them. Dr. Donne preached a sermon before Oliver Cromwell, at Whitehall, in which he affirmed that the muses were damned spirits of devils; and the discussion on the drama which occurred at the Sheffield Church Congress, (1878,) following Dr. Bickerstith's opening discourse on the 'Devil and his Wiles,' shows that the Low Church wing cherishes much the same opinion as that of Dr. Donne. The dread of the theatre among some sects amounts to terror," some instances of which he mentions as within his own experience. He finds in Puritanism much food for reflection, and he observes that "the Puritans brought upon England and America that relapse into the ancient asceticism which was shown in the burning of great pictures by Cromwell's Parliament. It is shown still in the jealousy with which the Puritanized mind in both countries views all that aims at the simple decoration of life, and whose ministry is to the sense of beauty." He is essentially a modern philosopher, [Mr. Conway,] and he must have learned in his journalistic career the art of making dry bones live, the newspaper man's method of giving local color to his pictures. Mr. Conway idealizes common wayside incidents with a graphic power. Here, for example, are two touching occurrences which might easily have been passed over by an unsympathetic nature, not on the lookout for the knowledge which wise men gather from the lowliest and humblest sources. "When art interprets the realities of nature, when it shows how much beauty and purity our human nature is capable of, it holds a mirror before all deformities. At a theatre in the City of London I witnessed the performance of an actor who, in the course of his part, struck a child. He was complimented by a hurricane of hisses from the crowded gallery. Had those 'gods' up there never struck children? Possibly. Yet here each had a mirror before him and recoiled from his worst self. A clergyman relates that, while looking at pictures in Bethnal Green Museum, he overheard a poor woman, who had been gazing on a madonna, say, 'If I had such a child as that I believe I could be a good woman!' Who can say that even that one glance at her life in the ideal reflector may be worth to that wanderer amid the miseries and temptation of London?"

After wading through a history so sad, so bewildering, bristling with cruelties, with horrors, yet relieved by heart-searching anecdotes such as these just quoted, it is gratifying to learn that the author sees in the present the dawn of better days; and always above the symbols of wrath in nature heavenly tints woven with the mystery of life by an all-presiding love. He symbolizes this view very prettily with the picture of a devil's head he saw at the door of Notre Dame, in Paris, between the horns of which a confiding bird was brooding over its young on a nest supported by that same horrible head.

LITERARY NOTES.

—Dr. Benjamin Ward Richardson's Addresses on Total Abstinence, delivered before the Hunterian Society of London and the National Temperance League are issued in pamphlet form by Macmillan & Co.

—James Miller issues a neatly-printed book under the title Do They Love Us Yet? by Mrs. Cornelius W. Lawrence. The title is taken from the well-known verses of Mrs. Hemans, and the book is dedicated "To the afflicted—those who are mourning for their dear ones."

—Prof. O. C. Marsh continues his paper on "Dinosaurs of the American Jurassic Formation" in the Journal of Science and Arts for January. He has found a bird-like reptile whose neural canal is two or three times the diameter of its brain. The paper is illustrated by seven good plates.

—Cultivators of the soil are invited by Conrad Wilson to read what he has to say about Chemical Farming in a little book published by The Farmers' Publishing Company of this City. He promises to illustrate the danger of chemicals when wrongly used, and to examine critically the Stockbridge formulas.

—Macmillan & Co. are the publishers of an act of filial piety on the part of Rosamond and Florence Davenport-Hill, daughters of Matthew Davenport-Hill, the Recorder of Birmingham. Born in 1792, he was instrumental in the improvement of criminal law, and took a deep interest in the temperance movement and legislative measures to repress drunkenness and crime.

—Houghton, Osgood & Co. have assumed the publication of Dwight's Journal of Music, beginning with the thirty-ninth volume. It was founded in 1852 by John S. Dwight, and passes from the charge of Oliver Ditson & Co., the publishers of music, into the hands of Boston's most noted book publishers. No change will be made either in its editor or its outward appearance. Mr. Dwight still remains in charge. While devoted mainly to the art of music, it also touches on art in general and polite literature. Among its contributors are William F. Apthorp, A. W. Thayer, Dr. Ritter, of Vassar College, and W. S. B. Matthews, of Chicago; Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, C. P. Cranch, William Hunt, T. G. Appleton, and others will contribute poems, letters, or essays.

CONTESTING COLLEGIANS.

THE INTERCOLLEGIATE ORATORICAL CONTEST —PRIZE-WINNERS.—MEETING OF THE LITERARY ASSOCIATION.

The Intercollegiate Literary Association held their sixth annual meeting in the Fifth-Avenue Hotel yesterday morning. Among those present were President Alexander S. Webb, College of the City of New-York; Prof. J. S. McWilliam, of Cornell; Prof. C. Tompkins, New-York University; Profs. G. C. Wetmore and C. S. Benedict, Rutgers; President McCosh, of Princeton, and Prof. H. P. Perkins, of Williams. The Regents' meeting was called to order by President Frayer, and a long discussion took place concerning the prizes of last year, which have not yet been paid. According to the understanding at the meeting last year, these prizes were to be paid out of the sum of $1,800, which was to be raised by contributions in the City of New-York. About 25 per cent. of this amount is all that had been collected, and this has been paid over to the prize-winners. The representatives of each college concurred in declaring themselves fully satisfied with the sum disbursed, as the object of these literary contests is not based upon pecuniary gain but upon educational improvement. They also agreed that they and the students who should represent their institutions will be satisfied in the future with the honors to be gained without regard to the pecuniary emolument. It is therefore understood that no stated amounts can be proferred as prizes, but that whatever sum may be collected during the ensuing year will be equitably distributed among the successful contestants. The Trustees re-elected as members of their body President McCosh, of Princeton, and Cyrus W. Field, Esq., and chose President Alexander S. Webb to fill the place of George W. Curtis, Esq. These gentlemen will hold their positions for the ensuing three years.

At the meeting of the association, which represented were the College of the City of New-York, Madison, Cornell, New-York University, Northwestern University, Princeton, Rutgers, Wesleyan, and Williams, general satisfaction was expressed at the flattering prospects of the association as a promoter of higher education, and it was unanimously decided to continue the present modes of proceeding with a view to the original intent of some of its founders. The University of Pennsylvania was admitted to membership through its representatives, Profs. H. S. Jeffreys and H. F. Gest. Alexander S. Webb was elected President of the Association; Harold Godwin, of Princeton, Vice-President; Charlton T. Lewis, Treasurer, and H. B. McCaulay, Jr., Secretary pro tem. Committees for the ensuing year were appointed, and the meeting then adjourned.

THE ORATORICAL CONTEST.

An audience not over numerous, but thoroughly appreciative, gathered in Steinway Hall last evening to sit in judgment upon the young orators who, as representatives of their different colleges, were to contest the association prize for elocution. Good-natured and general applause was the order of the hour, and a hearty welcome greeted alike the visitor and the resident. Among the prominent gentlemen in the audience and on the stage were Profs. Lewis, of Madison, and Spencer, of the College of the City of New-York; Father Anthony, of Manhattan College; Profs. Austin Abbott, of Harvard; Short, of Columbia, and Martin, of the University of New-York. Rev. Drs. Schaff, Prime, McCosh, and Patton; Profs. Doolittle and Docharty, and Messrs. John Taylor Johnston and Henry Bergh. The stage-boxes were occupied by members of Psi Upsilon and Delta Kappa Epsilon Societies. The music was supplied by Grafulla's Band.

The exercises were opened with prayer by Rev. Dr. Prime's invocation. President Alexander S. Webb, President, Webb declared a short address, in which he complimented the educational success of the association, and promised to watch over its future interests. The oratorical contest followed the President's speech, and was inaugurated by the following young collegians, each of whom acquitted himself with credit and gained well-merited applause: C. W. Holden, Wesleyan University, Class of '79, who spoke upon "The Union of Architecture;" A. C. Wakley, Cornell, '78, "The Satan of Milton and the Mephistopheles of Goethe;" A. H. Trick, Williams, '79, "Hamlet and his Soliloquy;" W. T. Sedgwick, Princeton, '79, "Hebrew Poetry;" J. S. McWilliam, College of the City of New-York, '78, "A Modern Knight;" W. H. Harris, North-western University, '78, "The Duty of the Scholar in American Politics;" Seaman Miller, Rutgers, '79, "Political Scholar;" A. K. Fuller, Madison University, '79, "Cowardice in Journalism," and J. A. McColl, University of the City of New-York, '79, "The Turkish Character." The oratorical exercises were followed by the report of the judges in Greek, which stated that the average standing of the students was higher than that any previous year. The first prize they awarded to George C. Wetmore, of University of New-York. For the second prize the contest was so close that equal honors were accorded to J. A. Haight, Cornell, and J. W. Nauree, Wesleyan. The judges in Latin gave the first prize to the only contestant, George Abner Williams, Madison, whose record they highly complimented. The judges in mathematics gave the first prize to A. S. Hathaway, Cornell, and second prize to W. Prentiss, Rutgers. Tremendous applause greeted the announcement of each successful name, the home boys and those from Cornell getting the lion's share. The judges gave their decision made their report, deciding that the laurels should be given first to W. T. Elsing, of Princeton, and second to C. W. Holden, of the Wesleyan University. After a benediction by Rev. Dr. Martin the exercises closed, but the college men made the hall ring for some time longer with cheers for their victorious comrades.

THE MAJOR RENO INQUIRY.

CHICAGO, Jan. 10.—The Court of Inquiry on the case of Major Reno, which will convene Monday, is the prevailing topic of discussion in military circles. The court is composed of Col. John H. King, Ninth Infantry; Col. Wesley Merritt, Fifth Cavalry, and Lieut.-Col. W. B. Royall, Third Cavalry. First Lieut. Jesse M. Lee, Adjutant of the Ninth Infantry, will act as Recorder. The court will convene Monday morning at about 11 o'clock, in the Palmer House. Major Reno arrived in the city this afternoon, and expressed himself as confident that the inquiry would result in clearing his reputation of the slur cast upon it after the Custer massacre. The officers at head-quarters express the same belief as to the result.

ARMY OPINIONS ON SCHURZ'S REPLY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 10.—The reply of Secretary Schurz, published to-day, was received in military circles with absolute satisfaction. As one of the officers expressed it, "Schurz is sophistical and sarcastic, but he lets facts severely alone." Gen. Sheridan expressed much the same opinion, and the impression is that the Secretary had made a very poor showing in his attempt to answer Gen. Sheridan's charges. Far from being an unanswerable answer, the officers of the staff consider it as a practical confession of the statements made by the Army.

THREE PERSONS MURDERED.

GALVESTON, Jan. 10.—A dispatch to the News from Uvalde this morning says William Thompson, a large sheep owner, was found dead in his camp with several bullet-holes in his head and body. To-night the bodies of his two herders, who were suspected of the murder, were found. Each had been shot through the back. There is no clue to the assassins.

THE BELL-PUNCH IN WEST VIRGINIA.

WHEELING, West Va., Jan. 10.—A resolution for establishing a bell-punch for the liquor dealers was offered in the Legislature by Mr. Snider to-day. The machine is to be like the McFatt bell-punch. The moneys arising from its use will be appropriated to the internal improvement fund. The resolution was referred to a committee.

FAILURE OF A FARMER.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 10.—One of the largest farmers in Madison County made an assignment to-day to John A. Duncan for the benefit of his creditors, giving up all his property, consisting of 874 acres of the finest lands lying within 15 miles of Richmond, a large quantity of live stock, notes, &c., which will make his assets about $60,000. His liabilities are estimated at about $75,000.

NOT THE PLACE FOR STUDYING LAW.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—At a meeting of the Board of Regents of the University to-day, it was determined to enforce the concurrent resolution of the Legislature of 1861, prohibiting the use of the Law Department of the State Library as a study hall for law students.

COMMODORE GUEST DYING.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., Jan. 10.—The condition of Commodore Guest, the commandant of this Navy-yard, has changed for the worse since noon. There is no hope of his recovery.

SENATOR JONES NOMINATED IN NEVADA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 10.—The Republican Senators and Assemblymen of the Nevada Legislature, at joint caucus, last night nominated John P. Jones for United States Senator.

FRIDAY, Jan. 10—P. M.

On the Stock Exchange to-day there was some increase in the volume of business, with the bulk of the trading again in Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, Erie, Lake Shore, and the Granger shares. In the early dealings the entire list of active stocks declined ⅛ to 1⅜ ₱ cent. under a full pressure to sell. Pacific Mail led the downward movement, the recent report of the company having exerted an unfavorable influence on the stock. Subsequently a steadier tone prevailed, but outside of Pittsburg and the coal shares the recovery which ensued was slight. Pittsburg was a notable feature in the dealings, recording an advance of 2⅛ ₱ cent., and closing at the highest point. Among the coal shares, Delaware, Lackawanna and Western and Morris and Essex advanced about 1 ₱ cent. each on the day's transactions. Erie was steadily supported and the indications are abundant that the stock is passing into strong hands. The recent purchasing movement in the shares found its explanation to-day on the appearance of the report of the Board of Directors for the four months from June 1, 1878, to Sept. 30, 1878. The report shows gross earnings of $5,192,681 and net earnings of $1,930,480, or, deducting rentals of leased lines, &c., $1,571,950; and after the payment of $743,404 interest on funded debt a net profit of $828,546. On this basis, if it can be sustained, the company will be in a position henceforward to pay the interest on its whole funded debt and have a surplus applicable to dividends. It must be kept in mind that the third fall, the laying of which has for some time interfered with the operations of the company, will now prove of immense advantage, both in the way of economy and increased facilities. The early completion of the connection of the road with Boston will, it is believed, enable it to compete with its rivals on not unequal terms, and add materially to its receipts. A very gratifying feature of the report is the reduction of the expenses, which under the old management were 74 ₱ cent., to 62 ₱ cent. Hopes are entertained that a still further reduction can be effected.

The transactions aggregated 138,292 shares, including 40,740 Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, 19,809 North-western, 19,720 St. Paul, 17,325 Erie, 10,375 Lake Shore, 5,765 Pittsburg, 4,300 Pacific Mail, 4,240 St. Louis, Kansas and Northern, 3,000 Michigan Central, 2,500 Morris and Essex, 1,400 Wabash, 1,400 Iron Mountain, and 1,000 Western Union.

Delaware, Lackawanna and Western fell off from 44⅛ to 43⅞ and rose to 44⅞. Morris and Essex advanced from 75⅛ to 76¾. Delaware and Hudson from 93⅝ to 93¾, and New-Jersey Central from 34⅜ to 34⅝. Western Union common rose from 81¼ to 81⅝, declined to 81⅜ and closed at 81¼. The preferred fell off from 79 to 78⅝, and rallied to 78¾. St. Paul common rose to 25⅜, dropped to 24¾, and recovered to 25¼. The preferred advanced from 76⅜ to 76⅝, declined to 75¾, and rallied to 76¼. Erie sold mixed from 22⅜ to 22⅝, fell off to 22⅛, and finally sold up to 22⅝ ₱ cent. 22¾. Lake Shore declined from 67¼ to 67⅛, and rose to 67⅜. Michigan Central dropped from 77¼ to 76⅞, and closed at 77⅛. Canada Southern sold at 46⅝ @ 46¾. Wabash declined from 21 to 20⅝. Union Pacific rose to 66⅛, and declined to 65⅞. Middle Island broke from 11⅝ to 11¼, and recovered to 11⅝. Western Union rose from 95¼ to 95⅜, and declined to 95. Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph sold at 31⅜ @ 31⅝. Among investment shares Pittsburg advanced from 87½ to 89⅜. New-York Central sold at 113¼, Lake Shore 119½, Harlem at 141, and Illinois Central at 81⅞. Express shares were quiet and steady.

The Money market was easy, the ruling rates for call loans being 2 @ 2½ ₱ cent. on Government bonds and at 3 @ 3½ ₱ cent. on railway and miscellaneous collaterals. Discounts are unchanged. Sterling exchange is firm, the rates of exchange on New-York at the undermentioned cities to-day: Savannah, buying, ⅛ offered, selling, par @ ⅛ premium; Charleston, buying, 3-16 @ ¼ discount, selling, ⅛ @ par; New-Orleans, commercial, ¼ @ 5-16, bank, ⅛; St. Louis, 50 premium; Chicago, firm, buying, 1-10 discount, selling, 1-10 premium; and Boston, 2½ premium.

The foreign advices reported the London market for securities quiet. Consols advanced ⅛ ₱ cent., but subsequently lost the improvement, closing at 95⅝ @ 95¾ for both money and the account. United States bonds were ⅛ ₱ cent. higher, 4½s selling at 107⅞, 6s at 109¾, 1867's at 103⅞ @ 104, and 10-40s at 110¾ @ 110⅞. New-Jersey Central declined 1 ₱ cent., to 34½, and Erie ⅛ ₱ cent., to 22½, but the latter closed at 22⅝. Erie preferred was firm at 37½, and Illinois Central at 84. At Paris, Rentes advanced to 113f. 60c.

The Sterling Exchange market was firm and underwent special influences, as well as considerable business, rates were advanced 1c. on both 60-day and demand bills, which are quoted respectively at $4 84 and $4 88. Speculators now do not fear the "Gold Room" operations, and as money is cheap here, as well as tending to lower rates abroad, Sterling can be carried so as to leave difference of interest in their favor, besides any advance which may take place in rates.

Government bonds were firm, the leading feature having been a further improvement of ⅛ ₱ cent. in currency 6's, which sold as high as 120¼. The leading dealers report a continued active demand for the new United States 4 ₱ cents. In railroad mortgages the transactions footed up $1,573,000, of which $688,000 were in Metropolitan Elevated Firsts, which advanced from 97⅝ to 99, and reacted to 98⅜. Next in importance were New-Jersey Central Consol. Firsts, associated with rose from 75 to 75¼, $159,000 changing hands. The improvement in the remainder of the list ranged from ¼ to 2 ₱ cent., the Toledo and Wabash issues being again conspicuous in the improvement, St. Louis Division 4s matured coupons, selling at 96 @ 96½, Kansas and Pacific 6s, and consolidated convertibles to 69½, Missouri, Kansas and Texas consolidated Assented rose from 51⅜ to 52, fell off to 51¼, and rallied to 51⅜. Central Pacifics advanced to 106⅞, Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern Firsts to 70¾, Chicago and North-western consolidated sinking fund 7's, Great Western Sevens, old coupon, to 84½; St. Paul consolidated Sinking Funds to 100¼, Hannibal and St. Joseph convertibles to 103½, Ohio and Mississippi Seconds to 76½, Chicago, St. Paul and Minneapolis Land Grant income to 43¼, North Missouri Firsts to 106, New-Jersey Central consolidated Sevens, Cincinnati and Springfield Firsts to 79, and C., C. & I. C. Firsts to 59⅞. Do. Seconds fell off to 18, Central Pacific, San Joaquin Branch, to 96½; New-York Elevated Firsts to 104¾, Denver and Rio Grande Firsts to 92½, and Alton and Terre Haute Income to 42. State bonds were quiet, except for Louisiana Consols, which broke from 64½ to 62⅜, recovering only ¼ @ ⅜ at the close. Missouri 6s of 1887 sold at 104¼, do. of 1886 at 104, and Hannibal and St. Joseph, issue of 1887, at 103½. Sales of North Carolina Funding Act of 1866 were made at 14⅝ @ 14⅞.

The imports of dry goods at the port of New-York for the past week were $642,278, and the amount marketed, $735,197. The total imports of dry goods since Jan. 1 were $1,919,097, and the amount marketed, $1,785,437.

The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for to-day, in this region, stationary or rising temperature; rising, followed by stationary or falling, barometer; cloudy weather, with frequent light rain or snow, south and west winds.

Mr. POTTER will, to-day, ask the House to confer on his committee power to investigate the "alleged dispatches in cypher" which have been published, "indicating that attempts were made, after the Presidential election of 1876, to influence by money or other fraudulent methods the votes of Electors or the action of Returning Officers in the States of Louisiana, Florida, South Carolina, and Oregon." The doubt as to the authority of the committee to investigate these dispatches, without further instructions, appears to be rather far-fetched. But Mr. POTTER and his friends may be excused for taking the subject up gingerly, and for leaving untried no loophole of escape from the discharge of a decidedly unwelcome duty.

The House Committee on Banking and Currency has not yet reached a decision in regard to Mr. HEWITT'S bill providing for the interconvertibility of silver and gold coins, and for the repeal of so much of the Silver law as directs the coinage of any fixed amount per month. The latter provision commends the bill to the advocates of honest money, but is, of course, an insuperable objection to statesmen of the Buckner type. It seems probable, however, that some votes can be drawn from the silver men by amending the Hewitt bill so as to permit the coinage of standard dollars to the amount of 50,000,000, leaving their further issue to be determined solely by the public demand for them. The strength of the uncompromising silver men in the House will be ascertained when Mr. BUCKNER makes his motion to take up his own bill under a suspension of the rules. Unless that motion receives an unexpected amount of support, there ought to be a fair chance for the adoption of such a compromise as is likely to be reported from the Banking Committee.

Commissioner RAUM'S statement before the Senate Finance Committee as to the effect on the revenue of the proposed reduction of the tobacco tax ought to give the House bill its final quietus. A proposal to surrender eleven millions of revenue for the benefit of a few tobacco manufacturers could never have been entertained by any body of legislators who were not equally reckless and ignorant. When the country can afford to curtail its revenues, the tax on tobacco should be one of the last subjects for reduction. The folly of throwing away the easily-collected tea and coffee duties would rank as wisdom beside the surrender of a very large slice of the revenue now collected from cigars and tobacco. It is to be hoped that the House bill will be effectually disposed of by the Senate Committee.

Register LOEW'S defense of the illegal scale of charges established in his office is very characteristic of the loose methods of our public service. Mr. LOEW had occupied the Bench for 12 years, and yet on taking charge of a highly-important branch of Municipal business, he made no effort to become acquainted with the law which he had undertaken to obey, but followed, without question, the illegal course of his predecessors. His deputy took from a former deputy a list of what had passed for legal rates of charge in the Register's office, and the old employés went on doing their work with the customary disregard of any other consideration but that of taking the maximum of fees for the minimum of work. If a defense like this can save Register LOEW from removal, the sooner we abolish all elective heads of public departments the better. Let the men who do the work take the fees, with their present immunity from responsibility, and let the officers who neither accept work nor responsibility be dispensed with.

There were two judicial hangings yesterday, and both of these were barbarous. At Camden, N. J., HUNTER not only suffered the extreme penalty due to his crime, but he was put to death by an experimental apparatus. The Sheriff thought to try hanging by a novel process which should dispense with the trap and scaffold. The result was a death by strangulation at which the bystanders assisted, rather than that the man should not be hanged at all. In Quebec, FARRELL, a condemned murderer, was put to death in a similarly bungling manner. The poor wretch was allowed to clasp the noose in such a way that his executioner was compelled to shake him off after the trap had fallen. Such atrocious blunders as these furnish arguments for those who favor the abolition of capital punishment. Hanging is one of the institutions of civilization. But civilization has not, it would appear, yet taught us how to hang men properly.

THE ELECTORAL BILLS.

It is reported from Washington that Mr. SOUTHARD, of Ohio, will make a special effort to secure the passage of his bill, presented in May last, with reference to counting the Electoral votes, in place of that passed by the Senate last month, which came from a special committee of which Mr. EDMUNDS was Chairman. A careful analysis of the two bills discloses some considerable differences, but none which are in favor of Mr. SOUTHARD'S. In the first place, to those who desire to see this matter settled before next year, it must be plain that as Mr. EDMUNDS' bill is already half way on its road to the statute book, having received the approval of the Senate, it stands a much better chance of reaching the goal than Mr. SOUTHARD'S, which is hardly more than started, having only a favorable report to the House to begin with. Even if Mr. SOUTHARD'S bill be passed by the House, it has still the ordeal of the Senate to meet, and the very light vote and languid interest which were remarked in the Senate when its own bill was up, are indications that a new bill will find great difficulty in being even reached, much less adopted. We have no desire to impute ulterior motives to our political opponents without reason, but if they wished to keep the Electoral count question open, they could not choose a more promising method than to complicate it by antagonizing the Senate bill by that of Mr. SOUTHARD. In 1881 they expect to have a working majority in the Senate and the House, and they may think it to their advantage, if they were capable of taking that view of the question, to leave the count in the position which it now occupies or to still more confuse it. They will have only themselves to blame if such a motive is attributed to them to explain the action which is now discussed.

Some of the differences between the Edmunds and Southard bills are as follows: The former fixes the Presidential election on the first Tuesday in October, or, usually, one month in advance of the present date; the latter leaves the date as now, the Tuesday after the first Monday in November. The former requires the Electors to meet the second Monday in January, thus allowing an interval of a little more than three months for the settlement o any dispute which may arise as to the title of Electors; the latter requires the Electors to meet on the second Monday in December, leaving only from 30 to 35 days for that purpose. Mr. EDMUNDS' bill enacts that each State may by law provide for the trial and determination of any controversy concerning the appointment of Electors, before the time fixed for the meeting of the Electors, in any manner it may deem expedient; Mr. SOUTHARD'S bill provides that if there shall be any controversy in any State as to the appointment or eligibility of Electors, the same may be passed upon by its highest judicial tribunal in accordance with its laws; the decision thereof shall be certified by such tribunal, and shall be by it transmitted sealed to the seat of Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. This, we presume, is regarded by Mr. SOUTHARD as the essential point on which difference exists between his proposed bill and the Senate bill. The difference does not seem to us to be a very important one, and, indeed, we are inclined to the opinion that the Senate bill embraces all that Mr. SOUTHARD'S bill contains and somewhat more. If any State has already, or shall have, provided for the settlement of disputes as to its Electors by its highest judicial tribunal, it will have met the conditions of the Senate bill. If, on the other hand, it has provided for the settlement of such dispute by some other special or inferior tribunal, or by its Legislature, or by any executive board, and not by its highest judicial tribunal, its decision would be respected under the Senate bill, but not under Mr. SOUTHARD'S.

It is, however, when we come to the disposition of the State returns by the two houses of Congress that Mr. SOUTHARD'S bill seems to us to contain provisions, some of which are blind or doubtful, and others highly dangerous. First, we have the case of one undisputed return from a State, which both bills provide shall be counted unless rejected by both houses, the presumption being, of course, that such rejection shall be based on some invalidity in the return itself or in the action or status of the State. Second, we have the case of two or more returns, one of which shall have been decided by the State tribunal to be regular. As to this case, the Senate bill requires that that return, and that only, shall be counted which is shown to have been accepted by the State tribunal. Mr. SOUTHARD'S bill, on the contrary, declares that "if in any State there be any controversy as to the appointment or eligibility of Electors, the decision thereof by its highest judicial tribunal shall be conclusive, unless reversed by both houses." Here we have a power given to the two houses to override the most solemn decision of the State tribunal, for any reason which to them may seem proper. We know of no authority in the Constitution for any such action. To make this curious grant of power the more certain, we have the following provision: "If there be more than one decision, each purporting to be by the highest court of the same State, the decision held by both houses to be that of the lawful tribunal shall be conclusive unless reversed by both houses." That is to say, the two houses may not only reverse an undisputed decision, but may decide which of two disputed decisions is that of the lawful tribunal, and may then reverse that.

Third, we have the case of two or more returns, sustained by two or more State tribunals. Both bills provide that neither return shall be counted unless both houses concur. Finally, we have the case of two or more disputed returns, neither sustained by a State tribunal. In this case, also, both bills provide that neither return shall be counted without the affirmative action of both houses, though the language of the Southard bill is by no means so clear on this point as it might be.

It will be seen that the effect and purpose of the Southard bill are to increase the powers of the two houses of Congress, and to subvert the rights of the States. This is so entirely contrary to all democratic doctrine, and to every impulse of patriotism as well, that it may fairly be explained by gross partisanship—an explanation to which Mr. Senator BAYARD, according to our dispatches, lends his great authority.

THE PATENT BILL.

The debate in the Senate on the revision of the Patent law, and the testimony of the numerous experts given before the Senate and House committees, show that the patent system of this country is firmly rooted in popular favor. In Europe there is some diversity of opinion as to whether Patent laws are for the public good. Few patents are issued in Germany, and the applications which are rejected are far more numerous than those which are granted. In England, as well as on the Continent, the abolition of the patent system has found earnest advocates. But in this country the justice and expediency of a law for the protection and encouragement of inventions have been universally conceded, and to the operation of such a law has been chiefly attributed the recognized supremacy of the United States in almost every department of industry where supremacy can be won by invention.

The bill now before the Senate has been carefully drawn by experts with the view of remedying some grave defects which experience has brought to light in the existing law. Its leading provisions have been pretty generally approved by those who have had much experience in this branch of the law, and who represent various interests affected by it. Two important features of the bill which are new to this country, provide for the limitation of the time for bringing actions and the periodical payment of fees in order to keep the patent alive. There is now no statute of limitations applicable to patent cases, and hence the owner of a patent has it in his power to sue for an infringement a dozen or more years old. The hardships to which the public are exposed under such a law are obvious. It is generally acknowledged that some limitation is desirable, and various periods, ranging from one to six years, have been suggested. That which has received the most general approval, and which has been put into the bill, is four years. The provision which requires that an additional fee of $50 shall be paid at the end of four years, and another of $100 at the end of nine years, from the date of the original grant, in order to keep the patent in force, will work a radical change in the patent system of this country, and will doubtless cause no little dissatisfaction among the authors of cheap inventions and their assignees. But it is the feature of the present bill for whose adoption the patent doctors have been most in accord. It is common in Europe, where it is thought to be productive of the best results. In England, £50 must be paid at the end of three, and £100 at the end of seven years, these fees being five times larger than those now proposed for this country. The recent imperial law of Germany makes the payment of annual fees essential to the continuance of a patent. The adoption by Congress of the periodical fee system will have the effect, as THE TIMES has already shown, of killing off a great mass of worthless patents which are not deserving of protection. But it will lead to still better results by clearing out the numerous "obstructive patents" which have never served any other purpose than to retard the progress of useful invention, and to afford to "patent sharks" the means of harassing the community with mischievous litigation.

One of the most general complaints brought against the present law relates to the reissue of patents. The justice and expediency of granting reissues are generally conceded. By some defect or error in the application, a patent often fails to cover the invention or discovery for which it is granted, and hence does not secure to the patentee the complete protection to which he is entitled. Or, if the claim proves to be broader than the invention, the patent becomes void. In such case, "if the error has arisen by inadvertence, accident, or mistake, and without any fraudulent or deceptive intention," the law wisely provides for a surrender of the original patent and the issue of a new one. In theory, a reissue must be for the precise thing originally invented and described in the original application, and can not be made to include any feature or principle not embodied in the original invention. A reissue of this kind properly secures to the patentee the protection to which he was entitled from the start. But fraudulent reissues and other abuses, which have grown up under this provision have given rise to more complaints than all the rest of the Patent law. Although the patents reissued are only about 4 per cent. of those granted, the greater part of the litigation about patent rights has grown out of reissues. Patent lawyers agree as to the defects of the law in this respect, but they differ as to the best means of remedying them. Many of the abuses complained of have been attributed to the fact that the law allows the Patent Office model to be used in the preparation of the amended specification for a reissue, instead of confining the applicant to the original description and drawings. The patent is granted for the invention described in the papers filed in the Patent Office. The model forms no part of the patent, or of the application, and is not published to the world. Its object is simply to illustrate or "exhibit advantageously," what is claimed in the application. The serious objection which has been brought against its use in granting reissues is that it may easily be made to show features and principles not embodied in the original invention, or indicated in the original description. The bill now before the Senate provides for changing the law on this point by cutting off the applicant from the use of the model in his application for a reissue.

Another grievance which has grown out of the existing practice relating to reissues is the hardship often imposed upon the public by the retroactive operation of the statute in cases of infringement. As the law now stands, a patentee may take out a patent which does not fully cover his invention. But, until it is amended, he is bound by it, and any part of his invention which is not covered by the patent is open to public use. Under these circumstances, inventions may be made and machines constructed and put into operation without infringing any existing patent. But by a reissue the scope of the original patent may be enlarged and suits for infringement brought against innocent persons for using what they had a right to make. It is true that in such case damages or profits cannot be recovered under the reissue for what was not an infringement of the original patent. But machinery lawfully made and put into operation may be stopped and mills closed by an injunction. It is now proposed to remedy this evil by providing that any machine or article made before the reissue, and which did not infringe the original patent, shall not be held to be an infringement of the new patent.

"FEE TAKING" IN GEORGIA.

There are indications that the bitterness of feeling which was occasioned among the Democratic leaders in Georgia by Senator "BEN" HILL'S statement reflecting upon the official integrity of Gov. COLQUITT will be followed by more enduring results than was at first believed. It will be remembered that Senator HILL'S accusation was in substance that the Governor had been induced by a money consideration to give Executive indorsement to certain bonds of the North-eastern Railway Company. This was not the first charge of what may be called crookedness in money matters which had been brought against Georgia's Democratic chief magistrate. In connection with that distinguished last-ditcher, Senator GORDON, he had previously been accused of obtaining several thousand dollars from one of the Atlanta banks in a way which, to speak in the mildest possible terms, was not honorable. Doubtless having this transaction still in mind, the Legislature was not slow in granting the Governor's request that a committee be appointed to inquire into the charges which had been made against him by Senator HILL. Unfortunately for those who desired to know the truth in regard to the matter, however, the committee, after it had been chosen, was found to consist entirely of the Governor's friends, and there is only too much reason to believe that the examination, so called, was from the first under his control, and the finding of the committee made up at his dictation. At all events, it was declared with the necessary flourish of trumpets that Gov. COLQUITT was a pure-minded patriot and reformer, as every good White League leader should be, and that he had never corruptly accepted money from any one. Mr. MURPHY, however, the Private Secretary to the Governor could not escape so easily, for, though the investigation was conducted with becoming secrecy so long as secrecy was necessary, it could not be concealed that he had received what was politely called "a fee" as a reward for presenting the case of the railway company in the proper light before his Excellency, Gov. COLQUITT. Though the Private Secretary was found guilty to this extent, however, the friends of both COLQUITT and Senator GORDON rejoiced greatly that the Governor had escaped public disgrace; that is to say, disgrace in the eyes of Georgia Democrats. So it was believed the matter would rest, but such has not proved to be the case.

Mr. A. O. BACON, the Speaker of the Georgia Assembly, has recently printed a letter protesting against certain assertions—of local importance only—which, appeared in the reports of the investigation, had been made regarding him by Senator HILL. To this the Senator now replies by admitting the truth of what Mr. BACON says. At the same time, however, he takes the opportunity of presenting Mr. MURPHY with what may be called "a piece of his mind," and of giving a good deal of timely advice in regard to the general practice of "fee taking" in Georgia. It seems from his letter, and from other information on the same subject, that it has long been the custom in that reformed Democratic State for public officials, members of the Legislature, and others, who were at the same time lawyers, to take "fees" for appearing before the Governor and advocating, or in other words, using their influence in the interest of corporations or individuals who had business before him. It is, of course, unnecessary to point out the many evils which inevitably result from such a system. Attorneys having no official connection with the State Government might appear before the Executive or the Legislature for the purpose of influencing action upon public or private business, and accept money for such service without being accused of corrupt practices. In this part of the country, the man who engages to any great extent in such business is not usually surprised to hear himself spoken of as a member of the "lobby." According to "BOB" TOOMBS, however, there is no lobby in connection with the Georgia Capitol, and, of course, none of the eminent Democrats who influence legislation in that State, can be accused of belonging to "the third house."

Still, Senator HILL, who certainly has every opportunity of knowing all about the matter, expresses himself as being strongly opposed to what he calls the injurious custom of allowing lawyers to practice for fees before either the Legislative or Executive Department of the Government. He further urges that the Colquitt-Murphy investigation has developed the necessity for the passage of a law prohibiting such practice. Of course, this proposition has aroused a storm of virtuous indignation among the honorable gentlemen who make a snug living by hanging about the State-house in Atlanta, and by them Senator HILL is denounced as a traitor to his party and his friends. There is reason to believe that Gov. COLQUITT is not at all displeased at this demonstration against "his ancient enemy," and there is no doubt that his influence, together with that of the lobby, will be effectual in defeating any effort which may be made to carry out the very sensible suggestion made by Senator HILL.

TOBACCO FOR BOYS.

In the National Academy for the education of officers for the Navy a license to smoke and chew tobacco has been given. Not only so, but it has been given in a spirit of levity and with an impress of ignorance which are not creditable to the commanding officer. When Commodore PARKER lately issued permission for the naval Cadets to use tobacco, he said that he had concluded to grant "the privilege" against the opinion of many people for whom he entertained the highest respect. But, as smoking was an expensive practice, he thought that the boys who did not use tobacco had better not contract the habit. It was really a question of poisoning, and this unthinking Superintendent treated it as a mere matter of spending money. The boy who smokes cigars or chews tobacco poisons himself. This is absolutely true, and the teacher who does not know it is unfit to be trusted with the charge and government of boys. He who permissively encourages boys to smoke or chew is a corrupter of youth. Among the charges employed to excite popular fury against a certain eminent citizen of Greece, and to bring him to death, was that he corrupted the youth of the Republic. As human nature is constituted, the charge was sure to obtain a hearing. If believed, it was equally sure to bring the judgment that the accused was a public enemy and unfit to live.

In this advanced stage of progress in all that brings us knowledge of the strength and weakness of the physiology of man, an officer of our paternal Government encourages the youth in his charge to follow a practice which must needs be deadly to mind and body. The chances of our ever receiving from the Academy at Annapolis any sailors of the pattern of TRUXTON, BAINBRIDGE, PAUL JONES, DECATUR, LAWRENCE, and PERRY are not great. Thorough sailors cannot possibly be made in schoolhouses on shore. But even these few chances are lessened by the inculcation of a vice which is sure to impair the activity and clearness of the intellect, the firmness of the nerves, the strength of the digestion, the retentiveness of the memory, the soundness of the vision, and the bodily vigor of every lad in the misgoverned Academy at Annapolis. It is too late to enlarge upon the evil effects of tobacco upon the immature man. Science long ago fixed beyond doubt or controversy the numerous symptoms of the presence of this poison. These have been classified by all schools of medicine. The medical literature of what is called "the regular school," in England and France, treating of the diseases of modern society, gives large space to the evil results flowing from the use of tobacco. HAHNEMANN, and his school, give pages which are crowded with proofs of the disastrous effects of nicotine upon the human system. It is the prolific cause of deadly paralysis.

What we have here said is not to be construed as the radical and extreme view which comes out of a crusade like that of TRASK or WIETING. Commodore PARKER proposes that the boys of the naval school shall be permitted to smoke and chew tobacco. They might not have been so licensed at home. The Government of the United States, taking them from the conservative nurture of the family, says, "Boys, if you have pocket-money enough to buy cigars and chewing-tobacco, indulge yourselves." The tenderness of the age of these lads, the immaturity of their constitutions, must be borne in mind by those whose attention is called to the destructive character of the permissive encouragement given them by Commodore PARKER. His possible defense that cigar-smoking does not hurt him does not touch the case. He is a mature and vigorous man. He has carried thus far up toward the retired list the vitality to react against unhealthful indulgences. But it is safe to say that when he was "in the gristle," in the school-boy age, he was not under the charge of a teacher who encouraged or permitted him to smoke and chew tobacco. If this had been true of him, he would have long since been on the retired list, or his widow would now be on the pension rolls of the naval service.

Unquestionably, one of the most lamentable evils which afflict the rising generation flows from the early use of tobacco. Street boys who are not yet out of child's clothes snatch the discarded stubs of cigars of grown men and smoke them in apish imitation of their elders. Lads at school acquire a taste for tobacco by surreptitiously smoking cigarettes—cigarettes which have done more to demoralize and vitiate youth than all the dram-shops of the land. Evil education has two corruptions: the corruption of the body and the corruption of the soul. The bodily mechanism of boys of 16, 17, 18, and 19 years of age can be as thoroughly injured by insidious poisons as they can be soiled by wicked teaching. What manner of men shall they be, when this generation is grown, if lads of every degree shall be taught to use tobacco? What hope for posterity when the children of to-day are poisoned and dwarfed by a pernicious habit?

In the interest of the public service, so long as our Navy shall be permitted to exist, the Naval Committee of the House of Representatives, or of the Senate, should consider how best to correct this miseducation of the youths at Annapolis. To the national authorities has been temporarily intrusted the care of these young lads. It is a trust which should not be administered thoughtlessly or in a spirit of levity. The fathers and mothers of these boys, knowing the danger to which their sons are exposed, should intervene to save the health and strength of their children, by urging Congress to do its duty.

The English people are beginning to recognise the fact that live cattle and dead meat brought across thousands of miles of ocean, under improved processes, will continue to reach them in great quantities, and that the price of meat is pretty sure to fall rather than to rise, so long as they have uninterrupted communication with the great cattle-producing centres, of which this country is the chief. In a lecture upon over-production, delivered not long since at Bristol, a member of the British Parliament told his delighted hearers that the period was rapidly approaching when the price of meat would be approximately equalized in every part of the world. There is no doubt that the trade in beef between North and South America and Europe is as yet only in its infancy, while, vast as have been the exports from this country to England and the Continent during the last twelve months, there is every reason to believe that they will be immeasurably increased in the future. Nor have Americans longer any need to complain that they cannot obtain on the other side of the Atlantic certain dishes which we are all more or less accustomed to at home. For instance, the trade in canned provisions has hitherto attained but a very small portion of the development which it is certain soon to reach. The skill and extraordinary cheapness with which our manufacturers continue to send our transatlantic kinsmen canned provisions are deserving of the high commendation which the English public have pronounced. It may sound rather odd, perhaps, but it is true nevertheless, that American plum pudding, which, as a comestible, is a formidable rival to the best pudding of the kind prepared in English kitchens, may now be bought at a dozen shops in London at less than half the cost of its foreign brother. As regards peaches, pears, apples, pineapples, quinces, pumpkins, peas, green corn, asparagus, tomatoes, corned beef, buckwheat, hominy, and a dozen other products, not forgetting oysters, lobsters, shrimps, and clams, there is no end to the supply of them. It is gratifying to add that one of the largest houses dealing in this particular kind of American products, are decidedly of the opinion that all these things are sure to be exported during the present year in vastly-increased quantities.

It is always with a slight feeling of anxiety that we read about heavy snow-storms in this country, for we know that they mean, or may mean, the stopping of traffic at this point or that. So much the more curious it is, when opening a Norwegian newspaper, to meet with passages like this: "Fortunately, we have had much snow in this part of the country, and there is good hope that it now will remain solid on the ground for the season." But in Norway the snow is itself a means of traffic, and that an important one. When the snow fails, the lumber trade, for instance, one of the most important branches of the industry of the country, is seriously embarrassed. The trees are felled during Fall and Winter, and those huge, giant trunks which it would be next to impossible to transport in the Summer time over the steep, rugged ground, where horses cannot be employed, are in Winter time drawn easily along on the smooth, solid surface of the frozen snow. Tied together in immense bundles, they are thrown down in the dry river-bed, and when Spring comes and the snow melts, the bundles are carried down by the stream to the very gates of the lumber-yard. Thus, the snow, which to us is an impediment, is to the Norwegians an aid, and it is even something much more, for it is, indeed, one of the great national poets of the country. It makes the houses so warm and so cozy; it makes the landscape so soft and so mild; and it makes people so merry and full of new plans and new ideas, for it brings them together. Neighbors who, in Summer time, cannot visit each other because the journey along the bad roads—which creep in zigzag through the glens, along the clefts, over the peaks—takes two or three days, can now reach each other in a few hours, setting out on their snow-shoes or in the light sledges drawn by reindeer, in a straight line, across the glens, the clefts, the peaks, everything being buried under the snow or bridged over by it.

English Prime Ministers are a long-lived class. Since 1800 there have been 18. Of these, but one, PITT, was a bachelor, and he died, the youngest of the list, at the age of 46. Then came, in point of age, Spencer Perceval, assassinated at 50; then Canning, who died at 57. Sir Robert Peel died, aged 62, in consequence of a fall from his horse. Of the rest, Lord Sidmouth, who quitted office as Premier in 1804, died at 87 in 1844. Lord Grenville left office in 1807, and died, aged 75, in 1834. The Duke of Portland died at 71. Lord Liverpool, whose administration was by far the longest—15 years—died at 58. Viscount Goderich father of the present Marquis of Ripon, resigned office in January, 1828, and died in 1859, aged 67. The Duke of Wellington quitted office in November, 1830, and died in 1852, aged 83. Earl Grey left office in 1834, and died in 1845, aged 81. Viscount Melbourne left office, the second term of tenure, September, 1841, and died, aged 69, in 1848. Earl Russell resigned the Premiership last in July, 1866, and died in 1877, aged 85. Lord Derby was last in office in June, 1859, and died in 1869, aged 70. The Earl of Aberdeen resigned office in February, 1855, and died at the age of 76 in 1860. Viscount Palmerston died in office in November, 1865, aged 81. Lord Beaconsfield was 74 on the 21st of last month, and on the 29th Mr. Gladstone was 70. Of these 18 Ministers, nine have sat as Premiers in the House of Commons, and two, Lords Russell and Beaconsfield, have filled the office in either house. Pitt, Canning, Palmerston, and Spencer Perceval died in office. Seven of these ministers, Pitt, Grenville, Liverpool, Canning, Melbourne, Palmerston, Disraeli, have to-day no male descendants. Canning's widow received a Viscounty, with remainder to her son, but he died without issue. One nephew of his survives, the Marquis of Clanricarde, who is unmarried. Lord Melbourne's property passed to Lady Palmerston, his sister, and her grandson, Earl Cowper, now possesses it. Lord Palmerston left his estates to his wife's son by her first husband, who thereupon took Lord Palmerston's name (TEMPLE,) but he, too, is childless.

The first porcelain made in this country was made 62 years ago in Philadelphia by WILLIAM E. TUCKER, whose father, BENJAMIN TUCKER, kept a china shop in Market-street, and put up a kiln for his son in its rear. There he painted white china and burned it, and tried sundry experiments with different kinds of clay, making very good queensware. He then experimented with feldspar and kaolin, and, after repeated efforts and much labor, turned out some small specimens of very creditable porcelain. Soon after, he obtained possession of the old City Water-works, Schuylkill and Chestnut-street, and built there a large glazing and enameling kiln, mill, and other works. The first results were unsatisfactory—the glazing cracking and the body blistering—but it was discovered before long that those were due to the fact that the man who put the ware in the kiln had been bribed to spoil it. His discharge was followed by immediate success, and ever since porcelain of excellent quality has been manufactured there. There is scarcely anything in which we have made greater improvement within a few years than in pottery and porcelain. We used to import all our fine specimens from Great Britain; but now we produce a good deal that ranks high and is in the best sense artistic. The improvement is steadily going on, and it is thought that before a great while we shall be able to compete successfully with the best work of England in this as in so many other manufactures.

Two exploits of a peculiar character are reported in a recent number of an Italian military paper. On the morning of Dec. 3 a party of officers, consisting of a Captain and eight Lieutenants of the Fifth Regiment of Cavalry, left Milan at 3 o'clock to ride 310 miles in five days. The horses ridden were the chargers of the officers, and were not of any particular breed; neither had they been trained in any way for the journey, the object in view in undertaking the expedition being simply to ascertain what an ordinary horse might be expected to achieve in case of emergency in actual warfare. Only three officers finished the ride, and these succeeded in riding the 310 miles in 103 hours. Some time before this Capt SELVI, of the Italian cavalry, successfully accomplished the task of riding from Bergamo, in Lombardy, to Naples, a distance of about 580 miles, in ten days. He rode a gray mare, Sardinian born and bred, but her grandsire was a pure Arab. She is about seven years old, and stands a little over fourteen hands high. The last stage was ridden not without the greatest difficulty, the mare being distressed beyond measure, and she broke down completely at the gates of Naples. Neither one of these events can compare, however, with Gen. JOHN C. FREMONT'S celebrated ride in California, over thirty years ago. At daybreak on the 22d of March, 1847, Lieut.-Col. FREMONT, then an officer in the Dragoons, accompanied by his friend, Don HAISOOS PICO, and one servant, set out from Los Angeles to proceed in the shortest time to Monterey, on the Pacific coast, distant full 400 miles. The way was over a mountainous country, much of it uninhabited, with no other road than a trace, and many defiles to pass. Each of the party had three horses, nine in all, to take their turns under the saddle. The six loose horses ran ahead without bridle or halter, and when wanted for a change were caught by the lasso. The first day they rode 125 miles. The next day they made another 125 miles, passing the formidable mountain of Santa Barbara, and counting upon it the skeletons of some fifty horses, part of near double that number which perished in the crossing of that mountain on Christmas Day, 1846. That night they rested at the home of Don PICO. Here the nine horses from Los Angeles were left and eight others taken in their place. They started at 11 o'clock, rode 70 miles, halted for the night, and the fourth day out entered Monterey at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. On March 26 FREMONT set out on his return. The afternoon was already well advanced when they started, and only 30 miles was done that evening. The second day out Col. FREMONT'S horse carried him for 90 miles without a change and without apparent fatigue. Thirty more miles were ridden that day, on another horse, and then the night was passed at Don PICO'S home. The next day the party set out for Los Angeles on the same nine horses which they had first started out with, and reached that place at 4 o'clock on the afternoon of the 29th of March. The whole distance of 800 miles had been gone over in 158 hours, or at the rate of five miles an hour, day and night. The actual time spent in the saddle was not more than 100 hours. On this ride the grass in the road was the food for the horses, none of which were shod.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE STRAKOSCH OPERA SEASON.

The first week of Mr. Strakosch's operatic venture will be brought to a termination this afternoon by a Litta matinée, when Miss Litta will appear for a third time as the heroine of Donizetti's opera, "Lucia di Lammermoor." In the evening Mr. Strakosch's operatic force will cross the river to the Brooklyn Academy of Music, but inasmuch as Miss Kellogg still continues indisposed, there will be a departure from the original intention of the management. "La Favorita" is the opera now announced, and the appearance of Miss Annie Louise Cary as Leonora will be the prime attraction. Certainly, no more popular artist could undertake the rôle. The coming week of opera, judging from the arrangements so far as they are at present announced, is likely to prove attractive. For to-morrow evening Mr. Strakosch has undertaken a benefit entertainment at Booth's, which is quite in the nature of an operatic concert, most of the artists of the company appearing, and the violin virtuoso, M. Reményi, also lending his services. On Monday night there will be a representation of "Il Trovatore," and on the following evening a performance of "La Traviata" will serve to introduce Mlle. Giulia Mario as Violetta. On Wednesday evening the opera will be "Les Huguenots," and adequate provision will also be made for the other nights of the week.

PARK THEATRE.

At this theatre the burlesque of "Robinson Crusoe" has been substituted for "The Babes in the Wood," and the change is altogether a welcome one. The short season of burlesque which was opened a few weeks ago will not continue much longer, and its briefness is not to be regretted, for this class of entertainment seems to appeal almost exclusively to men, a fact which speaks for itself. Burlesque as presented nowadays is often amusing, and in many instances bright and clever, but it is a pity that fun in this shape can only be served up by women whose chief object is to expose their forms. If some far-sighted manager and author could devise a form of popular travesty which would amuse without in any way offending good taste, and more especially without offending the ladies, they would probably take the town with it. But this preliminary is not directed particularly against "Robinson Crusoe," which is one of the liveliest and wittiest pieces of its kind, and in the representation of which many talented people are engaged. The part of Robinson Crusoe is very well taken by Miss Marie Williams, whose good humor is catching, and whose body never seems to be wholly at rest. Miss Rosean, a pleasing singer and a handsome woman, is the Polly Hopkins. However, we will not attempt to enumerate all the beauties of the troupe. The laughing song, sung in a spirited manner by Mr. William Gill as Friday and Miss Williams, is one of the brightest features of a performance which, on the whole, is an excellent antidote for "green and yellow melancholy."

GENERAL MENTION.

It is stated that Mr. Charles Fechter will return to the stage early in the Spring.

Mr. Herman Linde will repeat his recital of "Macbeth" at Steinway Hall this evening.

The final performances of "At Last" at Wallack's Theatre will be given this afternoon and evening.

Mr. George Edgar will make his début at the Broadway Theatre, on the 27th inst., in one of Shakespeare's great characters.

The farewell representations of "Miss" may be seen to-day at the Standard Theatre. Unusual preparations are being made at this theatre for the early production of Messrs. Gilbert and Sullivan's famous travesty, "H. M. S. Pinafore."

The programme of the Philharmonic Society of New-York, which was publicly rehearsed yesterday, will be repeated this evening at the concert of the society in the Academy of Music. It should be remembered that M. Neuendorff has an excellent orchestral force at his disposal. The soloists are Mrs. Anna Granger Dow and Mr. Franz Remmel.

GENERAL NOTES.

THE RED SPECTRE IN EUROPE.

SIGNIFICANCE OF CAIROLI'S DOWNFALL—ITALY VERGING TOWARD REVOLUTION—THE MENACES OF SOCIALISM IN RUSSIA AND GERMANY—BAD STATE OF THINGS IN FRANCE—THE MISCHIEF TO PAY ALL AROUND.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Sunday, Dec. 22, 1878.

Passanante's knife has killed the Cairoli Ministry, and M. Depretis, after many fruitless appeals to the most notable members of the Italian Parliament, has at last patched together something which is understood to be "a Cabinet of transition," and is in reality one of "compromise." The names of its members are comparatively unknown, and unknown is its policy, although we may take it for granted that affairs will not be much better, as, until the revolution is positively declared, they cannot be much worse. Cairoli was an easy-going person, an adventurer by birth and association, but not violent, and with a sort of innate, if unreasoned, perception of the duties incumbent upon the head of a Government. He wanted to serve his sovereign, and did so according to his lights, so far as he was permitted by the instructions of his real master, Caprera Joe, but he could not make head against Socialism as he could interpose his body between the regicide and the King. His conduct thus won the esteem of all, but his embarrassed explanations to the Parliament, his hesitations to give sanction to the vigorous coercive measures proposed against the "sect," his refusal to separate from some of his colleagues, who are more than suspected of dealings with the conspirators—explanations, hesitations, and refusals so strangely commented upon by M. Cambetta's telegrams and Garibaldi's letters as to frighten those who think that Gambettism abroad and Garibaldism at home are dangerous allies for one whose mission is to protect the destinies of a monarchy. His fall was easily accomplished—it was logical—and, as the demonstrations since of the Neapolitan rabble prove, a measure of wise precaution; but to replace him will be difficult. Within the last 18 years Italy has used up all her eminent personages, whether these had been brought to the front by the force of circumstances, by real merit, or by popular favor. Cavour and Rattazzi died in harness, Ricasoli and Peruggi have withdrawn from political life, soldiers have been tried and found wanting in energy, and so the Parliamentary Saturn went on—always toward the "left"—devouring by the way Minghetti and Sella and Crispi, and a dozen others of the smaller fry, until he came to Cairoli. But there he paused, for beyond Cairoli stand the red-shirts, the bands of Garibaldi, the sectaries of the revolution. The frontier is weak, badly guarded, ready to yield to the first assault; yet, slight and feeble though it be, it is the only line of demarkation between legal authority and mob law.

Cairoli governed, as his predecessors had done; the Police were not more vigilant; Passanante and his accomplices were not more closely watched under former régimes; but such is the prestige of the word republic among those who have noticed, since 1848, the prodigious fortunes of Garibaldi's Lieutenant, that in his success they thought to see an encouragement to their own ambitions. New horizons seemed to open to those who did not dream of regicide, because the death of an individual monarch would not destroy the principle of monarchical authority; but they sharpened their weapons upon the incoming of a Minister whose programme has always been revolutionary. This is the danger which the Constitutionals have at last begun to appreciate; but will not their present spasmodic energy come too late to avert the consequences of their long inaction? That Italy will submit to reaction, that she will consent to travel backward along the road which led from Cavour to Cairoli, can scarcely be admitted. Like France in 1789, she is borne on by a democratic flood, not to be diked by the intrigues and makeshifts of vulgar mediocrities or petty parliamentary tricksters; the governing classes are hurried irresistibly toward the extremes of social radicalism. Cairoli was the last rampart of parliamentary liberals, and ere long the King and his people will stand face to face. What will be the action, at this crisis, of the sovereign? Two courses are open to him; both are fraught with danger: and, except by Radicals, the situation is painted in sombre colors. By Constitutionals resistance and repression are counseled; by others, the King is bidden to reflect upon the tendency of modern society, to study the aspirations of this nation, which, craving rather for equality than for liberty, has for 30 years groped blindly in the darkness of the revolution for reforms only compatible, without shocks and violence, with a strong Government. He is told to assume boldly the direction of the democratic movement, and, by substituting his own powerful initiative for the colorless, middle-term conceptions of Parliamentary pedagogism, to become the leader of his fellow-countrymen, instead of being merely a crowned phantom, the scarcely-tolerated incumbent of a menaced throne. Thirty years ago the same policy was urged upon Pius IX., whose dreams of a regenerated Italy were inaugurated by the murder of the liberal Rossi, and culminated in his own flight to Gaeta. Still, should Humbert I. consent, he will become the people's idol for a month or two, and the explosion may be postponed yet a little longer, and the mob will shout Ave Cæsar at each new concession of his dignity, until the novelty has worn off and the wild beast's appetite has palled with petty victims, and then it will cry: "Down with the tyrant; to the Tiber with the King!"

All the news from Italy is bad; the press records a hundred of those acts of outrage and disorder which are the sure precursors of popular outbreaks, and private letters are even more apprehensive of a near catastrophe. Within a few days, I am assured, and my authority is unquestionable, the King expressed his despondency to a foreign Ambassador, and his anxiety was not so much inspired by fears of a collision as by want of confidence in its consequences. He is bent upon resistance, and so is his brother, the Duke d'Aosta, yet Amadeo abdicated the Spanish throne without striking one blow in its defense. It is precisely in these threats to resist that the monarchy shows its growing weakness. It blows hot and cold, dares not draw the sword, and so the flood surges on, gathering strength with each successive wave, until soon, if it be not now too late, none will be able to stem the current. Disaffection and dissatisfaction are rife everywhere; the old Army was true as steel, and the gallant Piedmontese were ready to die in defense of the house of Savoy, but this Army is a thing of the past. The troops are demoralized, the principles of authority and discipline have been sapped by the tracts and speeches of demagogues who know that, to insure their own triumph, these bulwarks must first be overthrown. The officers are disheartened; they fear to be disavowed by the master whom they would try to save, for before them is the fate of that Colonel, who was removed from command because he declared at a public banquet that "his regiment was ready to drive back the enemies of the King, be they home or foreign, with the butts of its muskets!" This Colonel is a brave gentleman, who has won every step of his promotion by active service, but his sentiments are pernicious and might awaken an answering echo among those who despise that arch-fraud, Garibaldi, in their hearts, even if they dare not give voice to their opinions. So he was shelved and the place given to another, who will be more docile, although he was probably a cobbler or a scullion, like Farina, once the Duke of Modena's cook, and now a General, but who won name and fame among the "Thousand of Marsala," battling against a foe whose leaders had already sold themselves, after the fashion of Judas, for a handful of silver.

ALL SORTS OF TROUBLE.

We are close upon the moment when the struggle will be fought out between the Monarchy and the Republic, for the men who built up that house of cards, Italian unity, will not stop there. The house of Savoy was a handy tool, but, like the Stuarts and the Bourbons, it has run its appointed time; its glorification was not the end, and, as its work is done, as it can be no longer useful, it must be thrust aside for those who aspire to the radical modification of every existing social and political institution in the Peninsula. The denunciations of capital by "your own Joseph" can leave no doubt of the real intentions of the "sect," by which his grotesque individuality is used as a popular idol; a modern Jacquerie is in preparation, and this war of class against class will find an echo all over the Continent. In Portugal the Socialists are moving; Spain has warned Switzerland of the nature of the propaganda elaborated by those who receive protection from her free institutions, and this classic asylum of political exiles, awakening at last to the danger, ousts her Radical Government, confiscates a revolutionary paper, and demands the re-establishment of the death penalty. Twenty-two Russian soldiers at Odessa, 132 students at Kharkof, and 350 other persons, in different parts of the Empire, are imprisoned in the fortresses for connection with the Nihilist conspiracies. From Wurzburg we learn that over a thousand students assisted at the funeral of one of their comrades, who was shot down by a soldier in discharge of his duty, and six challenges have been sent to the Captain who approved the act of his subordinate; while at Berlin and at Hamburg, at Cologne and at Frankfort, every day records the banishment or the arrest of some Socialist celebrity. In France, although not quite so forward, things are rapidly drifting from bad to worse. Never have the annals of crime so teemed with accounts of robbery and murder, arson and suicide. Near Perpignan, at Agen, in the Herault, in the Aude, in the Landes, throughout the whole district of the Eastern Pyrenees, the highways are unsafe for travelers even in broad daylight, while in the Sarthe the nights are illuminated with the flames of burning barns and haystacks. In the immediate neighborhood of Paris, at Neuilly, a villa has been demolished and the materials sold by the agent of the owner, who, returning from Nice with his family, found on arriving nothing but a vacant lot. Trade is stagnant; its balance is, by several hundred millions of francs, against the country, where previous to the war the excess of exports over imports amounted to more than a billion. Old taxes are increased, new taxes are invented, in frantic endeavors to make up the deficit. The utmost severity is shown to every journal presuming to ridicule and censure the atrocities committed by the lawgivers, yet the utmost license is permitted to the dirty prints whose obscene vituperation is only aimed against religion and morality. One case in point; it happened five days ago, and the facts are these: A wealthy gentleman, residing at Passy, discovered the amours of his wife with a footman, whom she used to interview in the cellar; there was a row, but at the solicitation of her family the guilty woman was pardoned, John Thomas was discharged, and preparations were made to pass the Winter in Italy. They were to leave by the evening's train, when suddenly appeared the postman with a sealed package; there was not much inside; merely a coarse wood-cut from the Journal Amusant, representing a lady in ball attire with a liveried servant kissing her naked shoulders; not a word added—nothing to point the allusion. But M. X. fancied that his dishonor was public, and so shot himself in his wife's dressing-room. They had been married 14 years, and he was barely seven and thirty. Like dramas are only too frequent in this metropolis of pleasure, where to the foreigner all seems so bright and joyful, but where he who can look behind the curtain is shocked by scenes of misery produced by want and starvation.

WRETCHEDNESS IN FRANCE.

The Exhibition was to have inaugurated a never-ending era of prosperity; it has only increased the wretchedness of the population. The price of the mere necessaries of life has nearly doubled; strikes and failures have thrust thousands of artisans into the streets, where they must steal or starve, and the salaries of those who still can find employment have diminished. Between 1860 and 1864—I quote here from Mme. Caroline de Barran's Etude sur le Travail Féminin à Paris—the average pay for female labor was 55 cents per diem; in 1873, according to the statistics of Paul Le Roy-Beaulieu, borne out by M. Jules Simon, it was 2 francs, while the Workmen's Congress, at Paris in 1876 and at Lyons in 1878, estimate it at only from 20 to 25 cents. These statistics are generally admitted to be correct and scarcely need a word of comment. In the rural districts the laborers are discontented; Some of them had been sent to the capital on a week's holiday—from the lottery funds—and have come back with minds poisoned by the doctrines taught in the Catechism of the Perfect Republican, published at Belleville, and distributed gratuitously, and prove to their neighbors that to toil for their daily bread or to revence those above them in social station is unworthy of every true freeman. Capital is represented as an outrage upon the proletarian, and Jacques Bonhomme is always ready to adopt anything which abolishes distinctions between meum and tuum. There will soon be nothing left to check the progress of the contagion. The Conservatives are fast being eliminated from the National Assembly, and in the growing opposition of the extreme Radicals to even M. Gambetta, it is easy to see evidences of his waning popularity. Matters go too slowly for the Ultras, who demand and will obtain the impeachment of the 16th May Ministry, which hoped by an appeal to the people to save the Constitution. And after this execution will come the turn of the present incumbents, chief among whom is the Minister of Foreign Affairs, openly charged by the democratic press with having sacrificed the interest of France, in order to be complimented by Lord Beaconsfield and to be called a great diplomatist by Prince von Bismarck. To-day ism may go too far, and M. Waddington seems to forget that undue flattery from an enemy is not always sincere and may arouse suspicion among friends. Only after the January elections shall we have a modification of the present Cabinet, but as the Radicals will probably carry a majority of them, the composition of the next Ministry may be foreseen. The "Umbrellas" will go out and the Reds will come in, and Belleville will see the realization of its darling-project—the return of the Chambers to Paris, where, as it has often done before, the mob can impose its authority, and force an amnesty for New-Caledonian exiles. The great sin washed, although it has not to foot the bill, is growling over the Exhibition extravagances. It is so pleasant to be able to complain of one's rulers; to show how greatly the outlay has exceeded the estimates; to point to "no bids over 7,000 francs for the materials of the national factories installation, which cost 100,000 francs, or for those of the Algerian Palace, 300,000 francs, offered for 20,000 francs. Then, too, it is joy unspeakable to gloat over the bankruptcy of fully one-third of the small exhibitors, and to tell how Marshal MacMahon submitted to the sacrifice of his self-respect, because through his brother-in-law, the Duke de Castries, he had incurred a debt of 1,800,000 francs in stock gambling, all of which is strictly true. "In short," say the newspapers, "business affairs went on badly, before the Exhibition, now they don't go on at all."

AN ENCOURAGING VIEW OF THE SITUATION.

From the St. Louis Post, Jan. 4.

We have no hesitation in saying that the United States is to-day the most prosperous nation on the face of the earth. It is not only the nation in which freedom is broadest and hope brightest, but the nation in which all the economic conditions of life are most favorable to individual welfare and to national prosperity. It is the one country in the world which combines the three great resources of raw productions, manufacturing capacity, and commercial development, and a true outlook upon the situation would teach us that instead of fearing that ruin which was lately imminent, our chief fear should be that we may be spoiled by the sudden prosperity which promises to replace our late depression.

THE SUPREME COURT OF NORTH CAROLINA.

From the Raleigh (N. C.) News, Jan. 5.

To-morrow the new Supreme Court will meet in session for the first time. It will be a memorable day in our history as a State. In 1870 the Democratic Party recovered the legislative branch of the State Government. Disappointed by the defeat of Judge Merrimon, our candidate for Governor, from recovering the executive branch in 1872, the Democracy rallied, and under the gallant leadership of Zebulon B. Vance drove the enemy from the executive offices in 1876. To-morrow the Supreme Judiciary will pass into Democratic hands for the first time since the carpet-bag invasion. The people have now intrusted every branch of the State Government to our keeping.

The names of Smith, Ashe, and Dillard are a guarantee that the Bench of the Supreme Court will restore the respect and veneration with which in former days our highest judicial tribunal was ever wont to be regarded.

THE ELECTRIC LIGHT IN SAN FRANCISCO.

From the San Francisco Post, Dec. 26.

The 6,000 candle Brush electric machine placed in the Union Foundry was put in operation Monday evening, and found to work well. The new light illuminated the whole interior of the foundry, and, compared with its daylight radiance, the few gas jets burning seemed like the rushlights of the olden time.

NO MORE WORK FOR BODY-SNATCHERS.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 10.—In the State Senate to-day, bills were introduced giving the unclaimed bodies of those who die in public institutions to medical societies for dissection, to be operated on within Ohio; and making the transfer of such bodies to other states, or the traffic in bodies, a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment.

A BAGGAGE-MAN KILLED.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 10.—A south-bound passenger train on the Iron Mountain Railroad was thrown from the track by a broken rail, near Kensett, last night. Baggagemaster Crawford was killed, Expressman Brown fatally injured, and several others were injured.

MISCELLANEOUS CITY NEWS

EAST-BOUND THROUGH FREIGHT.

A UNIFORM RATE ESTABLISHED FROM INLAND CITIES TO FOREIGN PORTS.

The representatives of the trunk lines, and those of a number of the Western railroads, who met at the Windsor Hotel on Thursday to arrange for a uniform rate on east-bound through freight, completed their labors late yesterday afternoon and adjourned sine die, Commissioner Fink occupied the chair, and Commissioner Guilford acted as Secretary of the meeting, which was attended by about 25 well-known railroad men. A committee was appointed to consider and report upon the recent tonnage disputes at St. Louis. After a session lasting several hours the committee reported that they had fully and satisfactorily adjusted all differences that have arisen in connection with the apportionment of tonnage at St. Louis. The details of the adjustment, however, were not made public, and could not be obtained from members of the secret conference. While the St. Louis committee were in consultation the discussion of the main question which brought the conference together was continued by the members, and finally resulted in an agreement being arrived at to establish a basis and plan for making and governing through rates for freight from all inland cities to foreign ports. These rates are to be the sum of the inland or rail rates and the ocean rates, and by the terms of the agreement are to be uniform from all ports, that is, the rate is to be the same via New-York or Baltimore, Boston, &c. The rates, of course, will vary from time to time, according to the current ocean freight quotations, but uniformity as regards the various shipping ports is not to be violated.

Commissioner Fink said to a TIMES reporter last evening that the joint committee had accomplished the purpose for which it met in the establishment of a uniform freight rate from the inland cities to foreign ports. While various other questions came before the committee for discussion, this was the only matter of public interest. The conclusion reached was favorable alike to the railroads and shippers, and was heartily concurred in by all the representatives of the railroads. The uniform rate established, it should be understood, extended only to through freight, and had nothing to do with freight shipped from Chicago or St. Louis to Baltimore, New-York, or Boston. The object was to stop the cutting on through freight, which was disastrous to the railroads, and destroyed the confidence of shippers. In the schedule agreed upon, Mr. Fink said, the present rail rates from Chicago to New-York—35 and 40 cents per 100 pounds on grain and freight of the fourth class, respectively—remained unchanged, and formed the land basis for the through rate. To this was to be added the ocean freight rate, as it was quoted in the New-York market. The fluctuations in the ocean rates would cause corresponding variations in the through rates, and the ocean rate would be telegraphed to Chicago and the other inland cities daily. Under this arrangement there would be but one rate from Chicago to any of the European ports, by whatever line or through whatever home port the shipper chose to ship his freight. So from every other inland point where bills of through lading were issued, there would be but one rate, proportionate to the distance of that point from the seaboard. As in the case of Chicago, the present freight rates from the other cities will probably remain unchanged, these rates having been carefully fixed. There are many matters of detail to be arranged, but the main point had been made, and there was no reason to believe that the actual workings of the new system would prove as successful as had those of the pool in westbound freights, and that railroad companies would find it for their interests to maintain the agreement inviolate. As to the pooling interests in general, which are centred in his hands, Mr. Fink said that harmony prevailed, and there were no signs of bad feeling or bad faith. There were still a number of special contracts to be filled, and this fact probably gave rise to the recent rumors that cutting was going on. The roads agreed to abolish special contracts last December, and when those not yet carried out were disposed of, there would be thorough uniformity of rates. Questioned in regard to the effect of the new arrangement upon the interests of New-York, Mr. Fink added that the uniform rate placed all the seaboard cities upon an equal basis, and allowed all competitors an equal chance.

Mr. H. D. Ledyard, General Manager of the Michigan Central Railroad, said that the through freight business from the West was now placed on a basis like that established long since in westbound freights. The members of the committee were highly satisfied with the result of their sessions. This result was of great importance to shippers. The through freighting would be done in a certainty, and the shipper would know that he was getting exactly the same rate as every other shipper would get. A difference of 5 cents on 100 pounds was often enough to ruin a man, and under the special contract system there was no certainty possible in business transactions. Mr. Ledyard had no doubt that the uniform rate would be maintained, as he believed all to be satisfied to let the through freight business combine. Only actual operation, of course, could determine the wisdom of the policy. As to the Chicago pool, the only apparent difficulty in the way of perfecting it had been removed by leaving the appointment of an Arbitrator to the trunk line managers.

TAMMANY AGAIN CHECKMATED.

A LIVELY TIME AT THE "SOCIETY'S" MEETING—KELLY'S CANDIDATES REJECTED.

A special meeting of the "Society of Tammany or Columbian Order," advertised to be held in the "Council Chamber of the Great Wigwam," in Fourteenth-street, "at half an hour after the setting of the sun" yesterday, by order of Augustus Schell, Grand Sachem, was a matter of great interest in political circles. It was rumored in the afternoon that the injunction granted by Judge Barrett, of the Supreme Court, restraining the society from initiating the 147 members elected at the meeting on Dec. 31 was set aside by Judge Donohue. This rumor was false but in consequence of it there was a larger attendance at the meeting than there has been at any other for several years. The adherents of Kelly came in force, with the determination to vote as he should dictate. Kelly's opponents, believing that the injunction they had obtained would prevent the society from taking any action detrimental to their interests, were surprised at the alleged action of Judge Donohue, and had but little time to muster their men. Notice was sent out, however, as quickly as possible, and there was an assemblage at Irving Hall. According to the advertisements, the meeting of the society should have been held at 5:22 o'clock P. M. but there was not a quorum present until 7:10, and the meeting was not called to order until 7:30. Previous to the meeting there was a caucus of the members who support the legal proceedings instituted at Irving Hall, at which a line of action was informally discussed. Among those present were Messrs. Nelson J. Waterbury, Jurdan L. Mott, John G. Savage, Hubert O. Thompson, Henry D. Murray, Ambrose H. Purdy, George W. McLean, James Daly, John Tyler Hall, James G. Morrison, Caspar C. Childs, Daniel O'Reilly, Luke Grimes, Charles B. Cornell, William Arrowsmith, Z. G. Halpin, Hugh E. Mooney, Edward P. O'Neil, John J. Delaney, Constantine Donohue, John D. Conghlin, ex-Judge Kane, and ex-Judge Alfred E. Ackert. When this assemblage at Irving Hall were informed of the opening of the meeting at the Wigwam they proceeded there, and marched slowly and solemnly down to the "coal-hole" in the basement in Indian file.

Grand Sachem Schell presided, and when the party from Irving Hall arrived there were about 220 persons present. Of this number about 160 were friends of Kelly. Commissioner of Jurors Thomas Dunlop was there, and with him were all of his relatives, the men who were proposed by and owed their membership to him. The minutes of the last meeting, at which the injunction was served, was read, and a motion was made for the election of new members. A ballot was taken on one candidate and he was defeated, 144 votes being cast in his favor and 56 against. One vote against a candidate under the rules of the society is equal to eight in his favor, and, after a ballot for another candidate was taken with the same result as the one before, the idea of electing anybody was abandoned.

Sachem Henry Hilton then offered a resolution censuring Mr. Hubert O. Thompson for having, as the resolution alleged, exposed the secrets of the society in the affidavit he had made upon which the injunction had been granted by Judge Barrett. Mr. John R. Fellows opposed the adoption of this resolution, on the ground that no man should be censured unheard. John Kelly then made a speech which was mainly a personal attack on Mr. Fellows, who he accused of bargaining with the Republicans, and with general infidelity to the Democratic Party. Sachem Clinton coming to the question, then argued that a vote of censure should not be passed on Mr. Thompson, as an expression of the opinion by the members present. Mr. Fellows made a speech in reply, in which he defended Mr. Thompson, and he was followed by Mr. Waterbury, who made some general remarks on the position of the Anti-Tammany Hall party, and he was interrupted by "Boss" Kelly, who declared the scene was being organized by the Chairman. The latter caused to be read a series of resolutions censuring Mr. Waterbury, which were adopted after the latter's unsuccessful Act against Kelly in the society in 1874. Kelly then proceeded to make a violent attack upon Mr. Waterbury, in which he charges him with being faithless to the Democratic party, and this charge there was great excitement, and the followers of Kelly stamped their feet and cheered the speaker lustily. Amid the excitement Mr. Waterbury attempted to speak, but Grand Sachem Schell used his gavel with great vigor, and declaring that he was in contempt of the society, he was silenced.

Mr. Waterbury finally gained the floor to speak on the resolution censuring Mr. Thompson, and the resolution was modified so as to make it one of "disapproval" instead of "censure." The meeting then adjourned.

STILL ON THE TRACK.

MME. ANDERSON'S WALK CONTINUED—CROWDS OF SPECTATORS AND MUCH ENTHUSIASM IN MOZART GARDEN.

Outside of Mozart Garden, at the corner of Fulton-avenue and Smith-street, Brooklyn, immense posters, on which are represented a race between a plump young woman and a ghastly old Father Time, attract the attention and curiosity of passers-by. This suggestive illustration is intended as a representation of the race against time now being contested within the garden by the plucky little Englishwoman known as Mme. Anderson, who is undertaking to walk 2,700 quarter miles in the same number of consecutive quarter hours, beginning at the first of each quarter. This feat she began on the 16th of last month at 8 o'clock in the evening, and if she is successful in accomplishing it, the long, weary tramp will end next Monday evening at 11 o'clock. At 11 o'clock last night she had completed the two thousand four hundred and eighth quarter mile, or 602 miles. This is the most wonderful feat of female pedestrianism ever attempted in this country, and has only been undertaken once in England, when Mme. Anderson herself failed to accomplish the task and gave out through sheer exhaustion when within 12 quarters of the end. When the little woman began her walk in Mozart Garden, nearly a month ago, it was deemed impossible for her to perform what she had undertaken, the public felt but little interest in her or her exhibition of pedestrianism, and she was greeted by very small and unsympathetic groups of spectators; but as the time wore on and she was found still on the track interest increased, and now the little hall can hardly accommodate the throngs that seek admittance through its doors. The admission fee has been raised from 25 to 50 cents; but this increase in price has not caused any falling off in the crowds who daily and nightly cheer and encourage the Madame. These crowds are largely composed of women, and of these no small portion are ladies, for it is now quite the correct thing in Brooklyn to "drop into Mozart Hall and watch Anderson for an hour or so."

The woman who attracts all this attention, and who has so nearly performed the wonderful feat that she promised when she started, is English by birth, though her mother was German. She is said to be 36 years of age, but looks older, is of medium height, square build, and has a bright and pleasant though plain face. Her hair is worn very plainly, drawn back from her face and hangs over her shoulders in a single braid that is generally adorned with a bright ribbon that matches her dress in color. She appears in a number of costumes, all of which are cut and made by her husband, differing in color, but of one design. Her dress is in one piece, reaching from her throat to her knees, and buttoned in front. That she wore yesterday was of dark crimson, trimmed down the front, around the bottom of the skirt, and at the neck and wrists with ermine. On her feet she wears stout leather shoes. Her shapely and superbly-developed limbs, that are visible to the knee, are incased in stout stocking-knit of gray yarn. As she walks she carries in her hand a light switch. Her walking is perfection, and is accomplished with an easy, nonchalant swing that is the envy of all the women who watch her. She has been in training and practicing pedestrianism as a profession for the last 16 years, and ought to know something about walking. She has also filled engagements as a serio-comic vocalist in London. Her husband, who is constantly in attendance upon her, is a heavy Englishman, who looks as though walking would be the last thing on earth that he would undertake, either as a pleasure or as a means of gaining a livelihood.

The hall in which Mme. Anderson walks is on the the ground floor, and so small that 28 laps of the tan-bark track running close to its walls must be made to the mile, or seven to the quarter. At one end is a stage, on which are always seated many women, and on the front of which is a table laden with bouquets and baskets of the choicest flowers that have been presented to the Madame. Perched on a little elevated platform, in one of the back corners of the hall, are the scorers, one of whom rings a hand-bell three times each quarter of an hour; once, three minutes before the beginning of the quarter, again for the start, and still again when the Madame enters upon the last lap of each quarter. It is a significant fact that during the first two weeks of her walk she was in receipt of many challenges to walk; but since that time she has received none. At all hours of the day and night volunteers are ready and anxious to walk a quarter of a mile, or more if allowed, in company with the fair pedestrian, and in the day time especially ladies crowd opposite the doorway from which she appears, and beg for the privilege of walking with her. She is allowed to eat and drink about as she pleases, and to date she has not experienced some trouble from bilatered feet, but none of a serious nature. Her great difficulty is in overcoming the extreme drowsiness that beats her at times, and she often walks around the track with closed eyes, and apparently asleep.

Last evening she mounted the platform at the completion of a quarter, and, seating herself there, made a pleasant address to the audience, who listened with rapt attention to every word she uttered. When she said that she had such complete confidence in her own powers of endurance that she was absolutely certain that if her life was spared, she should be on the track at 10:45 o'clock next Monday night. She was greeted with the most enthusiastic applause. At the completion of the next quarter of a mile she again appeared on the platform, and sang a song in a voice sweet but worn and lacking in power. The one disagreeable feature of the entire performance is the band that furnishes alleged music each evening, and which drives many people in despair from the building. Last evening this band cheered and encouraged the weary pedestrian with such airs as "A heart bowed down," "'Tis years since last we met," &c., played in the most lugubrious manner and with the most reckless disregard of either time or tune. At 12 o'clock last night, in spite of this drawback, Mme. Anderson had completed her 2,416th quarter of a mile, and looked brighter and fresher than for many previous nights at the same hour.

AN ELOPEMENT ON STATEN ISLAND.

For several years past J. Fred Klein has, with his wife, Almina, kept a lager-beer saloon and boarding-house at Stapleton, Staten Island. By their industry and frugal habits they accumulated several thousand dollars, the money being deposited in the bank in Mrs. Klein's name. Some time ago Henry Fleigel, a young German, employed as engineer on George Bechtel's propeller David Utley, engaged board in the Klein family, and was treated as one of its members, he having known Mrs. Klein from her childhood. On Wednesday last Mr. Klein was called away from home on business, and upon his return late in the afternoon was greatly surprised at finding his wife missing. A hurried investigation of the house satisfied him that she had left his bed and board for parts unknown, as all the ready money in the house and valuables which she could conveniently carry with her in her flight were missing. Inquiry at the bank showed that she had drawn all the money on deposit, about $3,000. From the fact that Fleigel failed to appear on Wednesday morning on board of the propeller, it is the general belief that the couple took passage in a steamer on Wednesday afternoon for Germany. Klein and his wife had been married 19 years, but had no child ren.

AN ABANDONED INFANT.

At 8 o'clock last evening an officer of the Twentieth Precinct, on patrol in West Thirty-fourth-street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues, noticed a woman clad in deep mourning and carrying a baby in her arms walking up and down the street apparently waiting for some one. When the officer returned after patrolling to the end of his post, he saw the woman come down the stoop of No. 234 West Thirty-fourth-street, and walk rapidly away. He went up the stoop, and in the vestibule found a female infant about 2 months old, which the woman had abandoned there. The waif was brought to the Central Office and placed in charge of Matron Webb.

THREE RUFFIANS' BRUTAL DEEDS.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 10.—An Illinois dispatch says that on Tuesday night three men, named McFarland, Patterson, and Molony, entered the house of an old man named Nevil, near Pecatonic, dragged him to a tree, tied him, and then beat him until he was stunned and bleeding. They then returned to the house and outraged Mrs. Nevil, aged 70, and her daughter, aged 20. The ruffians were arrested.

PORTER'S CONTRADICTIONS.

THE ISSUES OF FACT AND VERACITY.

CLOSE OF RECORDER GARDNER'S ARGUMENT—GEN. PORTER'S DISPATCHES CONTRADICTING HIS OWN ASSERTIONS—DISCREPANCIES EXPOSED—BEGINNING OF MR. CHOATE'S ARGUMENT.

WEST POINT, Jan. 11.—The argument of Recorder Gardner in behalf of the Government was concluded to-day, with a full discussion of the evidence respecting the 4:30 order, and the hour of its delivery, with some corroborative evidence submitted at Governor's Island last October, and fully reported at that time. The really new points in Major Gardner's address are those in which he dissects Gen. Porter's statement with merciless severity, and points out its self-contradictions, and its discrepancy with his evidence before the court-martial in the Winter of 1862-3. These points will be given in his own terms, with some necessary condensation.

While Porter has shown that Longstreet was on the field on Aug. 29, 1862, he has not, the Government claims, been successful in showing that he [Gen. Porter,] knew that such was the case, and has not, therefore, furnished sufficient reasons for not attacking when peremptorily ordered to the assault. It was known at the time, from advices from Gen. Buford on the morning of Aug. 29, that 17 regiments of infantry, some batteries, and 500 cavalry had arrived at Gainesville, and passed through it on the morning when the conflict commenced. The Government places the number of these forces at 14,000 and Porter at 25,000, and Porter's counsel in their summing up have taken it for granted that there is no disputing these figures. By whom this force was commanded was not ascertained at Gen. Pope's head-quarters that day, and Porter has not proved that he was better informed than his superiors. The next issue of fact is one respecting the position of Longstreet's forces, Porter contending that they were as far advanced as Hampton Court-house, with Stuart Hill within their lines, and the Government that they lay half a mile back of Page Land lane, across the Warrenton pike. If they lay where Porter says they did, then Gibbon Wood (a piece of wood where Gen. Gibbon had his field hospital during his sharp brush with the enemy on the previous evening,) was within their lines, and Gen. Reynolds and others are in error when they positively affirm that the Union forces held these woods nearly all day.

The remaining points of fresh interest are those in which the Recorder analyzes the opening statement of Gen. Porter (through his counsel) before the board, and specifies in detail the several discrepancies and issues of veracity involved in that document. The first thing in Porter's maturely-considered exculpation to which the Recorder takes exception, is the suppression or avoidance of the fact that the extraordinary exertions which Porter made to embark at Newport News for Aquia Creek by midnight of Aug. 29, 1862, did not arise, as he would have the board believe, from eagerness to join Gen. Pope and come under his command, but from the fact that he had received an express order to that effect from Gen. Halleck, and an urgent telegram from Gen. McClellan to push on, as it was a matter of life and death. (See page 233 of General Court-martial Record.) The second is an allegation that the regiments forming Gen. Piatt's brigade of Gen. Sturgis' division, did not report to him on Aug. 29, which the joint evidence of Gen. Griffin and Gen. Piatt before the court-martial expressly contradicts. The third is a statement that the petitioner knew at the time that Longstreet's force was strongly posted in his immediate front, and that it did not amount to less than 25,000 men, when, in his equally well-considered defense before the court-martial that convicted him, he deliberately avers that this force, which he then also insisted was in his front, was calculated at not less than from 10,000 to 15,000 strong; thus for the purpose of getting a rebearing, adding 10,000 to his original statement, conscious that 15,000 men found no sufficient excuse to justify his disobedience, and quoting letters from Confederate officers, which he declared, if true, as the corps would have been cut in pieces if he had advanced.

The fourth allegation that Major Gardner criticizes is, (Board Record, page 9,) to the effect that the petitioner had no reason on Friday night, Aug. 29, 1862, to believe that Gen. Pope's troops were sustaining a reverse, or retiring from the field, and further, that there was no ground for such a belief on his part, or on the part of the court to doubt the justice of their verdict. Mr. Choate then reflected heavily on Gen. Pope, and the discrepancies between his various utterances, and went into this branch of the question at length. He also commented on the constitution of the court, two members of which were actors in the events in question, and appeared both as judge and witnesses for the prosecution. The argument, which was rapidly prepared with care and finish, and though lasting all the afternoon, only reached the point of Order to march on the nights of Aug. 27-28, 1862. Mr. Choate will occupy the session of to-morrow, when the case will be concluded.

HARVARD'S OLD CREW DISBANDED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 10.—At a meeting of the Harvard University Boat Club to-night, the Oxford and Cornell letters were read, and resolutions were passed approving the action of the Executive Committee in the Cornell matter. It was announced that on the failure to arrange an English race the old crew had broken up; that it was uncertain if any of them would race again, and that Richard Trimble, of the Class of '80, the Assistant Treasurer of the boat club, had been elected Captain to succeed Bancroft. It was also announced that a telegram had just been received from Henry W. Garfield, of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen, asking if Harvard would enter a four or an eight in the National Association race to meet Oxford or Cambridge, in case they came over. Owing to the disbandment of the old crew, it was decided to return a negative answer. The meeting adjourned with nine cheers for Capt. Trimble.

ARRESTED FOR SWINDLING.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Jan. 10.—Dr. Hatch, alias "Dr. Douglass," who was thought at one time to be Christian, the body-snatcher, and to be connected with the Stewart body robbery, was arrested here last night for obtaining money under false pretenses. He obtained from James Getty, a liquor-merchant, money upon two checks for $15 each, on the Freehold Bank, saying that he had $200 or $300 on deposit there. When the checks were presented it was found that Hatch never had any money there and Getty caused his arrest. He says his partner, Terry, has taken all the money they have made, but Terry says Hatch has got it all.

THE CITY REPUBLICANS.

ARTICLE XIV. NOT TO BE REPEALED.

ORGANIZATION OF "BARNEY" BIGLIN'S EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE—THE LIBERALS TRYING TO COME BACK—GEN. ARTHUR OPPOSES THE REPEAL OF ARTICLE XIV. —ACTION OF THE XVIIIth, XIVth, AND XXth DISTRICTS.

The Eighteenth Assembly District Republican Association held a prolonged meeting last evening at its head-quarters, in Fourth-avenue, near Thirty-second-street. A meeting of the Executive Committee to elect officers for the ensuing year was held previous to the regular meeting. J. R. Adams, the Chairman for 1878, presided, and was renominated for the post by ex-Judge Howland. The nomination was seconded by Col. S. Van Rensselaer Cruger. John Pullman, brother of "Chris." Pullman, nominated Charles E. Lansing for the same post. In seconding the nomination "Barney" Biglin claimed that it was made in deference to the wish of a great many members of the association. It is charged, however, by a gentleman presumably familiar with the facts, that Lansing's nomination was prompted by Biglin in direct violation of a promise made by him to Adams, whom he assured a re-election, although, as it is charged, he secretly intended to undermine his chances. The vote upon the candidates secured Lansing 43 Biglin votes, which gave him a majority. In accepting the position, Mr. Lansing stated that henceforth the members were to live together amicably, and endeavor to secure success in all their undertakings. After electing the officers of the association and the delegates to the Central Committee, members of its own body, the Executive Committee adjourned.

The association met directly afterward, and "Barney" Biglin, who was greeted with a loud pounding of boot-heels as he ascended the platform, introduced Horace M. Ruggles, his candidate for President in the late primary election, who, after making a brief speech, assumed the President's chair. John Pullman, from the Committee on Admissions, read a list of 150 Liberal Republicans who were anxious to become members of the regular Republican association, and moved that they be admitted. This brought Gen. Arthur to his feet with a warm protest. He wished to know how long the association was to be expected to elect men who kept coming in and going out of its ranks as they found it politically convenient. If he recollected aright, the same men had been admitted two years ago, and had walked out two weeks after their election to work in the interest of an opposing organization. He saw on that list the names of many of the men by whose direction he had been dragged from a meeting by policemen, notwithstanding his great weight of body and strenuous resistance with hand and foot. One of them last year had even come to him personally and proposed that in the selection of delegates to the Saratoga Convention the regular association should select one from its own ranks and take one from the ranks of the outside and opposing association. He was ready to forgive all these things and try these men again, if they were willing to come in and work loyally and squarely for the Republican Party. But they must make a pledge to stand by the party nomination. This was the regular, old-fashioned idea of fidelity. Some might call it the "machine" way, and "bolt" against it, but it was best for the party that such men should remain out of it. He had no objection to admit these men, but he did object to another wholesale election. These men must come before the Committee on Admissions separately as individual applicants, and stand upon their qualifications for admission under the constitution, and not be admitted in a body, and be free to walk out again to work for rivals in a few weeks or months.

John Pullman, working in his brother's interest, strove hard to carry his points, but at length succumbed, and the list of applicants was referred to the Committee on Admissions. The Secretary next read a protest from Christopher Pullman and F. B. Nugent against the election of J. R. Lawrence; and David Mulligan as delegates to the Central Committee, on the ground that the protestants had received a majority of the votes cast, and that the Inspectors of Elections gave Lawrence and Nugent false certificates. The protest was referred to the Executive Committee. The Secretary then read a communication from the Central Committee requesting the association to take action upon article 14 of the constitution. John Pullman offered a resolution refusing to repeal the article in question. Gen. Arthur seconded it. He said that the article was the corner-stone upon which the party in the city rested, and it should not be removed because of some fancied notion of expediency to meet a certain state of affairs. The Republican Party had the right to select any public-spirited citizen as a candidate for union candidate against the common foe—Tammany Hall. Within the meaning of article 14 he would be a regular candidate of the Republican Party, as in the case of Mayor Cooper, and should never receive office from him could serve his party faithfully, and would not be considered as serving under Democratic rule. "Barney" Biglin strove against the communication from the Central Committee laid on the table, and it took a very long time to convince him that such action would be simply an insult to the central body. He finally comprehended the situation, however, and the resolution of Mr. Pullman was unanimously adopted. A long list of propositions for membership, among which was the name of Surveyor Charles K. Graham, was read, and then the meeting adjourned.

The Fourteenth District Republican Association met last evening at No. 4 St. Mark's-place, John H. Brady in the chair. The proposed repeal of article 14 of the constitution was discussed. Mr. Brady said that the repeal of the article would be likely at some time to work harm to the Republican Party, although at present it might work a benefit. In times past it had been a strong bulwark of the party, and he was not in favor of repealing it without mature deliberation. Hiram Merwitt offered resolutions declaring that it was unwise to repeal the article in question. After some discussion the whole matter was referred to a committee composed of John R. Nugent, Hiram Merritt, John Baier, John S. Phillips, and William F. Daly. The committee was instructed to report at the next meeting.

The Twentieth Assembly District Republican Association met last evening at No. 154 East Fifty-fourth-street, ex-Judge A. J. Dittenhoefer presiding. A special committee appointed to wait on Mayor Cooper and urge the appointment of Mr. Jacob Hess as Police Commissioner reported that the Mayor had promised to give the matter due consideration. Thirty-five propositions for membership were referred to the Committee on Admissions. Mr. Solon B. Smith moved that the assent of the association be given to the proposed report of article 14 of the constitution. Mr. Henry Sterns, who spoke against the motion, said that the section was added at a time when it was necessary that something should be done to distinguish Republicans from Democrats—a rather difficult thing to do, he thought, in the old Ring times. The same reasons existed still, though not perhaps quite so strongly. Mr. Alexander Blumenstiel said that the object of the section was to protect Republicans holding office under Democratic authority from the temptation of selling out the party. It was not to be expected, he said, that a man associating with Democrats and looking to them for his livelihood could remain faithful to the Republican Party. Mr. Jacob Hess moved that the motion of Mr. Smith be laid on the table, which was carried. At the last meeting of the association a resolution, offered by Mr. Henry Sterns, that section 7 of the constitution be amended so as to take the power of appointing the Executive, Finance, and Admissions Committees out of the hands of the President and having them elected by the association, was adopted. A copy of the resolution was transmitted to the Central Committee, with the request that it be sent to the district associations for their approval. Last evening Mr. Sterns moved that postal cards bearing the resolution be circulated among the associations. The association, however, not only voted the motion down but reconsidered its former action, and, after a sharp discussion, refused to adopt the resolution. The Central Committee will be requested to return the document transmitted to it.

REGULATING INTER-STATE COMMERCE.

The New-York merchants who went to Washington to add their influence to that promoting the passage of the Reagan bill to regulate inter-State commerce and to prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers returned yesterday well satisfied with the result of their mission. Among the signers of the petition which they carried, and which was presented by Senator Conkling, were Charles H. Marshall & Co., C. H. Mallory & Co., Snow & Burgess, H. B. Claflin & Co., E. S. Jaffray & Co., H. K. & P. E. Thurber & Co., Stern & Rose, Sulzbacher, Gitterman & Co., Case, Leland & Co., W. D. Morgan, C. T. Reynolds, Faulkner, Page & Co., Kibbe, Chaffee, Shreve & Co., George A. Clark & Brother. Besides these there were numerous signers resident in Boston, Newburyport, Philadelphia, Portsmouth, Portland, Bath, and Freeport, Me.

PROPOSED REUNION OF AN OLD FAMILY.

Preparations are now being made, and invitations issued, by Hon. William E. Dodge and others, representatives of the Dodge family in America, for a social reunion of the family, at Salem, Mass., on Thursday, July 10, 1879. The family is of very ancient lineage in Cheshire, England. On the 29th day of June, 1629, O. S., (now the 10th day of July, N. S.,) William Dodge, who, with his brother, was the founder of the name and family in this country, arrived at Salem, Essex County, Mass., on board the ship Fleet. In the circular which has been issued, and which is signed by William E. Dodge, William E. Dodge, Jr., No. 20 Cliff-street, New-York; Robert Dodge, No. 12 Wall-street, New-York; Richard J. Dodge, No. 83 William-street, New-York; Reuben Rawson Dodge, Wilkinsonville, Mass.; Christopher Gore Dodge, No. 11 West Park-street, Providence, R. I.; Gen. Grenville M. Dodge, Council Bluffs, Iowa. They state that as yet no true genealogical history of the family has appeared, neither has any united effort been made for its production, although many of them have extensive collections of materials therefor. In order to assure the preparation of such history before these collections are lost, to widen their mutual acquaintance, and to rekindle a true family feeling in their race at the cradle of their second birth, it is proposed that on Thursday, July 10, 1879, being the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the landing of William Dodge at Salem, all that bear the name of Dodge in the United States, either in person or by their representatives, shall gather anew in Mechanic Hall, Essex-street, Ancient Salem, at 10 o'clock A. M., for social reunion, to provide for a proper memorial, and to listen to the addresses of several prominent members of the family.

NEW-YORK, LAKE ERIE AND WESTERN

REPORT OF THE DIRECTORS FOR THE YEAR ENDED SEPTEMBER LAST—A FAVORABLE OUTLOOK.

The report of the Board of Directors of the New-York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company to its stockholders, concerning the operations of the company from June 1 to Sept. 30, 1878, has just been published. In their introduction, the Directors call attention to the fact that on June 1, 1878, the company was put in possession of the larger portion of the property belonging to the Erie Railway, the portion not transferred continuing, "for prudential reasons," under the control of the Receiver, who still is in receipt of the revenues accruing therefrom. This arrangement, it is said, will probably be continued until the Receiver is discharged, and all the real and personal property of the Erie Railway Company purchased by the New-York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company is transferred to it. The gross earnings of the company under the new management for the period of the four months ending Sept. 30, amounted to $5,192,681 22; operating expenses, $3,272,748 77; total net earnings from all sources, $1,930,479 93; rentals on leased lines, $311,047 75; total net revenue, $1,619,432 18. From this is deducted the interest on mortgages and loans, premium on gold, and guaranteed interest, other than the interest on the bonds of the company, amounting in all to $47,482 02. A further deduction of the interest on the funded debt ($743,403 76) leaves a balance to the credit of profit and loss of $828,546 40. The Receiver of the Erie Railway Company having made a report of its operations from Oct. 1, 1877, to June 1, 1878, the two reports are combined in the statistics appended, for the purpose of showing the results of the whole year's work. Thus it is shown that the earnings of the year amounted to $15,644,978 09; the operating expenses, $10,635,863 67; net earnings, $5,009,114 42; net revenue, deducting losses from various sources, $4,913,075 69. After deducting rents and claims, taxes, interest on mortgages and loans, premium on gold, guaranteed interest on other than the bonds of the Erie Railway Company, expenses of organization, expenses of foreclosure, and the interest on funded debt, it is shown that the profit during the year 1877-8 amounted to $625,431 77. The interest on the whole amount of the funded debt in 1876-7 was $3,807,764 50; the amount charged in 1877-8 was $3,743,403 41. The aggregate result of the operations of the leased lines was as follows: Profit, $104,479 93; loss, $388,224 19; balance loss, $283,744 26. The Paterson and Hudson, Paterson and Ramapo, and the Union Railroad between Jersey City and Duffens are leased and their earnings and expenses are merged into the general accounts of the main line. The operations of other branch lines not leased are also included in those of the main road. Viewing the operations of the leased lines as contributions to the main line, the report estimates their value in gross earnings at between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000. After the tables showing the earnings and expenses of the main line and branches for the years 1876-7 and 1877-8, it is seen that the increased earnings of 1877-8 over those of 1876-7 were, from general freights, express, and rents, $1,900,563 40, while the earnings from coal, passengers, mails, and miscellaneous, fell off $964,475 23, still leaving an increase in net earnings amounting to $936,088 17. Added to this is the decreased cost of operating, ($263,975 93,) which would make the total of the net earnings $1,200,064 10. The reduction of 6 per cent. in the working expenses is attributed to the increased price of labor, the falling off in the cost of supplies and material, and particularly to the improvement of the roadway, the rolling-stock and general management. A falling off of $2218,2.40 56 in the receipts from first-class passengers is reported, while those from the emigrant passengers show an increase of $68,272 02, as compared with 1876-7.

Among the improvements reported is the completion of the third rail on Aug. 14. Its cost was, between Buffalo and Elmira, $1,060,032 18; Waverly and Susquehanna, $336,676 70; Susquehanna and Jersey City, (estimated,) $1,162,705; total cost of third rail, $2,559,413 88. There are now on the road, in active service, 475 locomotives; 12,963 cars of all classes, and 3,000 box-cars are being built. By means of the Union Steamboat Company, which belongs to the railroad company, the connection of the system of railways for through traffic with the West is complete. The completion of the standard gauge from Jersey City to Buffalo will, it is thought, enable the company to reach all the shipping points in the West.

The total movement in anthracite and bituminous coal during the year ending Sept. 30, was, of anthracite, 2,463,698; of bituminous, 387,408, making a total of 2,850,106 tons. The very great depression in the demand for anthracite coal is attributed to the stocks in hand on Jan. 1; to the lessened consumption due to the mildness of the last Winter, and to other minor causes. The total amount of oil handled during the year, was, refined oil, 97,237 tons; crude, 312,623 tons; showing a total increase of 23,640 tons as compared with the previous year. The live stock there was an increase of 13,538 over 1876-7, while the movement in lumber showed a falling off of 2,494 tons. Speaking under the head of the "Basis of Prosperity," the Directors say: "It may be accepted as true that hereafter the rates on throught freight will be kept at low figures, and that railway companies must look for their profits more to an increase of tonnage than to an increase of rates." Further on they add: "These low rates must prevail, owing to the competition between the great lines of railway extending from the Atlantic seaports to every part of the tonnage-producing regions of the West."

The funded indebtedness of the company, excluding the prior lien bonds of $2,500,000 not yet issued, is reported as being $66,818,203 69, which, added to the capital stock, makes the total funded debt and stock $131,818,203 69. In conclusion, the report speaks of the operations of the year as a whole as fairly encouraging.

J. W. HULL ARRESTED.

THE $30,000 BOND ROBBER SECURED IN NEW-BRUNSWICK.

John W. Hull, the aged thief who obtained $30,000 worth of United States bonds from Field, James & Co., No. 16 Broad-street, under pretenses that were false in morals if not in law, was arrested in a small town in the Province] of New-Brunswick, on Thursday, by Detective Faye, of the Montreal Police. The swindled firm was nearly a week in ascertaining the direction of Hull's flight. He had covered his tracks to the river boundaries of this island so successfully that mere accident put Mr. James in possession of the fact that he had left the City by the Park River Line. His hurried departure from the Park-Avenue Hotel had been timed so as to catch a steamer of that line just as she was throwing off her hawsers. Hull reached Providence on Sunday morning, and remained there until early next day, when he purchased tickets and embarked for Canada by way of the Providence and Worcester Line. The trace of him disappeared at the last-named place, as the ticket agent could not remember his Canadian destination. Mr. Field searched Ottawa without result, and had reached Montreal, when the scent grew warm again. A friend, who called upon him at a Montreal hotel, remembered having seen a well-made-up young old man who had got drunk at the hotel they then were in a few days before. The inebriated stranger grew boastful as he grew frantic, and finally pulled out a roll of money which consisted of $28,000 in $1,000 greenbacks. He was supplied with plenty of smaller money. On this clue the detective hired him to New-Brunswick, where he arrested him and found most of the money still in his possession. The advices received by the firm indicate that Hull made no objection to accompanying the detective to Montreal. If he should now legal fight there, it is the intention of Mr. Field to prosecute him in Montreal for the fraudulent obtaining of the money, and it is expected that he will disgorge rather than undergo the long term of imprisonment which would otherwise result. The firm is ignorant of the manner or place in which he turned the bonds into money.

Superintendent Walling yesterday received a dispatch from the Canadian authorities announcing the arrest of Hull, and asking that extradition papers be sent on for his removal to the United States. Mr. Walling, however, said that Hull had not committed any offense mentioned in the extradition treaty, and could not, therefore, be brought back unless he should return voluntarily. The firm he robbed can, however, recover the bonds found in the possession of Hull by civil action in the courts of the Dominion.

A FRIGHTENED GERMAN.

A German, giving his name as John Hamman, living in Pitt-street, ran excitedly into the Central Office late last evening and complained to Inspector McDermott that his life had been threatened by a man at No. 78 Pitt-street. Hamman is a cabinet-maker out of work, and in answer to an advertisement in a German newspaper he went to the place named in search of employment. He found two men there, one of whom told him he could have the job by applying at No. 123 East Broadway. The other man declared that Hamman must go to No. 123 Warren-street. They got into a wrangle, and Hamman called them both swindlers. One of the two men picked up a large carving-knife and said he would cut Hamman's heart out, when the frightened German sprang out of the door and ran for dear life. He was advised by the Inspector to swear a warrant for the arrest of the men.

REGISTER LOEW'S DEFENSE.

HIS ANSWER TO THE CHARGES AGAINST HIM.

HE ADMITS HE DID NOT LEARN HIS DUTIES—GENERAL DENIALS OF SPECIFIC ACCUSATIONS—WHAT THE GOVERNOR SAID.

The formal answer of Register Loew to the charges preferred by the Bar Association's Committee was submitted to Gov. Robinson at Albany yesterday. Messrs. Charles F. MacLean, Henry E. Knox, and George Déforest Lord appeared on behalf of the committee, and ex-Judge Shipman, Aaron J. Vanderpool, and Charles E. Loew represented the Register.

The answer thus submitted is long and rambling, and abounds in general statements rather than giving specific denials in detail in response to the specific charges preferred by the committee. Mr. Loew begins by saying he entered on the discharge of his duties as Register on Jan. 1, 1878. In discharging the duties it is necessary for him to have a deputy, an assistant to the latter, an examiner, two index clerks, and from 85 to 90 other clerks and employes. There is a great amount of detail about the business which must be left to subordinates. It is simply impossible, he says, for him to count or otherwise ascertain, personally, the number of folios in each paper presented for record at the office, and such duty has necessarily been performed by the deputy or by one of the clerks, as has been usual for many years. The books in the office are increasing at the rate of about 70 volumes per year, and, during the past year, 17,367 papers were received. He denies generally that he, or any of his subordinates to his knowledge, has been willfully guilty of any neglect of duty, misfeasance or malversation in office, or of extortion. He says he has kept in his office books which were in substantial compliance with the law, and in which the entries of fees charged and received were kept, "with the exception, perhaps, of a few items that may have been, through inadvertence, omitted on the days in August and October" stated in the charge of the committee of the association. Such books, he remarks, were always open for inspection during business hours. He denies that he ever personally fixed or established, or caused or permitted to be fixed or established, any tariff of charges for recording documents, or that any scale of prices ever fixed or authorited by him is as stated. When he entered upon the duties of his office, he says, he did not know what the legal charges were, and believed that those exacted by his predecessors were correct. He undertook no personal examination of the law for himself, but directed his deputy to inquire from those formerly in the office what the legal rates were. The deputy did so, made up his list, and submitted it to John Y. Savage, the former Deputy Register, who pronounced it correct. The Deputy, Mr. Loew says, did not submit the list to him personally, "and beyond a general knowledge of the fact that the scale of charges had been thus obtained, this respondent had no knowledge in regard to the same, but always assumed and believed that the same were strictly legal and proper."

On the complaint of overcharging, he says, was ever made to him, and that was about a search where the charge did not exceed $1. When the complaint was made, he says he reduced the bill to the amount desired when the complainant left the Association. When the charges of extortion first appeared in the newspapers in September last, he wrote to his deputy, telling him to charge only the legal fees, and to himself, for the time, examine the different laws applicable to his office and the fees to be charged for services rendered therein, "with a view of ascertaining precisely what the lawful charges were." After the examination he told his deputy and subordinates what he believed the legal fees to be, and directed them to charge such fees only. This, he says, was before the appointment of the Bar Association's committee. He then endeavored to ascertain what his predecessors in office used to do, and says he ascertained that for the past 30 or 40 years the practice has been to estimate rather than count the number of folios in each instrument presented to be recorded, and to add five folios, in addition, to cover the Register's certificate in the liber, the entry of the record in the general indices, and the entries in the sticklers. This practice he says he was unauthorized by law he directed its discontinuance.

Mr. Loew says a charge of 25 cents extra on each instrument for returning it would not be unreasonable and would be legal, but that he has not made such a charge. He did not think that a printed schedule the charges in his office were made until his deputy presented the same to the committee, and then he "immediately condemned it." Mr. Loew then gives the correct fees ceased to be collected in his office by the committee, whom he seems to blame for not finding out for him what the legal fees of the office are. He also refers to the action taken at the recent meeting of his bondsmen, at which he looked over and prepared a schedule of fees for him, and denies that he "knowingly" took, received, &c., the sums stated by the committee for recording the instruments and mortgages specified by Isaac Bell, Jr. Before obtaining the office of Register, he says, he had been a Judge for 12 years, and had never had any special business in the Register's office, nor did he know what the rates of fees allowed by law were, or what his predecessors had charged. He thought it safer to follow the old rates than to look up the matter for himself. The schedule prepared by his deputy was in entire good faith. When he learned by his own examination that certain of the charges were illegal he stopped them. Since the preparing of the recent schedule of fees by his friends he has adhered to it, though he believes the rates to be lower than the law would allow. He has ever been ready to meet the views and wishes of those doing business with his office, "without special regard to his own emoluments." If due attention, he adds, be given to his claim for payment of fees for making and sealing certificates, indexing records, and returning papers after being recorded, it would more than equal all erroneous or mistaken charges, if any such have been made. Any such charges, if made, were made unwillingly, he says, and in violation of his orders. In conclusion, he "submits that no public interest requires his removal" from office, "nor is it just and proper that he should be removed, or that any action should be further called in question." He prays for a dismissal of the charges. He verifies the answer, and his deputy, Augustus T. Docharty, verifies his statements concerning the charging of fees.

The answer was filed by Gov. Robinson, and after a recess of 10 minutes Mr. Knox addressed the Governor, and directed his attention to the fact that the reply created an issue that the charges had not been proved. The committee had charged that the Register did charge illegal fees, and the Register answers that he did not "knowingly" overcharge. The same method of evading the charges is observed in another passage of the reply, in which, referring to the allegation that a schedule of fees largely in excess of the legal charges was in use in the Register's office, the answer is made that the Register did not "personally" permit such a schedule to be prepared or used. Mr. Knox proposed that the representatives of the Register should strike out the word "knowingly" and make a direct issue; but this proposition was not received favorably. The consultation lasted for an hour and a half, and at its close Gov. Robinson said he should require time to examine the charges and the reply, and then, if the necessity became apparent to him, he would appoint a commission to take proofs. It is remembered that the case of Isaac Bell, Jr., when Excise Commissioner Morton, charged with neglect of his official duties, the Governor decided that the plea of ignorance of the law was not a valid one, and that he was bound to be acquainted with the duties of the office he had undertaken to fill.

THE MISSING MISS WRIGHT.

The Police have not yet succeeded in obtaining any trace of Miss Cornelia Wright, the young lady who has been missing from her home in Poughkeepsie since the 2d inst., and who is supposed to have come to this City. She left her home suddenly, without giving her parents any intimation of her intention, and since that time she has not been seen by any of her relatives or friends, nor has anything been heard from her. Her parents believe that when she left home she was temporarily deranged. She did not take a change of clothing with her, and had only a small amount of money. A friend of Miss Wright called on Superintendent Walling yesterday, and suggested that Miss Wright may have taken service with some family as a domestic. She had been impressed with the idea that she ought to earn her own living. Although her parents are comfortably situated. It is feared that in brooding over this idea her mind has become unsettled. It is not known positively that she came to this City. On the day she left home, Miss Wright went to the railroad station at Poughkeepsie and purchased a ticket for New-York. She was seen by the Depot Master to get on board the train but it could not be ascertained whether she landed at the Grand Central Depot or left the train before it reached New-York.

ARRESTED ON A CHARGE OF FORGERY.

Robert Morris, aged 20, who claims to reside in St. Louis, was arrested yesterday charged with the forgery of two checks on the Bank of the Metropolis. It appears that on the 26th of December the accused presented at the bank a check for $15, purporting to have been drawn by Charles Lefler, the former proprietor of the Irving House, to the order of F. Hunter, and which bore the indorsements of F. Hunter, Thomas Murphy, and Thomas Stokes. The check was paid, but the next day it was discovered that it was a forgery. Yesterday an American District Telegraph messenger called at the bank and presented a check for $325, purporting to be drawn by Charles Lefler, to the order of John Fox, and indorsed as follows: "John Fox, receive. Charles Lefler." This check was at once discovered to be a forrery, and the lad was detained. He informed Mr. Robert Ward that the check had been given him by a young man who was waiting for him at the Metropolitan Hotel. Detective Shelley was sent for, and Officer P. P. Byrne, of the District Telegraph Company, was summoned. A decoy package was made up, and the lad was sent to the Metropolitan Hotel to meet the man who had sent him with the check. The officers waited in the office, and as the lad entered Morris came forward and the messenger gave him the package. He was immediately arrested by the detective, and locked up at the Central Office. He is not known to the detectives, and he refused to make any statement relative to the forged checks. He will be arraigned at court to-day.

DEPRESSION IN FIRE INSURANCE.

THE UNDERWRITERS CONSIDERING THE CAUSES—A TARIFF ASSOCIATION TO BE FORMED.

The depression in fire insurance business, which has kept pace with that of all other commercial ventures, and has resulted in the liquidation or more summary decease of many companies deemed solvent and prosperous, led to the appointment of a committee of nine members of the Board of Fire Underwriters to inquire into the causes of the depression, and recommend what action, in their judgment, would remedy the present demoralized condition of fire insurance in this City and vicinity. The committee, of which Mr. John D. Cocks was Chairman, made its report on Dec. 18 ultimo, but its recommendations were postponed for the action of a meeting of the board, which was held yesterday. Eighty-three companies were represented. The report, after reciting that out of the many causes of depression it selected for action only those which seemed to be of general application and importance, sets forth, as most prominent among the unavoidable causes, the depression which has characterized all kinds of business for several years; the shrinkage of values, thus reducing the volume of insurance needed, and the increase of capital in competition for this diminished volume of business. Any hopes for a change in these conditions must be based upon a return of general business prosperity, and the revival of the trade and commerce of the country. The principal avoidable causes are the following: The failure to sustain a uniform tariff of rates; the allowance of rebate to the assured; and the payment of excessive commissions to brokers. Without further enumeration of minor causes, and admitting the consideration given those already named, that their influence is injurious to the business of fire insurance, and that they are avoidable, then the remedies are the establishment of a uniform tariff of net rates without rebate or deduction to the assured, and a restriction of the rate of commissions to brokers. If, by the common consent of all the companies and agencies, an agreement could be had on these points, it would go far toward saving the business from that destruction to which the present uncontrolled competition inevitably tends. There are difficulties in the way of such an agreement, and of forming and enforcing the rules necessary to carry it into successful operation; but these obstacles are not insurmountable. It must be obvious, in the first place, that in any plan agreed upon perfect comity must be maintained toward each other by all classes of companies; if companies doing an agency business agree to, and do sustain, local rates in this City, the local companies which have no agencies, but which take risks in other cities over their own counters, must sustain the local tariffs of the places where the risks are located. Agency companies and foreign companies cannot be expected to respect our local tariff here, unless our local companies are equally willing to respect the tariffs of other places.

Agency companies which have adhered to the system of rebate to the assured have a right to demand that the abolition of that system be accompanied by a lower rate of commission to brokers, not only as a precaution against the pernicious habit of a division with the assured of the broker's commission, but as evidence of an honest effort on the part of the companies to reduce this expense of the business. They therefore recommend that the members of the board take the necessary action to form a Tariff Association, place upon the clerk's table the proposition to form such association, let the companies voluntarily and unanimously come forward and sign it, and then, if they agree upon a plan of action, the remedy for the present demoralization will be in their own hands.

At the conclusion of the reading, a motion to adopt the report and its recommendations was passed by a vote of 79 to 4. After the meeting of the board, an informal meeting of those in favor of a report was held, when it was decided to take further steps toward the formation of the proposed Tariff Association on Tuesday next.

THE RAILWAY MAIL DORMITORY.

WHERE THE POSTAL CLERKS SLEEP IN THE INTERVALS OF DUTY—A PECULIAR GOVERNMENTAL INSTITUTION.

In the upper story of the north front of the new Post Office there is a Post Office dormitory, which comparatively few persons other than those using it ever saw or heard of. It is neat, clean, commodious, and airy, and contains 50 spring iron cot bedsteads, each furnished with two mattresses and the necessary bedding. This sleeping-room is provided for the use of the clerks belonging to the railway mail branch of the postal service, and was established shortly after the railway mail service was organized. The object of it is to furnish a central and comfortable sleeping place for the clerks when they reach this City from their "runs," so that they may be ready beyond the possibility of delay or mishap for their next "run" outward from the City. When the railway mail service was an institution of weakly and experimental growth, the clerks were obliged to find dormitory accommodations at their boarding-houses, at lodging-houses, or at hotels. They were thus scattered all over the City, and in the case of many requesting early or long distances from the Post Office. It is always necessary that the clerk shall be at the Post Office from two to three hours before the actual time of starting of the train which carries him out, and it not infrequently happened, before the dormitory plan was introduced, that men overslept themselves, and thus missed their trains. Hundreds of the older employes of the service, among them many Postmaster Pearson, and Superintendent Jackson, in this City, have slept for three or four hours in the old Post Office building at Liberty and Nassau streets, with a couple of mail bags only as their bed, with occasionally the luxury of a mail bag rolled up to serve as a pillow. This was sometimes necessary, because their trains were delayed in coming in, and, instead of their having seven hours of sleep, they had less half of the time on the road, and the wearied condition did not dare trust themselves to the luxury of a soft bed, for fear of missing the "run" out. Again, these clerks are frequently obliged to work for 36 to 48 hours without sleep, subject to the jar and fatigue of standing on their feet, busily at work on moving trains, and the nearest bed on their reaching the Post Office is the most welcome. It was under these circumstances that the dormitory came into existence, and now it is a recognized adjunct of the railway mail system, a small portion of the postal appropriation being set apart for the maintenance of dormitories at all the chief centres in the various divisions. A janitor is employed in each dormitory, who keeps a "mail" book, on which the name of each clerk is entered as he goes to bed, with the time at which he is to be aroused and the number of the bed he is sleeping in. When the time comes to awaken him he is quietly aroused by the janitor, and should he, from excessive fatigue again, fail asleep, it is the janitor's duty to call him again. This is done quietly and without disturbing the other clerks, and so all possibility of delay or inattension to duty is avoided.

GOING OUT OF BUSINESS.

THE FIREMEN'S FUND INSURANCE COMPANY REINSURING THEIR OUTSTANDING RISKS.

The Directors of the Firemen's Fund Insurance Company on Thursday voted to accept no new business, and to reinsure their outstanding risks in other companies as soon as practicable. This action foreshadows the liquidation of a company that has been doing business in this City for nearly 21 years. It was incorporated in May, 1858, under a legislative charter, whose salient feature was the agreement to give a percentage of annual profits to the fund for the relief of the widows and orphans of volunteer firemen. The subscribed capital of the company was $150,000, and the names of many prominent and responsible citizens appeared on its stock lists. In 1866 the company procured the rescission of that clause of its charter which related to the contributions to the firemen's widows and orphans, and gave it its name. Up to that time the amounts devoted to its nominal beneficiary were small. Although belonging nominally to the Board of Underwriters, the company is rated as a minor member of the great brotherhood. It strove manfully for large business, and extended itself mainly through agencies, which largely increased its business expenses. In 1871 it lost $30,000 in the Chicago fire, and $10,000 the year following in the great Boston fire. These unusual losses, small when compared with the losses of other companies, were large when considered in relation to the capital of the Firemen's Fund. Still it managed to struggle along, and according to the statement of its Secretary, W. R. Wadsworth, yesterday, never assessed its stock or increased its capital. The Secretary of the Board of Underwriters, however, said yesterday that it had been called upon to make up impairment of capital either twice or thrice.

It certainly was one of the companies that attracted the notice of Insurance Superintendent Smyth, who spent two weeks of last December in examining its accounts. His report, according to Secretary Wadsworth, showed $181,169 assets, (including $150,000 capital stock,) and liabilities, (including the reinsurance liability of 40 per cent. of unearned premiums,) $252,000. This made an impairment of $21,000, or about 14 per cent. The Superintendent pronounced the company solvent, but its officers decided that the insurance outlook was too doubtful to warrant the further risking of their capital. They accordingly took the action recited above. The officers expect to pay the stockholders 90 per cent. of their investment. Since its organization the company has received $1,467,500 in premiums, and has paid in losses, $876,475. The following gentlemen compose its Board of Directors, and were re-elected to serve during the period of liquidation: Charles Mayer Appleby, President; Daniel Manger, Peter Salen, John M. Furman, William J. Sayres, J. M. Varnum, Henry A. Mott, John R. Waydell, William DeL. Boughton, Andrew Cunningham, William R. Wadsworth, (Secretary.) John B. Huntting, Isaac C. Ogden, H. A. C. Taylor, James Benkard, L. P. Nostrand, Michael McDermott, Nathaniel Briggs, James L. Ogden, Hamilton Wallis, E. A. Barr, Henry Morgan, Edward B. Willets, Charles L. Tiers, Isaac C. Ogden, Jr., Joseph J. O'Donohue, S. J. Malleby.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

The American Bank Note Company of this City has just issued an elegantly-engraved calendar, which is ingeniously arranged so as to be serviceable for 12 years.

Special Agents of the Treasury, yesterday, searching a junk-shop in South-street for smuggled cigars, found and seized three barrels of smuggled sugar, one barrel of cigars and tobacco, and a barrel of spirits.

The Secretary of the Electric Boat and Athletic Club states that no such person as Samuel Ansbell, who entered in the recent 25-mile walk at Gilmore's Garden as a member of the club, belongs to that organization.

There were reported yesterday at the Sanitary Bureau 49 new cases of scarlet fever, and nine of diphtheria. Five deaths from scarlet fever and three from diphtheria occurred during the 24 hours ending at noon yesterday.

The Board of Excise yesterday listened to a long argument by Col. Spencer in the matter of the revocation of the license of Matthew Coyle for No. 103 Bowery, known as Owen Geoghegan's saloon, and decision was reserved.

The next lecture in the Cooper Union free course of Saturday night lectures for the people, will be delivered this evening in the Great Hall, at 8 o'clock, by Prof. J. W. S. Arnold, of the University of New-York, on "The Physiology of Animal Motion," illustrated, being the second lecture on the same subject.

The General Term of the Supreme Court yesterday appointed the following-named gentlemen as examiners of applicants for admission to the Bar during 1879: Lewis L. Delafield, Hamilton Cole, and George F. Langbein, and for the Committee on Character of Applicants, Edward Patterson, William F. Shepard, and Edward F. Brown.

Judge Choate, in the United States District Court, yesterday granted a further stay of proceedings in the case of "Red" Leary until the 13th inst. The stay granted on Jan. 3 expired yesterday, and Leary's counsel desired a little more time in which to perfect their appeal from the order remanding him for extradition to Massachusetts.

Three assignments were recorded in the County Clerk's office yesterday: Hugh Reilly to Napoleon Valentine; Peter A. Rath to Max Feller, with preferred debts amounting to $1,705, and William J. H. Ballard and William Hailey, composing the firm of Ballard & Hailey, importers, of No. 46 East Fourteenth-street to Hudson Hoagland.

The committee appointed by the Board of Aldermen, consisting of Messrs. Stewart, Robert Hall, and Slevin, to consider the claim of Mr. Jacob L. Hamel to the sewer held by Alderman George Hall, decided yesterday to take no steps in the matter pending the proceedings which have been taken against the Inspectors of Election who had charge of the returns.

The following additional subscriptions have been received for the Seventh Regiment Armory fund: John Carey, Jr., $250; Colgate & Co., $250; Samuel D. Babcock, $250; S. V. Hoffman, $250; Samuel D. Babcock, $250; Edward R. Livingston, (second subscription,) $100; Isaac Bell, $100; Charles C. Goodhue, $100; J. N. Phelps, $100; Pacific Fire Insurance Company, $100.

A religious fanatic named Henry F. Sneider, became so demonstrative yesterday in the Fulton-street prayer-meeting that it became necessary to call in an officer to place the excited gentleman under arrest. Sneider made another ridiculous exhibition of himself in the Police Court, the result of which was that Justice Smith, who considered his mind deranged, committed him for medical examination.

Edsall's City Guide Map for 1879 is a very useful publication. It shows the steam railroads, streets, and elevated railroad stations, and gives the piers of the foreign and coastwise steamships. The map shows from Spuyten Duyvel Creek to Coney Island, and from Newark, N. J., to Jamaica, Long Island. It is a complete guide to Coney Island, Rockaway, and all points of interest around New-York and Brooklyn.

Joseph Ennis, a gardener, living at Summerville, N. J., while passing through Oliver-street, yesterday, at the corner of New Bowery, suddenly uttered a cry, "O, I am dying!" threw up his hands and fell to the pavement dead. He had been suffering from hemorrhage of the lungs. In his pockets were found a small sum of money and bank-book No. 11,616,619 Seaman's Industrial Savings Bank, of No. 51 Chambers-street.

The suit of Philip Daly against Peter De Witt, to recover $5,000 damages for an assault and battery, was tried yesterday before Judge Van Hoesen and a jury, in the Court of Common Pleas. Daly charged that De Witt struck him violently upon the head with a hammer. De Witt in part admitted that he struck the plaintiff, but claimed that he acted in self-defense. The jury was instructed to bring in a sealed verdict this morning.

Annie Plant, the young woman, who was found on Christmas Day in Brooklyn suffering from the effects of an abortion, and who accused "Dr." Newton Whitehead, of No. 215 East Forty-fifth-street, of the malpractice, was yesterday discharged from the Brooklyn City Hospital, where she had been under treatment. She was brought to this City yesterday afternoon by Detective Rall, of the Brooklyn Central Office. She will be taken to the District Attorney's office to-day.

A schedule of the assets and liabilities of Morris Rubens, assignor to Mendal Joseph, was filed yesterday in the Court of Common Pleas. The liabilities are $26,033

A BLOW AT GERMAN LIBERTY

BISMARCK TRYING TO SUPPRESS FREE DEBATE.

A BILL TO PREVENT ADVERSE CRITICISM IN THE REICHSTAG—PENALTIES IMPOSED INCLUDING EXPULSION—THE PRESS TO BE PUNISHED FOR PUBLISHING CENSURED REMARKS.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The Times' Berlin dispatch says: "For some time past sinister rumors have been afloat that the Chancellor was casting about for power to prevent members of the Reichstag from using unbecoming expressions in the highest representative assembly of the land, and to-night all Berlin has been put into commotion by the publication of a document which leaves no doubt as to the intentions of this strong-willed man. This is no less than the outline of a bill aiming at the Federal Council, and it must necessarily take such a prominent place in the history of civil liberty that I do not hesitate to transmit it to you entire. The document bears date 'Friedeichsruhe, Dec. 31,' It places the power of punishment of members of the Reichstag in the hands of a committee composed of the two Vice-Presidents and 10 members of the Reichstag, which would meet at the order of the President of the House or on motion of 20 members. The committee would be authorized to inflict the penalties, viz.: (1) to order a member to receive public reproof before the assembled House; (2) to oblige an offender to make an apology before the assembled House; (3) to exclude a Deputy from the Reichstag for a fixed period. Should this exclusion extend to the entire term of the session of the Legislature, a member so punished may also be liable to lose the right of being elected to the Reichstag; and, further, an independent motion in favor of depriving a Deputy of his right of election may be brought forward in the House. If the unbecoming conduct of which a member of the Reichstag is pronounced to have been guilty involves an action punishable by the common law, the Deputy in question may be handed over to the judicial authorities, to be dealt with according to law simultaneously with the infliction of such punishment by the Reichstag. The reproduction of the speech or remarks which called it forth, in a stenographic report, or any other publication of them in the press, may be prohibited; contraventions of this prohibition to be punishable with imprisonment of from three weeks to three months."

The Daily News' Berlin dispatch says: "The proposed bill practically abolishes all guarantees of freedom of debate, and puts it in the power of the majority to turn any offending member over to the courts. It makes it a penal offense for the press to publish any speech which has been censured by the President of the Diet. Nominally aimed at the Socialist Deputies, the law could be applied or misapplied to any objectionable member of the majority. The bill was wholly unexpected, and seems to alarm even the National Liberals, but they will probably reconcile themselves to it before it comes to a vote in the Diet."

The correspondent of the Daily News at Berlin says: "The rejection of the bill is generally predicted, but I am quite not convinced it will be adopted without essential modifications, in spite of the fine words of the Liberals. Prince Bismarck is as yet master of the situation."

Franz Dunker, an ex-member of the German and Prussian Parliament, has been prosecuted by the Prussian Ministry, for writing an article in the Volks Zeitung, on Aug. 15, criticising the anti-Socialist bill, and has been fined 200 marks.

BERLIN, Jan. 11.—The bill on the subject of Parliamentary discipline is almost unanimously condemned by the Liberal and Moderate press of Berlin and the interior. The Conservative organs are reticent. The National Zeitung has an article which, for that paper, is almost ferocious. It says, ironically, that the fault of the measure is that it does not go far enough; that it would have been more honest and better to propose a complete abolition of Parliament and the substitution of a dictator; that a free Legislature and such a law are irreconcilable.

THE POPE'S ENCYCLICAL LETTER.

INVEIGHING AGAINST SOCIALISM, COMMUNISM, AND NIHILISM—HOW THE PRESS REGARDS IT.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—A dispatch from Rome to the Daily News says the Pope's encyclical letter occupies seven columns of the Osservatore Romano. The Pope inveighs against Socialism, Communism, and Nihilism, which militate, no longer secretly but openly, against the civil State, rupturing the matrimonial tie, ignoring the rights of property, claiming everything, however legally inherited or honestly acquired, and attempting even the lives of Kings. These sinister agencies spring from the Reformation, which opened the sluice-gates of skepticism till godless Governments have arisen wherein the Author and Redeemer of the world is ignored. Youth are trained to believe that man's destinies are bounded by the present, and without any hereafter; hence the impatient and aggressive spirit which seeks its gratification at others' expense. Thus the natural development of the Reformation is indicated by previous Pontiffs, from Clement XII. to Pius IX., in their allocutions and encyclicals, but the Church's warning is more than ever required. The equality desiderated by the sects is contrary to Scripture. There are distinctions between the angels in heaven; à fortiori, must there be distinctions between men upon earth. When tyranny prevails, then the Church shields the oppressed. When the tyrant is too strong, she enjoins resignation.

The Pope justifies Christian marriage, and the subservience of woman to man, of the child to the parent, and of the servant to the master. Such interdependence, rightly observed in the State as in the family, would create on earth as it does in heaven. The poverty, of which Socialism is impatient, is corrected by the Church, which, besides her own charities, enjoins alms-giving on the rich, to whom she thus reconciles the poor. Such is the solution of the evils for which Socialism seeks a revolutionary remedy. Let, therefore, all the principalities and powers accept the Church, the safeguard of earthly, and the surety of heavenly, things.

The Italie (newspaper) regards the encyclical as an appeal to all Catholics to organize a crusade against modern institutions, and, with that object, to participate in political elections.

ENGLISH BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

PRICES IN MINCING-LANE SOMEWHAT FIRMER—DEALINGS IN HOME AND FOREIGN STOCKES.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—In Mincing-lane business shows no tendency toward improvement since last month, and supplies continue large. Quotations, with few exceptions, are lower than in the recent periods of commercial depression and panic. Speculation is still dormant. The statistical position of the coffee market appears more favorable, and a reaction has set in. Plantation Ceylon, new crop, sold largely. Jamaica and some kinds of foreign were rather dearer. Sugar is still devoid of animation, but a considerable quantity of crystallized Demerara has been taken by the trade since the commencement of the year. French refined loaves meet with a steady demand. Beet sugar is higher in several European ports. Rice attracts more attention, and may be quoted rather dearer.

The public sales of tea have been very large, and the chief part of the supply brought forward found buyers. The prices of China experienced no further depreciation, but Indian has given way. Black and white pepper, with most other spices, remain dull. Saltpetre sold, to arrive, at a decline on the late nominal rates.

The Economist says: "Bank bills are quoted at 3⅞ to 4 per cent. discount, and trade bills at 4¼ to 4¾ per cent. Consols and a few first-class foreign and Colonial Government stocks have been steady. Most international stocks have been irregular and weak. British railways, banks, and most industrial undertakings lost a considerable portion of last week's advance. There was some improvement in gas stocks and in United States railways. Brazilian Governments are weak and declining, in consequence of reports that the Government is in financial straits and unable to meet the portions of its floating debt now falling due. American Governments, except the 1867 loan, which now stands first for redemption, are well supported, and the rapid issue of the 4 per cents is attracting much attention."

SHERE ALI'S TROUBLES.

FLIGHT OF THE GOVERNOR OF KANDAHAR—THE AMEER IN RUSSIAN TERRITORY.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The Viceroy of India telegraphs to-day that Gen. Stewart, on the 8th inst., received the news that the Governor of Kandahar, with most of the Kabul officials, had fled toward Herat, and that the garrison had been disbanded. The Deputy Governor sent word offering submission. The British troops will march through Kandahar to-day.

The Morning Post's St. Petersburg dispatch says: "It is anticipated that Shere Ali will arrive here about the middle of February."

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 11.—The Journal de St. Petersburg to-day says: "The Ameer of Afghanistan entered Russian territory, not in consequence of the success of the British, but in order to invoke the mediation of Russia. The Ameer will receive sympathetic hospitality, but the idea of mediation is an illusion, upon the clearing up of which will probably depend the continuation of his journey."

EUROPEAN GENERAL SUBJECTS.

THE JAPANESE AFRAID OF RUSSIA—MR. GLADSTONE TO STAND FOR MIDLOTHIAN—THE FRENCH MINISTERIAL PROGRAMME—THE TURKISH ARMY TO BE REDUCED.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—A dispatch from St. Petersburg to the Morning Post, says: "Advices from Yeddo state that the Japanese are apprehensive that the Russians intend to annex Yesso, one of the largest islands of the Empire."

Sir James Fitz James Stephen has been appointed Judge of the High Court of Justice, in place of Sir Anthony Cleasby, resigned.

The Standard says it has reason to believe that Mr. Gladstone has decided to accept the invitation to contest Midlothian at the next election.

The weather continues very cold.

PARIS, Jan. 11.—A meeting of the Republican Union to-day condemned the Ministerial programme. M. Gambetta was present, and proposed to refer the programme to the bureaux of the Chamber, who shall intrust a committee with the duty of moving a vote either of confidence or want of confidence in the Government. M. Gambetta reiterated his determination to refuse office.

BERLIN, Jan. 11.—The Germania (Ultramontane organ) says: "In consequence of the attacks of the semi-official press upon the Danish Court about occurrences at the Duke of Cumberland's wedding, representations have been addressed to the German Government by the Danish Legation."

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 11.—The Grand Vizier has announced a programme, which provides for the reduction of the Army to a minimum and the decentralization of the administration of vilayets. Hussein, Chief of the Kurd insurgents, has been captured, and Osman, the other chief, has submitted.

BEFORE THE TELLER COMMITTEE.

NEGROES CHARGED WITH CAUSING TROUBLE—CHARGES AGAINST DISTRICT ATTORNEY LEONARD.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 11.—At the meeting of the Teller committee to-day Judge L. V. Reeves, of Tensas, Chairman of the Democratic committee, testified in regard to the fusion organization in that parish, which included such Republicans as Judge Cordell and Sheriff Register. He said: "After this we declined to appoint a committee to confer with Fairfax; the differences that subsequently arose I am convinced did not arise from political causes: Capt. Peck visited Fairfax's house for no political purpose; a rumor had heard that a color-line was to be drawn; the people felt alarmed at this prospect, and my opinion is that Peck went to Fairfax to expostulate with him, and try to induce him to withdraw from his purpose of arraying the blacks against the whites. The history of what occurred is well known. Capt. Peck was shot down, and in the fight that ensued several of the negroes were wounded. One afterward died. This was the starting point of the troubles, and the question became no longer a political one, but a contest between whites and blacks. The negroes at once massed in large numbers, and it became necessary to restore peace. For this purpose Judge Cordell and Sheriff Register assembled a posse to put down the disturbance. Warrants issued for the arrest of Fairfax could not be served, owing to the negroes who flocked around him. Everything was peaceable and quiet on election day."

George Norwood, of Caddo, was called. He appeared with his head bandaged up and spoke with difficulty, having been shot in the face in the Caledonia affair. He testified that the first shot was fired by negroes at him; he did not fire a shot that day; it was reported that negroes had guns stacked in Reem's house, near the polling-place. The witness is a Republican in principle, and has always worked for the negroes, and thought it hard they should be the first to shoot him; he started for Reem's house with McNeill, Deputy Sheriff, to take possession of the arms there, fearing a threatened disturbance by the negroes; as they approached the house, they were fired upon.

William A. Leary, of Caddo, a lawyer and editor of the Standard, was the next witness. He considered District Attorney Leonard responsible for the troubles in the late election. "He is now accusing us," the witness said, "of doing what he advocated in past years. He stated in his interview with President Hayes that there were no whites in the streets of Shreveport on election day; the reason of this was that the negroes surrounded the polls, and the whites staid away to give them a fair showing; the election was fair and peaceful, and negroes voted without molestation."

J. C. Moncure, of Caddo, Speaker of the House of Representatives, testified that the election in Shreveport was fair and peaceable. Negroes voted freely until District-Attorney Leonard, seeing no evidence of carrying the election for the Republicans, ordered negroes to leave the polls and go home. The witness thought some of Leonard's speeches incendiary and calculated to excite bad blood between blacks and whites.

Emanuel Gustine, of Caddo, was called by the Republicans, and testified to the facts already given.

Randal McDowell and Claiborne Kennard, (colored,) of Point Copse, testified that they had left their homes on account of political persecutions, and stated that the bull-dozers of that parish had committed great outrages, whipping and killing negroes.

The committee then adjourned until Monday.

DISCUSSING THE TOBACCO TAX.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The Senate Committee on Finance discussed to-day the House bill to amend the internal revenue laws, which reduces the tax on manufactured tobacco from 24 to 16 cents a pound. The committee confined the discussion to-day to the advisability of reducing the tax on tobacco, avoiding any allusion to the rate. From the drift of to-day's discussion it is the opinion of some members of the Committee on Finance that a reduction will be agreed upon, and that the figure will be placed at 20 cents. The committee will meet on Monday, and will, perhaps, on that day decide upon this part of the bill.

ST. MARTIN'S BOMBSHELL.

AN AFFIDAVIT WHICH THE DEMOCRATS DID NOT WANT.

THE PAPER OFFERED TO THE POTTER COMMITTEE BY SECRETARY SHERMAN SENT BACK TO HIM BY A PARTY VOTE—WHAT STENGER WILL OFFER AS HIS DEFENSE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The Potter committee this morning considered the motion made by Representative Reed yesterday that the affidavit of S. H. St. Martin and the accompanying letter of Mr. Shellabarger, the counsel of Secretary Sherman, be read as the proceedings of the committee. The affidavit was not made public, though it was read in secret session. The Republicans asked that it be made part of the record. This was resisted by the Democrats, upon the ground that the affidavit should not be received when the affiant could be placed upon the witness stand. St. Martin had stated that he was not present when a certain witness [Dular] was induced to make certain statements, but now swears that he was present, and that he swore falsely on a former occasion. He also charges that while in the service of the committee as Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms he was told by Representative Stenger, a member of the committee, not to serve the subpœnas of Republican counsel, but to return them as if the witnesses were not found. Representative McMahon said he was opposed to any indirect method of settling the question before the committee, or allowing an attack on any member of the committee in this way. For what purpose was the paper presented? Would nobody own it? It had already been presented for information, and the committee had derived from it all the information that could be obtained. All agreed that the paper was signed by a man who acknowledged that he could be hired to swear contrary to his former statements. If the paper was nothing but a recantation, and it could be said he was not worthy of credit, let everything he had said by way of denial be rejected. But when he came to cast dirt on a member of the committee, he should come on the stand, and if he had anything to say let him say it like any other witness, in a regular way.

Representative Reed argued that the affidavit of St. Martin had a bearing on the subject of investigation in many respects, and, besides, it contained a charge against a member of this committee. Under these circumstances, and for this reason alone, it seemed to the minority of the committee that, in fairness, the paper ought to be brought before the full committee. Mr. McMahon said that this paper could not be trusted, because the affiant swore that his former statements were false; but the committee did not reject Anderson and Weber because they had severally sworn differently at different times.

Representative Morrison inquired what Mr. Reed's opinion was as to the reflection on a member of this committee. Representative Reed replied that he did not think he ought to express an opinion one way or another.

Representative Stenger said he had no desire for any concealment. As to whether the paper should be filed, he left the determination of the question to the committee. It was only natural, when a person was accused of doing wrong, that he should be informed who his accuser was. He found in connection with the affidavit a letter from Mr. Shellabarger, the counsel of Secretary Sherman, but there was no light thrown on the matter as to how the paper came into his hands. The letter says that the affidavit was forwarded to Secretary Sherman, and put into the hands of his counsel. He [Mr. Stenger] had received a letter informing him how the affidavit came to Secretary Sherman. If the affidavit should be received, he wished to show by whose agency the affidavit reached the Secretary. Further than this, there were placed in his hands sworn statements as to all the facts concerning the affidavit. He should ask that all these statements be placed on the record, should the affidavit be placed there. Representative Blackburn offered a resolution that the Chairman be requested to return the affidavit to the counsel of Secretary Sherman, and to inform Mr. Sherman that St. Martin was now present in the city and under the process of the committee, and would be examined touching the matters embraced in the affidavit, should the same be desired by Mr. Sherman or his counsel or any member of the committee. The resolution was agreed to. Messrs. Cox, of Ohio, Reed, and Hiscock voting against it. Mr. Stenger did not vote.

The Democrats place themselves in the attitude of refusing to inquire into a charge alleging gross official misconduct on the part of one of their number and bribery and perjury on the part of one of their witnesses, to establish, and by means of which he hopes to overthrow, or least break the force of, St. Martin's testimony:

First—That the affidavit in question was obtained from St. Martin by corrupt and illegitimate means. That Morris Marks, Collector of Internal Revenue at New-Orleans and one of the Republican Electors, bribed St. Martin to make it by promising him both a pecuniary reward and a position under him in the Internal Revenue service. That, after obtaining it Marks himself brought it to Washington to be used in this investigation.

Second—That all the material allegations of the affidavit are utterly false. The statement that he [Stenger] directed St. Martin not to serve subpœnas on witnesses called for by the Republican members of the committee, but to report them "not found," he expects to controvert by showing that no subpœna for a witness on the Republican side ever came into St. Martin's hands.

He will also submit counter-affidavits of Messrs. Gibson, Maddux, and Carter denying, so far as they are concerned, the truth of every injurious statement in St. Martin's deposition.

Finally, he will insist upon having the personal testimony of St. Martin instead of his affidavit, and expects to be able by cross-examination to show the motives by which the witnesses' statements were prompted, and expose the persons who, he claims, instigated them.

UNITED UPON RESUMPTION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The Republican Senators met in caucus to-day to consider the question of finance, and to determine whether, in view of the eminent success which has attended resumption, it would be politic to make an effort to unite the Republican party upon this question. This was decided in the affirmative, and a committee was appointed to frame a resolution to be reported to a subsequent meeting of the caucus, which, if adopted, will be presented to the Senate.

A WOMAN'S DEATH SENTENCE COMMUTED.

ST. ANDREW'S, New-Brunswick, Jan. 11.—The Sheriff to-day received instructions not to carry out the sentence of death in the case of Mrs. Ward, who was to have been hanged for complicity in the murder of her husband, which was committed on Sept. 9 last. Her sentence is to be commuted to seven years' imprisonment in the Penitentiary. In the case of Thomas Dowd, the principal in the murder, the law will take its course, and he will be hanged on Tuesday, the 14th inst.

MR. THOMAS LORD DYING.

Mr. Thomas Lord, the octogenarian, who married Mrs. Annette Wilhelmina Wilkens Hicks, Dec. 31, 1877, is lying at the point of death at his home, No. 10 West Fourteenth-street. His death is looked for momentarily, and the fact that he lingers so long is a cause of surprise to his friends and to his physician. He is affected by no well-defined disease, but is simply wearing out. He has taken no substantial nourishment for almost two weeks. It is possible, however, that he may not die for a week or more, for he belongs to a hardy, long-lived family, and is possessed of marvelous vital force. His brother, Rufus L. Lord, who died in 1869, leaving him a fortune of $3,000,000, lingered for almost three months after his powers began to depart. The facts concerning the marriage of Mr. Lord, the opposition of his family to his act, the attempt to prove him mentally incompetent, and the scandal concerning the disposition of a great part of his fortune previous to his marriage are of so recent occurrence that they need not be rehearsed at the present time.

WITNESSES FOR MRS. COBB.

THEIR EVIDENCE SHARPLY ATTACKED BY THE STATE.

A PHYSICIAN UPON THE REPORTED HABIT OF ARSENIC-EATING—DOUBTS OF THE TRUTH OF THE STYRIAN STORY—AFFECTING SCENE UPON THE EXAMINATION OF THE PRISONER'S DAUGHTER—MRS. WATERMAN ACCUSED OF INFLUENCING THE LITTLE GIRL'S TESTIMONY.

NORWICH, Conn., Jan. 11.—The session of court to-day for the continued trial of Mrs. Cobb was comparatively short. Much facetiousness was indulged in by the State's Attorney in cross-examining the first witness of the day, and very facetious answers were often given. The court tolerated this for a long time, as the mirth did not become boisterous.

The first witness was Dr. Pinney A. Jewett, of New-Haven, a gentleman of colossal but well-proportioned figure, and powerful but genial face. He had practiced medicine 40 years and had had a wide experience with poisons. He was asked if he knew J. Headley's work on poisons, and approved the authority. By request of counsel he read from page 387, a foot-note, concerning the possibility of a person tolerating a large amount of arsenic in the system. Taylor's Medical Jurisprudence, edition of 1861, was then quoted. On page 21 the author discredited the stories of arsenic-eating; but in his appendix, pages 693-4-5, quoted Roscoe's paper on "Styrian Arsenic-eating," in which an instance is given of a man taking 4½ grains one day and 5½ grains the next, and continuing to do so three or four times a week. Taylor made the remark that this dose was enough to kill any 12 average English adults. In the edition of 1866 Taylor cites the case of a man in London who took two or three grains a day secretly for three years before an overdose killed him. His death was attended by emaciation. Stillé was the next authority consulted. On page 853, edition of 1860, he says the Styrians eat arsenic for two reasons—for their complexion and to stimulate them for such exertion as climbing mountains in a rarefied atmosphere. This writer remarked that the secret of arsenic-eating by these people was often discovered only on the death-bed. Stillé quotes Landerxin's experiments with animals, which had begun with 1-65 of a grain; the dose had finally been increased to 15 grains without causing harm. Sidney Taynor (edition of 1872, page 235,) alluded to the conflicting statements on this subject, but inclined to credit the Styrian story. Biddle, in his work, (edition of 1874, page 333,) declares that arsenic stimulates the digestive and nutritive processes, and cites the Styrians in support of the theory. James F. Johnson, (in the edition of 1875, volume 2, page 166,) tells of a love-lorn milkmaid who was thin and pale, and tried arsenic to make herself more beautiful in the eyes of a somewhat distant swain. In a few months she became plump and pretty, and had partially won her object, when an injudicious increase of the dose to hurry up the process overdid the business, and killed her. This girl only used half a grain twice or thrice a week. But a peasant who had taken it for 40 years, two or three grains daily, was also cited.

Roscoe's own work, edition of 1875, page 528, was then offered, and the statement already referred to, about the man who took four and a half grains one day and five and a half the next, was read again. Roscoe's special paper in the memoirs of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester, England, was next offered, and read in full. The counsel then produced manuscript copies of translations from the German of Otto and Ludwig Hirt, which contained still more testimony in the same direction.

Having done for the time with these citations, the witness said that he thought Americans might eat arsenic as well as Styrians. He knew the popular notion that arsenic would fatten and improve the complexion. He believed that arsenic-eaters began with from one-eighth to one-half a grain at first. The amount a person could take would depend very largely, as do the use of all medicines given as such, upon the condition of the taker's system. A man who could eat a hearty supper of pig's feet and mince pie, go to bed immediately and sleep well, and wake up bright in the morning, might take a big dose; but a person whose system was debilitated by age, sickness, or excesses, could not take so much. If the arsenic were mixed with food, the person could stand more than if he took it on an empty stomach. If the person were to take arsenic habitually and suddenly stop, the effect would probably be fatal. If a novice were to try to take half an ounce, or 240 grains, inside of a month, it would undoubtedly kill him.

The witness described some of the symptoms attending the use of arsenic, but without stating anything further of note; being examined as to the effect of Atwood's Bitters, California Bitters, Vinegar Bitters, hypophosphates of soda and lime, and "so on," he said they would be a preventive effect on the system if the use was long continued. The State's Attorney objected to the use of the term "and so on," as it had not appeared that Mr. Cobb had ever taken any medicinally. The witness declared emphatically that a person would only let patent medicines alone they would be much better off; strong tea, steeped a long time, might have a very irritating effect on the stomach; a large dose of gelsemium, a nervine which Dr. Button had administered, might be dangerous; he thought it a wrong system of calculating the amount of arsenic in the whole body to estimate it merely from the softer vital parts, which would more readily absorb a mineral with greater rapidity and directness of purpose.

The State's Attorney then asked a few questions. The witness neither knew himself and never met a physician who knew, nor ever read the writings of any author who, from his own experience, knew of a person eating arsenic as the Styrians are said to do. "Now," said the State's Attorney, "let us see if we can't dispose of that story."

Q.—You have quoted from Taylor; do you regard him as good as any other of these authorities? A.—I do, Sir.

Q.—Do you read from his edition of 1866: have you seen his sp-cial treatise on poison of 1875? A.—No, Sir; I tried to get it in New-York last week, but couldn't.

The State's Attorney then offered the volume in question, and read for the effect that there is yet no proof that a person can habituate himself to the use of arsenic.

Q.—Do you approve of that statement? A.—It is a later statement by the author than the other; but I don't know as it is more satisfactory.

Mr. Wait—This later statement is not of any more value than the other, is it?

Mr. Waller—Perhaps Taylor, like Mr. Wait, as he grows old, doesn't grow any better. [General laughter.]

The witness finally approved the statement, and also the subsequent statement by Taylor, that the case of the Styrians hardly required serious notice; that arsenic-eating was not prevalent in this country; that the workmen in the arsenic grinding mills plugged their nostrils to escape breathing the dust; that in such cases the person rarely sometimes die; that arsenic-eating is attended sometimes by shortness or difficulty of breath as well as helping to induce "longness of breath," and that these things were not found in Styria. If they were, they purport to be, "have no practical bearing in legal proceedings." The witness said that he found in his own practice that he could not increase nor continue an arsenical dose beyond a given point without needing to reduce or stop it. The counsel for defense, Mr. Greene, observing how completely the direct testimony of his witness had been demolished, inquired if he had anything to retract. He answered, "No."

Q.—Do you believe that those Styrians really do eat poison? A.—Yes.

Mr. Waller—Did you not say a few minutes ago that this whole story was contrary to your reason? A.—Yes, Sir; but I take it on faith.

Q.—What, do you take things on faith in medicine? A.—Yes, Sir. If a good authority asserts that, and my own experience has not shown me anything to the contrary; medicine is still a very uncertain science.

Q.—Did you ever try to give any of your patients as much arsenic as these Styrians are said to take? A.—No, Sir—familiar.]

Mr. Waller—Then, Sir, you have faith without works? A.—Yes, Sir. [A hearty laugh ensued in which witness and counsel joined.]

Mr. Waller—Do you mean to say that he was not accustomed to experiment on his patients.

Three or four other witnesses were introduced for the defense, but they were either uncertain as to dates and hours or were for some other reason of little value. One witness admitted that he was the prisoner's cousin, and showed a remarkably weak memory. Howard Stanton distinctly remembered walking home part way with Mrs. Cobb and child from an entertainment one night, when Bishop says she was with him. He determined the hour by a passing train.

The State's Attorney now signified that he wanted to see Mrs. Waterman, Mrs. Cobb's mother, a few questions. Mr. Wait made a seemingly careless, but audible, remark about this being the State's witness now. Mr. Waller immediately retorted that she was still the witness of the defense, and he was cross-examining her. The point came up again later, and proved of the utmost importance. She was asked if, a few days ago, after Mrs. Cobb's child, Della, had been before the State's Attorney, she had said to the girl that she must be mistaken in supposing that she had ever seen a cup of her mother's marked "Pet." She answered, "No."

Q.—Have you attempted to influence that child as to how she should testify? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Didn't you say to her that the lawyers must have been talking about a motto over the door, and that she was mistaken about it? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Didn't she say to you that she had related to the lawyers, in the presence of her grandfather, her grandmother, and her aunt, that she had seen a cup marked "Pet?" A.—No, Sir.

Q.—When did the child first hear of a cup from Bishop to Kate marked "Pet?" A.—Not until Bishop mentioned it on the witness-stand.

Q.—Was this after this conversation with the child? A.—It was, Sir.

Q.—Then if the child knew about such a cup before your conversation, and when she was with the attorneys, how did she learn of it? A.—I don't know, Sir.

Mr. Waller—That will do, Madam.

The child was now put upon the stand. She was a delicate little thing, a few weeks under 10 years, with a shy face, small features, and a timid but sweet voice. After she was sworn, Mr. Wait began his battle by objecting to her being put on the stand because of its impropriety and because of her tender age. Mr. Waller asked the court to ascertain if the little one was a fit witness. Judge Park directed Mr. Waller to put the usual questions. Mr. Wait again objected, this time to Mr. Waller's asking the questions. The court directed him to go on.

Q.—Della, you say you will tell the truth—what do you mean by that? A.—The truth, Sir, (hesitatingly and faintly.)

Q.—If you don't tell the truth, what then? A.—It would be wrong, Sir.

A profound silence pervaded the room. Mr. Waller removed his glasses, wiped his eyes, and asked, in a subdued tone, "Your Honor, shall I go further?"

Judge Culver then continued in the same gentle, persuasive tone that the State's Attorney had employed. "Now, Della, you say a falsehood is wrong. Do you know if you will be punished for it?"

A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—By whom? A.—God, Sir.

Q.—Who ever told you so? A.—My mother, Sir.

Mr. Wait—Please, your Honor, I'd like to ask a few questions. Della, my child, do you understand the nature of an oath? [This question and the next were put in very high-sounding and impressive tones.] A.—No, Sir, (timidly.)

Q.—Do you realize what constitutes a witness? A.—No, Sir.

Mr. Wait—Your Honor, will you let this child who don't understand the nature of an oath, nor what constitutes a witness, testify?

Judge Park—The court thinks the child is qualified.

The State's Attorney asked two questions, which led the child to declare that she had been before attorneys for examination, with her grandfather, grandmother, and aunt present.

Mr. Waller—Now what—

Mr. Wait (decisively)—I object.

Mr. Waller—Won't you wait till I finish my question?

Mr. Wait—No, Sir.

He then entered into a long argument to show that what Mrs. Waterman had said at that time to the child was not a proper subject of inquiry and was irrelevant. Mr. Waller replied that he wanted to impeach Mrs. Waterman's character, by showing that she had tampered with a witness. After a long conference the court allowed the State to proceed.

Mr. Wait—Then, your Honor, I object on another ground. The State is trying to impeach its own witness.

Mr. Waller—She is not my witness; she is yours; I merely cross-examined her.

Another long debate ensued, and the court ruled that Mrs. Waterman was Mr. Wait's witness. Then, by degrees, in the face of several more objections, mostly to the form of the questions, the attorney drew from the child a clear statement that after her return from the attorney's she had told Mrs. Waterman what they asked her. She had remembered that her mamma had a cup, and that it said "Pet" on it. Her grandma showed her another cup with a motto, "A present from Katie," on it, and asked her if that was not the cup she had remembered, and she said "No." Some other points were inquired about, but without valuable results. The counsel for the defense cross-examined the child to ascertain whether the State's Attorney had asked her any leading questions in the interview of a fortnight ago, but she repeated the words, and said that he had not.

After a few minutes of consultation about the hour of meeting next Tuesday, the court adjourned for the week.

ICE-GORGES AND INUNDATIONS.

THE FLOOD ABATING AT RICHMOND—DANGER AHEAD FOR THE SHIPPING—A BLOCKADE IN THE DELAWARE.

RICHMORD, Jan. 11.—The inundation in the lower part of the city, resulting from the gorging of the ice below the city, is abating. The water has fallen several feet. The gorge extends from Richmond bar, three miles below the city, to Graveyard Reach, a distance of nine miles.

The schooner Oakes Ames, Edmonds master, from New-York, reported this morning as having sunk yesterday, is, as yet, all right, though imbedded in the gorge near Graveyard Reach, where the ice is reported packed to the bottom of the river—at least 25 feet in thickness.

The bark Pepita, Gatjen master, also from New-York, is about a quarter of a mile below the Oakes Ames, in a similar condition.

At Dutch Gap, only a few miles below, the river is comparatively clear, and the water only ordinarily high.

The extent and immensity of the gorge will probably preclude navigation for some time. The danger to the vessels mentioned will be from breaking up of the ice. Other vessels in the river are below City Point, and in comparative safety.

CHESTER, Penn., Jan. 11.—A heavy ice-gorge has formed in the Delaware River about a mile above this city, and consequently, vessels are unable to pass up or down the river. The steamer Catherine Whiting, bound up, three other large steamers, four colliers, and the city ice-boat No. 2 are stuck there.

MONTREAL, Jan. 11.—The St. Lawrence River is still open at Montreal. An ice-bridge has been formed at Prescott, and teams have commenced crossing.

ENCROACHING ON INDIAN RIGHTS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, on Jan. 7, recommended that an additional reservation be set apart for the Pema and Maricopa Indians in Arizona. The settlement of whites on the Upper Gila River, above the lands which have been reserved for these Indians, has so reduced the water supply that they are no longer able to irrigate their lands. The President has therefore issued an executive order setting apart certain lands on Salt River, where some of the Indians have already been forced to go in order to obtain a livelihood. There are about 11,000 of these Indians, and the appropriation for their benefit is only $3,600.

RAN AWAY TO ESCAPE ARREST.

WILLIAMSPORT, Penn., Jan. 11.—Peter Herdic, who failed for over $1,000,000 about a year ago, disappeared from this place 10 days ago, since which time nothing has been heard of him. He has been sick for some time, and his friends aver that he has gone to Florida for the benefit of his health. His sudden departure, however, causes much comment, in view of his financial difficulties, and it is believed outside of his circle or friends that he left here on account of a requisition from the Governor of New-York for his arrest.

TWO MURDERERS CONVICTED.

LEBANON, Penn., Jan. 11.—The jury in the case of Nimrod Spattenhower, charged with the murder of John Iveson, returned a verdict this morning of murder in the first degree, after having been out all night. Spattenhower, who is a German tramp, stabbed Iveson with a large knife during a quarrel in a saloon in this city on Dec. 21, and he died.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 11.—The trial of Troy Dye, ex-Public Administrator of Sacramento County, for the murder of A. M. Tullis, was concluded early this morning, the jury, after being out 20 minutes, finding a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree.

A THIEVING POSTAL CLERK ARRESTED.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 11.—A special dispatch from Sandusky says that Capt. James M. First, of Lucas, Ohio, a postal clerk on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, was arrested last evening charged with robbing the mails. Decoy letters, missing money, and articles sent through the mail were found in First's pocket. He was held in $1,000 bail.

DISAPPEARANCE OF A BOSTON MERCHANT

BOSTON, Jan. 11.—S. L. Ward, of the produce firm of S. L. Ward & Co., No. 134 South Market-street, has disappeared, and it is claimed he has defrauded a large number of creditors in New-England and elsewhere.

BUSINESS EMBARRASSMENT.

ST. JOHN, New-Brunswick, Jan. 11.—S. Lipman & Sons, dealers in cigars, &c., have made an assignment of their property for the benefit of creditors.

THE FISHERY CLAUSE CONDEMNED.

PROVINCETOWN, Mass., Jan. 11.—A large meeting of citizens was held here last night, at which resolutions were passed calling for the abrogation of the fishery clause of the Washington treaty.

A DINNER TO THE MAYOR.

MANY AND VARIED SPEECHES MADE

POLITICAL OPPONENTS FEASTING AROUND THE SAME TABLE—MR. COOPER, EX-MAYOR ELY, JOHN KELLY, AND OTHERS SPEAK—AN EVENING AT THE LOTOS CLUB.

During the past five years, beginning with Mayor Vance, the Lotos Club has been accustomed to dine the incoming and outgoing Mayors of the City. A similar courtesy was extended to Mayor Cooper on his accession to office, and he accepted it, naming last evening as the occasion on which he would be pleased to meet the members of the club. In his letter of acceptance he said that this was the only public dinner at which he intended to be present, and he broke his rule only in deference to the custom which had hitherto prevailed. The ample and luxurious dining-room of the club was tastefully decorated with vines of smilax and bouquets of cut flowers, at seven o'clock last evening, when the 200 members and their guests sat down to the discussion of the excellent menu which had been furnished. The assemblage was one of the most remarkable that ever gathered in a single building. Grouped around the central table in the order given were the following gentlemen: The President, Whitelaw Reid; Mayor Cooper, Augustus Schell, his late antagonist; Maurice Power, the manager of Mr. Cooper's forces; ex-Commissioner Andrews, James E. Morrison, Mayor Cooper's private secretary; Dr. McDonald, the physician in charge of the County Asylum for Lunatics; Commissioner Townsend Cox, Hon. Robert B. Roosevelt, Postmaster James, John A. Foley, attorney of the Department of Buildings; D. G. Croly, Hubert O. Thompson, Dr. William A. Hammond, Peter Cooper, Controller John Kelly, and ex-Mayor Ely. The committee had considerable difficulty in seating these guests, as it is a well known fact that many of them are on terms of personal as well as political enmity toward each other. At the other tables were Chief-Justice Noah Davis, Simon Sterne, ex-Commissioner of Jurors Douglas Taylor, John M. Clancy, Frank Leslie, Constant Meyer, G. F. Cropsey, Paul B. du Chaillu, Chauncey M. Depew, counsel for the New-York Central Railroad; Swain Gifford, W. W. Gordon, Tilden's representative in the Democratic State Central Committee; H. G. Brooks, of Elmira, President of the Brooks Locomotive Works; Philip Bonfort, Thomas J. Barbour, Hon. Isaac I. Hayes, ex-Mayor Wickham, Commissioner Brennan, William Lummis, Noah Brooks, and many others of equally varied attainments.

After the coffee the President rapped for order and opened the proceedings with a short speech, in which he disclaimed any political character for the gathering. He said such a disclaimer might be thought necessary, and he therefore gave it officially and with emphasis. [Laughter.] It was a gathering of men of opposing political opinions, but there was no reason why men who were honest in their aims, though by divergent courses, should not recognize honesty of aim in others. [Applause.] The club could be proud of both the recent candidates for Mayor, as worthy citizens of the Metropolis. It was the glory of American institutions that when a war was over it left no scars. It was the glory of New-York's municipal institutions that good and worthy citizens were members of both political parties. He bade the old and the new Mayor welcome, and proposed their health, the administration of the Government I have not the least doubt that the same pleasant and agreeable relations that existed between myself and the late Mayor will continue with the present Mayor. [Applause.] I know a large number have said that there has not been any reform, and they continue to say it and do not take the trouble to find out the truth. While Mr. Ely was in office there was a great reform. I will not enter into details, but I will say that while the City debt was reduced $6,200,000 during the past two years, by the end of the term of the present Mayor, if matters continue in the same way—and I see no reason why they should not—there will be a further reduction of from three to four millions. Yes. I venture to say that if he and I remain in office, whatever may have been our political differences in the past—I will not refer to them, and he has too much sense to—if we work together the debt in the next two years will be reduced $8,000,000. I wish him all the success that any man can, and though we may disagree so far as the public business of the City is concerned, there will be no disagreement between us on matters which are really in the interest of the people. [Great applause.

Dr. Isaac I. Hayes spoke on behalf of the Legislature. He intimated that no steps would be taken to remove Mr. Kelly from the Controllership. Chauncey M. Depew made one of his characteristic after-dinner speeches, and closed by saying that the Lotos Club had no advice to give Mr. Cooper, and on this and his two years were up, and the club extended to him its parting benediction, it would be one of hearty approval.

At the conclusion of these remarks the Chairman proposed the health, and continued long life and happiness to the end, of Hon. Peter Cooper. The toast was drank standing, and amid hearty cheers. Mr. Cooper, in responding, thanked those present earnestly for their manifestations of regard, and made some discursive remarks in a vein of quaint humor which had its practical as well as funny side. His feelings, he said, were still as ardent and enthusiastic as ever, and he was yet anxious to do all in his power for the welfare of his native City. He would like to suggest an improvement which he thought possible of adoption. Heretofore it will cease to be known as Robert B. Roosevelt, and will demand that proper respect which is attached to the name of Barnwell Roosevelt. [I have seen what use has been made of "Whitelaw" Reid. So don't let any be called "Bob" Astor, but "Barnwell." Gentlemen, this is a great occasion. We have had many celebrities here. We have had Kings here—from the Sandwich Islands—[laughter]—I must be confessed that they were a little "off color," but no occasion could possibly equal this in importance. It has truly been said that the Lotus is not a political club; above all, not a club of office-seekers. But for all that, though it is true that which it is now known that a Mayor and a Controller, and an ex-Mayor, and all these dignitaries of the City Government were to be here every seat was immediately taken up. [Great laughter.] Of course the editor of the Times was present and nothing more. I take myself as an example. Although suffering from a severe attack of the gout, I have toed the mark, and my coming last night was nothing but respect. But if these gentleman should take it into their heads to endow the Lotos Club with a portion of the control of public affairs, the Directory, of course, would have the first call, though I am a member of the Directory. When we pass out you fellows may clinb in for yourselves. There is one duty I should like to call the Mayor's attention to. There is probably no other duty that is paramount to it. And that is the duty of cleaning the Augean stables of ashes. I have sat at the feet of the Gamaliel of reform. In fact I have been a member of the Council of Political Reform. [Laughter.] In that capacity, and imbued with the spirit of reform, I called on the late Mayor one year ago. The streets then, as now, were incumbered with all kinds of receptacles for ashes. I asked the Mayor why he did not do his duty in the premises, and he said, "Oh, don't ask me. Don't say anything to me on the subject of ashes. I can't go anywhere—church, office—I can't even call on my female friends I am so fond of—without being greeted with, 'Mr. Mayor, when are you going to remove the ashes?'" Mr. Cooper may not be able to retain control of the Controller, or the Aldermen, or the Police, or the firemen, or of any other department, but he has preserved to him sacredly—it has descended from a long line of ancestors in office—the right to control the hackmen. That is his own. Let us congratulate Mr. Cooper, and let us hope he will stick to his right."

The Chairman remarked that he thought it was about time some judicial sobriety and impartiality should be infused into the proceedings. He would therefore call on Chief-Justice Noah Davis for some remarks. Judge Davis said, among other things: "I really don't see the need of a judiciary any longer. When I entered this room, and glanced around the central table, I thought there might be need of my services. But the influence of the Lotos Club has created such a perfect mosaic, and has blended the colors together in such perfect harmony, that Othello's occupation is gone. If the spirit of the remarks made here to-night is to prevail in the future government of this City, I think we will have that sort of peace and success which will render unnecessary appeals to the Courts. I don't know, having lived most of my life in the country, what kind of use they put wagons to in the City." [Great laughter.] The speaker then told a story about the President of a village, who had high notions of his dignity and at the village meeting sought to have a resolution passed conferring on him the title of Mayor, or putting the title at least, in the minutes. A little Irishman, who was in attendance, jumped to his feet on hearing the proposal, which he thought had an equine significance, and objected. From the way the "mares" carried on in the city, he remarked, he thought it would be better to have the word "horse" used instead of mare. When the laughter which followed the telling of this anecdote had ceased, Judge Davis continued: We are very fortunate, said he, as citizens of this Metropolis, in having at this present juncture a Mayor, elected as the choice of the people, and in a large degree irrespective of party, a man of integrity, intelligence, and capacity, like Mr. Cooper. We have been fortunate in having had as his predecessors, at least within my personal knowledge, Mayors who have tried to do their duty, and I believe, from the bottom of my heart, that there is in the public officers of this City to day an honest determination to execute the laws for the best interests of the public. [Applause.] Another anecdote was here recalled by the speaker. The story was about the late Judge Grover told Judge Daniels, when the latter was first elected to the Supreme Court Bench. The two Judges met at General Term. Said Grover to Daniels: "Brother Daniels, you are entering upon a hard field of labor, and I would like to give you one little piece of advice—if you want to make your work easy, always have a generous confidence in your brethren." I suggest, said Judge Davis, the same thing to the officers of this City Government, old and new. Let them enter into a generous confidence and emulation, seeking only the best interests of the community, and I believe they will be met in the same spirit by the public. And I look forward that what has been expressed so tersely by Controller Kelly can easily be accomplished if each really desires the best interests of the community. I hope that such is the earnest desire of all concerned, and, so far as it lies in our power, let us co-operate to uphold the hands of the servants who are ready to subserve the best interests of the City, as I believe they intend to do.

Hearty applause greeted the termination of this speech. Then Mr. Marriott sang a song, Burbank gave a recitation, and H. G. Brooks, of Elmira, sang another song. More speeches followed and prolonged the proceedings, which terminated at a very late hour.

FITZ JOHN PORTER'S DEFENSE.

MR. CHOATE CONCLUDES HIS ARGUMENT—THE RECORDER'S POINTS REVIEWED—CLOSE OF THE EXAMINATION.

WEST POINT, Jan. 11.—Mr. Joseph H. Choate, of Gen. Porter's counsel, resumed his argument this morning, beginning at the point where he left off last evening. He said he had omitted, yesterday, in his discussion of the state of public feeling in 1862, to read the testimony of Gen. Pope before the Committee on the Conduct of the War, and quoted a dispatch from that officer to Gen. Halleck, written on Sept. 11, 1862, complaining of a number of the General officers of the Army of the Potomac, and impugning the conduct of Gen. Porter. This, with his testimony, the counsel claimed showed that the prosecution originated with Gen. Pope. He declared his belief that Gen. Porter had been a "scapegoat," and read from Leviticus to illustrate the point. He then considered the events of Aug. 29, beginning with the time he said Gen. Pope was fond of describing as "the earliest blush of dawn." He claimed that in his first order to Porter Gen. Pope supposed the severe engagement he expected would have to be at Centreville, and did not know that McDowell had left open the way behind Jackson. When Pope found out what McDowell's movements had been he then issued and sent the "joint" order, as it is called, to Porter and McDowell.

Mr. Choate was a long time in his discussion of the evidence of the conduct of McDowell, who, he said, had got loose and quoted in a sarcastic vein from the testimony of that officer. He cited the evidence of Gen. Gibbon to show that Pope was informed that the main body of Lee's army was approaching, and that even if, as he claimed, he supposed Jackson first occupied to gain possession him back on Lee's strong force. He showed the disposition of Porter's force at Dawkins' Branch, and quoted McDowell as saying that up to 12 o'clock that day Porter's conduct was entirely satisfactory.

Mr. Choate claimed that the Recorder had proceeded in the case on the theory that Longstreet was not, with his 25,000 men, in Porter's front, and on this theory builds up a case against Porter, but the evidence was against his theory, and was positive and direct. McDowell himself had testified to the skirmish firing in Porter's front at Dawkins' Branch that morning, and that he had actively received a dispatch that a force of some 13,000 of the enemy had come through Thoroughfare Gap. McDowell added afterward that he expected more of the enemy's troops would arrive. There was no disobedience, Mr. Choate claimed, by Porter. The responsibility was upon McDowell, who withdrew King's division of 8,000 men and went off, leaving Porter without orders and confronting an enemy three times as numerous as his corps. The counsel's criticisms on Gen. McDowell were a large part of his argument, and he analyzed the testimony closely. Next, Mr. Choate considered whether there was a retreat, which he claimed need not be discussed, as it was settled by the evidence of the most trusted and competent General officers that there was no retreat or movement in the nature of a retreat by Porter. The counsel's criticisms on Gen. McDowell were a large part of his argument, and he analyzed the testimony closely. Next, Mr. Choate considered whether there was a retreat, which he claimed need not be discussed, as it was settled by the evidence of the most trusted and competent General officers that there was no retreat or movement in the nature of a retreat by Porter. That the movement was not disorderly, and was conducted with the view of going to Centreville, was shown by the evidence of Gen. Porter, Gen. Morrell, Sykes, Griffen, Warren, and others equally well known.

Mr. Choate then read an anonymous pamphlet, which he claimed was shown to be written by Pope, and which contained, as he declared, many erroneous statements; and then, after reviewing the positions of California and Oregon. A number of astronomical and main triangulation stations were occupied in advance of the topographical work proper for the facility and accuracy of subsequent season, while geology and the other natural history branches succeed the topographical work, being facilitated by the information of the maps thus secured to their use.

The members of the survey are now engaged in the current office work consequent upon the field operations, in completing the seven quarto volumes, and upon the regular issue of topographical and classification sheets. The property connected with the survey there is now a field office at Ogden, Utah, where its observatory is placed for field plotting and continuation of the special survey of the Great Salt Lake, and Denver, Col., and Sacramento, Cal., have been selected as additional points for field offices. The mapping of nearly 350,000 square miles has already been accomplished.

THE WEATHER.

SYNOPSIS AND INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12, 1879—1 A. M.—An area of low pressure has moved north-eastward over the Gulf States, and increasing north-easterly winds, with falling barometer and rain, now prevail in the southern States. A decided depression has passed eastward over the North Pacific region, and now is in Dakota. Cooler, high north-westerly winds prevail in the West Gulf States. The rivers have generally risen slightly, and rapidly at Cairo.

INDICATIONS.

For the South Atlantic States, increasing easterly winds, warmer, cloudy, rainy weather, with falling barometer, followed by cooler westerly winds and rising barometer.

For the East Gulf States, south-east, shifting to cooler westerly winds, with rising barometer, partly cloudy, and clear weather.

For the West Gulf States, diminishing north-west winds, possibly shifting to the interior to southerly, cool, followed by warmer, clear weather, rising followed by falling barometer.

For Tennessee and the Ohio Valley, north-east back to north-west, followed by variable winds, falling barometer, cooler, followed by warmer, cloudy weather.

For the Upper Mississippi and Lower Missouri Valleys, falling, followed by stationary barometer, southerly winds, stationary temperature, partly cloudy weather.

For the lake regions, stationary or falling barometer, warmer south and west winds, and increasing cloudiness.

For the Middle Atlantic States and New-England, rising barometer, northerly, followed by easterly winds, warmer, cloudy weather, with rain or snow, and falling barometer.

For the Pacific coast, cloudy weather and occasional rain, followed by clearing weather.

The rivers will generally fall, except slight rises in the lower portions of the Ohio and tributaries.

Cautionary off-shore signals continue at all Islands Galveston, Port Eads, St. Marks, and are ordered for Mobile. Cautionary signals are ordered for Charleston, Smithville, Wilmington, Macon Cape Lookout, Cape Hatteras, Kitty Hawk, Cape Henry, Norfolk, Baltimore, Lewes, Cape May, Atlantic City, Barnegat, Sandy Hook.

THE "OLD TWENTIETH" REGIMENT.

DISCOVERY AT KINGSTON OF A TRUNK CONTAINING A FULL RECORD OF ITS EXPLOITS.

KINGSTON, Jan. 11.—The members of the "Old Twentieth" Regiment have been made glad during the past week by the discovery of numerous documents, hitherto supposed to be lost, relating to their war history. When the regiment, in response to President Lincoln's call for three months' men, first went into the field each company was presented with a chest by commanding Col. Pratt. At the close of the three months' service, and when the regiment enlisted for three years, these chests were thrown aside. One, however, was retained as a receptacle for orders and other documents bearing upon the regiment's history. At the close of the war this chest was stored in Richmond, and until the past week was supposed to be lost. It now transpires, however, that closely following the departure of the "Old Twentieth" from the rebel capital, the chest was shipped to a member of the regiment at Kingston, in whose possession it has since remained unopened and undisturbed. Major Snyder, however, recently received a clue to its whereabouts, and the locks have been cut, disclosing such papers as present a full and clear outline of the deeds performed by the Ulster heroes at Bull Run, Chantilly, Antietam, Gettysburg, and the Wilderness. Gen. T. S. Gates, of New-York, the regiment's historian, has been telegraphed for, and a thorough examination of the many documents will be made on Monday.

THE BANKRUPT PAIGE IN JAIL.

BOSTON, Jan. 11.—Strenuous efforts were made yesterday to get M. Frank Paige, the bankrupt shoe dealer, out of jail on bail, to escape being brought before the Grand Jury to-day. Several parties swore falsely that they might be accepted as bondsmen.

The Grand Jury of Suffolk County to-day reported two indictments against M. Frank Paige for conspiring to defraud his creditors. These indictments charge him with the fraudulent disposal of about $100,000 worth of shoes, &c., belonging to parties in this city. Paige was remanded to jail in default of $25,000 bail.

RESULTS OF THE SNOW BLOCKADE.

BUFFALO, Jan. 11.—The shipment of live stock from this point east is seriously retarded by the dearth of cars on the New-York Central Road. A large number of engines are reported laid up on account of damages received in the effort to get through the snow blockade. On the Erie Road only a limited number of cars are in use. Considerable stock is awaiting shipment.

AN UNHAPPY NEW-JERSEY FAMILY.

MILFORD, N. J., Jan. 11.—Jacob Snyder, who had been separated from his wife and children for some time, returned home yesterday and attempted to enter the house by force. During a fight which ensued Snyder was shot by his son, though not fatally. Other members of the family were severely beaten.

NATIONAL CAPITAL TOPICS.

THE GOVERNMENT TREASURY.

WEEKLY STATEMENT OF THE DEPARTMENT—ANOTHER CALL FOR $10,000,000 OF BONDS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The Treasury now holds $349,253,000 in United States bonds to secure bank circulation, and $13,637,300 in United States bonds to secure public deposits. United States bonds deposited on account of subscription to the 4 per cent. loan, in addition to coin deposit, $5,340,700; United States bonds deposited for circulation for the week ending to-day, $1,470,000; United States bonds held for circulation withdrawn during the week ending to-day, $1,205,000; national bank circulation outstanding, currency notes, $322,375,334; gold notes, $1,468,920. The internal revenue receipts to-day were $416,685 86, and the Customs receipts $362,616 62. The receipts of national bank notes for redemption for the week ending to-day as compared with the corresponding period last year are as follows:

	1878.	1879.
New-York	$1,443,000	$584,000
Boston	1,543,000	967,000
Philadelphia	251,000	200,000
Miscellaneous	834,000	469,000
Total	$4,074,000	$2,500,000

Receipts to-day, $462,000.

The Secretary of the Treasury this afternoon issued the eightieth call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds of 1865—consols of 1867. The call is for $10,000,000, of which $6,000,000 are coupon and $4,000,000 are registered bonds. The principal and interest will be paid at the Treasury on and after the 11th day of April next, and the interest will cease on that day. The following are descriptions of the bonds:

Coupon Bonds—Dated July 1, 1867: $50, No. 23,001 to No. 27,000; $100, No. 24,001 to No. 31,000; $500, No. 22,001 to No. 27,000; $1,000, No. 27,001 to No. 34,000, inclusive.

Registered Bonds—Redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of July, 1872, as follows: $50, No. 801 to No. 1,150; $100, No. 3,901 to No. 4,600; $500, No. 1,401 to No. 4,850; $1,000, No. 13,501 to No. 17,650; $5,000, No. 4,301 to No. 5,330; $10,000, No. 3,501 to No. 4,800, inclusive.

The Third National Bank of Cincinnati has been designated a depository of public moneys to receive subscriptions on account of the 4 per cent loan.

The subscriptions to the 4 per cent. loan to-day were $2,626,450.

SURVEYING THE GREAT WEST.

RESULTS OF THE WORK OF THE PAST SEASON—WINTER WORK AT WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The field season of 1878 of the geographical explorations and surveys west of the one hundredth meridian, under Lieut. Wheeler's Corps of Engineers, has just closed, nearly all the members having left the field since Dec. 25. The 46 observers operated in the following-named divisions: California, Colorado, Nevada, Oregon, Texas, New-Mexico, Utah, and Washington Territory, and surveyed appropriately 35,000 square miles, commencing soon after July 1, and ending as above stated, making nearly six months of field-work. The parties were under the immediate command respectively of Lieuts. Tillman, Symons, Young, and Griffen, Corps of Engineers; Birnie, Ordnance Corps; McComb, Fourth Artillery, and Ludlow, Third Artillery, with Randolph, Third Artillery, as Quartermaster, Commissary, and Ordnance Officer. Lieut. Wheeler also operated with a portion of party No. 1, California Section, in the country north of a line joining Fort Klamath, Oregon, and Camp Bidwell, California, northward to the Columbia River. Prof. Stevenson, geologist, and Mr. Thurston, assistant, spent the season in an investigation of the coal-fields of Colorado and Eastern New-Mexico, and Mr. Henshaw, zoological assistant, in pursuing his investigations and increasing his collections in portions of California and Oregon. A number of astronomical and main triangulation stations were occupied in advance of the topographical work proper for the facility and accuracy of subsequent season, while geology and the other natural history branches succeed the topographical work, being facilitated by the information of the maps thus secured to their use.

The members of the survey are now engaged in the current office work consequent upon the field operations, in completing the seven quarto volumes, and upon the regular issue of topographical and classification sheets. The property connected with the survey there is now a field office at Ogden, Utah, where its observatory is placed for field plotting and continuation of the special survey of the Great Salt Lake, and Denver, Col., and Sacramento, Cal., have been selected as additional points for field offices. The mapping of nearly 350,000 square miles has already been accomplished.

SHANGHAI CONSULATE EXPENSES.

ONE OF MR. SEWARD'S CLERKS AND PROF. WILLIAMS ON THE WITNESS-STAND.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The Committee on Expenditures in the State Department to-day continued the investigation into the charges preferred against Minister Seward, of China. It was the intention of the committee to hear the argument of counsel bearing upon the subpoena duces tecum issued upon Mr. Seward last evening as to whether or not he should be compelled to produce before the committee certain books which he claims are purely private and of no interest to the committee, but owing to illness of one of the defendant's counsel, and the announcement by counsel for the prosecution that they were compelled to be absent during next week, the discussion of the question was postponed until Jan. 21. Mr. Lewis, one of the clerks at Shanghai, under the administration of Mr. Seward, was cross-examined by the defense relative to the expenses of that consulate. Nothing worthy of note was developed, however, most of the time being occupied by argument of counsel upon objections to the questions put to witness. Counsel for the prosecution announced his intention to subpoena the editor of one of the local papers in Washington, he [the counsel] being of opinion that the proceedings of the committee have been purposely kept from its columns.

Prof. Williams, of Yale College, testified that he was Secretary of Legation at Pekin at one time, and also United States Interpreter; he owns a building in Pekin which he rented to the United States Government at a rental of $3,000 a year, with the understanding that out of that amount $600 should be expended for repairs each year. The purpose of examining Mr. Williams is to ascertain whether Mr. Seward, during his administration of the office, made the expenditure for repairs agreed upon. Without concluding the examination, the committee adjourned until Monday.

THE GOVERNMENT PRINTING.

COL. IRISH MAKES ANSWER TO MR. GLOVER'S CHARGES.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Col. O. H. Irish, Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, has addressed a letter to Hon. J. D. C. Atkins, Chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, replying at length to the charges which have been made against the bureau by Hon. J. M. Glover, Chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, in which he gives a complete history of the printing of the national bank notes from the time when the contracts were first made with the New-York bank-note companies, in 1863, down to the final withdrawal of all the work from private establishments, and the order for its execution by the bureau in September last, showing the saving in cost to the Government at each step, and that the bureau now holds the work as the lowest bidder, under advertisement of the Secretary of the Treasury for proposals to do it in September last. As to the charge that the bureau is now executing this work in violation of law, he quotes from the act of March 3, 1875, to the effect that the work is to be done under the direction of the Secretary, upon the most distinctive paper as United States notes. He answers every charge in full, and claims that they are all the result of erroneous information or a misrepresentation of the facts.

HOW THE DANES AVOID LAWSUITS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—A dispatch received at the Department of State from the American Consul at Copenhagen gives an interesting account of the workings of the courts of reconciliation in Denmark, in reply to a letter from the President of the Board of Trade of Dubuque, as to whether such courts, somewhat modified, might not be advantageously introduced into the United States. The Consul says that these courts, as far as Denmark is concerned, are morally and practically of great importance. They not only prevent long and expensive law-suits, but in many cases amicably settle the existing disputes. Their efficiency is based upon the creation of a better feeling between the disputants. Claims, disputes, &c., are settled without the interference of the judicial courts. It is only when a court of reconciliation is unable to bring the disputants to an amicable agreement that cases are referred to a court of justice. Perfect secrecy is maintained in courts of reconciliation in regard to the evidence and disputes brought before them, so that in many cases parties prefer settlements there rather than undergo the expenses and exposure incidental to trials before courts of justice. With the selection of disinterested men of the highest honor and intelligence, as is always the case in Denmark, to preside over courts of reconciliation, the Consul does not hesitate to say that their introduction into the United States would not fail to exert a beneficial influence in the administration of justice.

IN HONOR OF THE LATE PROF. HENRY.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The following will be the order of exercises for the service in honor of the memory of Prof. Joseph Henry, late Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, in the hall of the House of Representatives, on Thursday evening, Jan. 16. The Vice-President of the United States, supported by the Speaker of the House, will preside, and the Senate and House will take part in the services. The opening prayer will be by Rev. Dr. McCosh, President of Princeton College. Addresses will be made by Hon. Hannibal Hamlin, Hon. E. E. Withers, Prof. Asa Gray, of Harvard University; Prof. W. B. Rogers, of Boston; Hon. J. A. Garfield, Hon. S. S. Cox, and Gen. W. T. Sherman. The concluding prayer will be offered by Rev. Dr. Sunderland, Chaplain of the Senate.

DISCIPLINING THE INDIANS.

WHY THE CHEYENNES FLED—AN EXPLANATION FROM THE INDIAN BUREAU—TWO INDIAN CHIEFS HANGED AT WALLA-WALLA.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—In accordance with the recommendation of Gen. Sheridan, received Nov. 16, 1878, and with the concurrence of Gen. Sherman, of Nov. 22, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs requested that the Cheyenne prisoners, confined at Camp Robinson, Neb., be sent to Fort Wallace, or some other military post in Kansas, to the end that the civil authorities of Kansas might select such as were guilty of crimes for trial and punishment according to law. On Dec. 16, 1878, Gen. Sheridan gave orders that they should be sent to Fort Leavenworth for identification by the authorities of Kansas. A number of the principal men were to be retained, and the remainder sent to the agent of the Cheyennes, near Fort Reno. On Jan. 8 the order as to the remainder was modified, and it was requested that full-grown men should be taken to Florida, and be subjected to the same treatments and discipline as were the Indians who were sent there in 1875, and those who would then be left sent to their agency. In a letter received Dec. 30, a request was made that clothing be furnished for the Cheyenne prisoners at Camp Robinson. This was authorized Jan. 8, and on Jan. 7 Lieut. Johnson was asked to state the number of men, women, boys, and girls for whom he needed clothing, and on Jan. 9 it was ordered. As their lack of clothing was not such as to deter them from starting northward, and it is now uncertain how many of them will be left at Camp Robinson for whom clothing will be needed, the order to purchase has been countermanded until such time as it may be learned how many Indians may be in the care of the military at that post that may really need such supplies. It is probable that upon learning that they were to be taken to Fort Leavenworth, where their principal men were to be handed over to the civil authorities for criminal prosecution, the Indians concluded that they had better make an effort to escape now.

YANKTON, Dakota, Jan. 11.—A special dispatch to the Press and Dakotian from the Cheyenne River Agency, on the Missouri River, says: "Two runners from Sitting Bull's camp have just arrived and made the following report, viz.: Their camp is now on Little River near the United States boundary. Twenty-five days ago they held the largest council ever held by the hostiles, when it was decided to send out 12 runners—5 to stand long Road, 5 to Cheyenne, and 2 to Spotted Tail, and two to Red Cloud—as representatives of the hostile bands which belong to these agencies. They say, "We are willing to come in, surrender our horses and arms, and submit to the agency rules, if we are guaranteed protection by the Government. The traders in British America have used every measure to keep us there. If it had not been for them we would have come in with Gen. Terry." A council will be held here to-morrow by the agents.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Jan. 11.—A dispatch from Pendleton, dated yesterday, via Walla Walla, Wyoming Territory, to-day, reports the execution of two Indians, White Owl and Quit Ti Tumps, who were hanged at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. A strong guard of soldiers, regulars and militia, was on duty, to prevent a possible rescue, but nothing of the kind was attempted. The chiefs were dressed in full Indian costume and preserved throughout the proverbial stoicism of their race, both dying with the death chant on their lips.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11, 1879.

The Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Appropriation bill will be ready for action by the committee next week.

The Committee on Ways and Means, at its meeting Friday, went through the testimony submitted on the sugar tariff question, but reached no conclusions.

At the opening of bids for the purchase of silver bullion next Wednesday, proposals will be received for the first time for furnishing silver to be delivered at the Mint in New-Orleans. This will not, however, increase the quantity purchased by the Government, which amounts to about 400,000 ounces weekly.

The Chairman of the House Military Committee has informally appointed a sub-committee, consisting of Messrs. Evins, (South Carolina,) Maish (Pennsylvania,) and McCook (New-York,) to examine the charges preferred in the report submitted to the committee, through the Secretary of War, accusing of mismanagement the Superintendent and other officers of the Soldiers' Home, at Hampton, Va., with instructions to report to the committee, at its meeting on Tuesday next, whether or not an investigation into the charges preferred should be made.

Representatives Hewitt, Sparks, and Foster, the sub-committee preparing the Army Appropriation bill for consideration by the House Committee on Appropriations, held a long session to-day, and has so nearly completed its work that it expects to be ready to report to the full committee Monday or Tuesday. The sub-committee contemplates, apparently with favor, the insertion of sundry legislative provisions for a reorganization of the line and staff somewhat on the principle of the Burnside bill. The proposition, it is understood, emanates from several General officers of the Army. The sub-committee have not, however, as yet taken action on the subject, and its recommendations, in any event, will require the concurrence of a majority of the full committee.

ARMY AND NAVY INTELLIGENCE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—First Lieut. W. A. Kobbe, Jr., Third Artillery, is relieved from duty with the Board of Army Equipment, &c., now on session in this city, and will join his battery. An Army Retiring Board having found Surgeon C. C. Gray, United States Army, incapacitated for active service, he is, by direction of the President, retired from active service. Capt. C. McKibbin, Fifteenth Infantry, will report in person to the Superintendent of the mounted recruiting service to accompany a detachment of recruits to the Pacific coast. On the completion of this duty he will join his proper station.

Master C. P. Rees has been ordered as Assistant in the Department of Drawing at the Naval Academy; Commander L. Huntington to hold himself in readiness to relieve Captain Coghlan on the Pacific coast, at San Francisco; Chief Engineer George H. White, Passed Assistant Engineers D. P. McCartney, A. L. Smith, J. J. Barry, and A. C. Engard, to hold themselves in readiness for sea service.

An official circular, just issued from the Adjutant-General's office, states that the Board of Equipment, in session in this city desires the opinions of General and Staff officers of the Army as to the practicability of abolishing the use of the bayonet and sabre in the United States military service, and also any suggestions and recommendations such officers may see fit to submit in relation to the improvement and alteration of these weapons. Commanding officers of regiments to whom the trowel bayonet has been issued for experiment will also report the result of their experiments for the information of the board.

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. 11.—The United States steamer Quinnebaug sailed to-day to join the Mediterranean Squadron. She will touch at Funchal.

THE DEAD MEMBER OF CONGRESS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The Speaker to-day appointed Messrs. Giddings, Shelley, McKenzie, Muller, Loring, Brentano, Townsend, of New-York, and Powers a committee on the part of the House of Representatives to escort the body of Representative Schleicher to San Antonia. The House, as a mark of respect for the deceased member, at 12:15 o'clock adjourned.

VIRGINIA'S STATE DEBT.

RICHMOND, Jan. 11.—The House to-day, after three days' discussion, adopted the Senate resolution providing for a conference with the creditors of the State. The preamble, however, was so amended as to set forth the impracticability of increasing the present rate of taxation in furtherance of any plan of settlement decided upon by said conference, but expressing anxiety to do all consistent with what is believed to be the interest of the State and her creditors, to adjust the differences existing between the proposition made by the General Assembly at the last session and the several propositions now before the body relating to the settlement of the public debt.

A CRISIS FOR MOONSHINERS.

NASHVILLE, Jan. 11.—State Judge McConnell having persisted in trying the cases against revenue officers in Macon County for alleged illegal arrests, Judge Baxter has ordered him to appear before the United States Circuit Court, on Feb. 8, and show cause why he should proceed to try these cases when they have been transferred to the United States Circuit Court. This brings to a crisis the conflict of jurisdiction between the State and Federal courts in regard to the revenue cases, and the result is awaited with great interest in Tennessee.

PIKE COUNTY'S LOSS BY ITS TREASURER.

MILFORD, Penn., Jan. 11.—It is now known that James W. Quick, the missing Treasurer of Pike County, Penn., is a defaulter to the amount of between $8,000 and $9,000. The missing officer has been heard from since he left Port Jervis for New-York City on Wednesday morning last. He is still believed to be in that City.

KILLED BY A LAMP EXPLOSION.

BUSHKILL, Penn., Jan. 11.—Mrs. John Ackerman, of Tunkhannock Township, Monroe County, Penn., was burned to death by the explosion of a kerosene lamp last Wednesday evening.

HART'S ISLAND PHYSICIANS.

CHARGES AGAINST DR. DUFLOO BY HIS TWO ASSISTANTS — THE THREE DOCTORS CALLED UPON TO RESIGN.

Drs. McChesney and Heath, assistant physicians at the Hart's Island Hospital, submitted, in the early part of last December, to the Commissioners of Charities and Correction, charges affecting the personal and official conduct of their superior, Dr. Armand Dufloo, the Resident Physician of the hospital, and Visiting Physician of the Insane Asylum on the island. They contended that he was not a suitable man for the position occupied by him, alleging that he was incompetent, neglectful of his duties, and too familiar with his female subordinates. The Commissioners summoned before them Dr. Dufloo and his accusers, and a number of other persons filling positions of minor importance in the hospital, and a mass of affirmative and contradictory testimony was taken. The allegations of neglect of duty and undue familiarity were not sustained, and were reiterated by the young physicians and their witnesses, and as emphatically contradicted by the Resident Physician and his witnesses. While the behavior of Dr. Dufloo toward some of his subordinates was questioned, it was not shown, nor was any attempt made to do so, that he had been guilty of any immoral acts. The proceedings at the board-room were carried out under the strictest privacy, not even the Secretary being admitted, while the witnesses were giving their testimony. In fact, the most extraordinary efforts were made by the Commissioners to keep the facts from the public, and while they are still unwilling to disclose all the facts, the following is authoritatively given as the result of their scrutiny of the evidence: Touching Dr. Dufloo's administrative qualities, they found that he was not a man whose training and habits were equal to the requirements of his position; that there were some defects in his temperament calculated to impair his usefulness as the head of a hospital; that he lacked that evenness of disposition and calmness that are the necessary adjuncts of such an officer; that he was liable to do things which a prudent and careful man would not do; that while he had been a little too familiar with the female employes, he had not been guilty of any act of impropriety. They did not, however, destroy his social standing; that many of his acts were so indiscreet as to arouse the suspicions of his subordinates and prompt them to subject him to a system of espionage. These conclusions suggested to the Commissioners the advisability of making a change, and they therefore requested Dr. Dufloo to resign his position. His resignation was received and accepted on Monday last, and Dr. James R. Healy, one of the Examiners of Lunacy at the Tombs, was assigned to act as his temporary successor. Regarding the general management of the Hart's Island Hospital as bad, the board have instituted many changes for the better, and ascertained that their resignations, would be also acceptable, and it is probable that they will soon act upon the suggestion.

Dr. Dufloo is a Frenchman by birth, and about 50 years of age. A residence in this country of about 21 years has enabled him to speak the English language with fluency. During the rebellion he served with distinction on a medical staff connected with the Army of the Potomac. He received his appointment as Resident Physician on Hart's Island in 1873, when Messrs. Lambeer, Bowen, and Sterne composed the Board of Commissioners of Charities and Correction. Mrs. Dufloo, the latter's wife, who accompanied him to the Island and filled the position of matron, died, and he has since remained a widower. It has not yet been decided who his successor, and those of Drs. Heath and McChesney, shall be, but it is probable that appointments will be shortly made.

THE AMATEUR OARSMEN.

VIEWS RESPECTING THE NEXT NATIONAL REGATTA—CONCLUSIONS OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The Executive Committee of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen met in the Metropolitan Hotel last evening. The meeting was one of unusual importance to the sporting world, from the circumstance that a report was expected from the sub-committee charged with obtaining the views of the several college rowing associations relative to their participation in a national regatta to be held under the auspices of the National Association. In furtherance of this end three silver cups, of handsome design, were presented by the Passaic, Eurekas, and Triton Clubs, of Newark, N. J. These elaborate pieces of plate were on exhibition in the parlor in which the committee met. The conditions of their possession are the same as those governing the holding of other trophies by clubs belonging to the National Association. Of the Executive Committee the following members were present: O. M. Remington, Narragansett Club, Chairman; H. E. Buermeyer, New-York Athletic Club; J. K. Stevens, North-western; J. H. C. Watts, Union, of Baltimore; G. W. Parker, Quaker City; H. W. Grenfield, Mutual, of Albany; T. W. Kennedy, Passaic, of Newark; W. H. Allen, Detroit, and B. L. Keys, Undine, of Philadelphia. Secretary Garfield, who was intrusted with the correspondence with the colleges, reported the following summary of views as to the most desirable time, place, and style of regatta and qualifications of collegiate contestants: The University of Pennsylvania suggested eight-oared four oars and single sculls to style; time from 3d to 15th of July; none but undergraduates to be allowed to contest. Bowdoin agreed as to style and qualification, but preferred October; Cornell, Union suggested Saratoga, but agreed in other respects. Trinity, of Hartford, wished four and pair oars and single sculls, on or about July 25. Cornell pledged itself to nothing but a desire for still water, say Saratoga, eight, four, pair, single in style, confined to undergraduates or graduates of the year, excluding medical, legal, or scientific students. The Wesleyans wanted six, four, and singles in styles, with only undergraduates contesting. Harvard would probably send no crew in a representative capacity, but might appear in eight, four, or single scull races, provided New-London or some similar place was selected. The Columbian oarsmen thought they might send crews of eight, six, and four oars, to any place provided it was early in the season. Yale, on account of weak finances, would certainly not be represented. All its energies were to be bent to wresting the pennant from Harvard. As a mere matter of opinion, they recommended six, four, and singles, anywhere near New-York. The committee accordingly recommended for intercollegiate races eight, four, and single sculls as to style, as soon as possible after the close of the collegiate year, place to be determined by a committee to be appointed, graduates within the year and undergraduates only to be eligible.

On motion of Mr. Keys, the Fairmount Club was reinstated in membership in the association. Messrs. Keys, Watts, and Buermeyer were appointed a committee to name time and place for the Intercollegiate and National Amateur Regattas. Votes of thanks were tendered to the Passaic, Eureka, and Triton Clubs, of Newark, for their handsome presents. A long discussion was provoked by the reading of the petition of Elwood Smith, of the Arconauts, a nephew of Josh Ward, whom a sub-committee had declared a disqualified oarsman. His case and that of Pilkinton, of the Seawanhaka, was referred to a sub-committee, of which Mr. Keys is Chairman. The committee then adjourned.

A GLOVE-FIGHT BETWEEN PETE M'CARTHY AND FRANK WHITE.

A well-known hall on the west side of the City was the scene last night of a glove-fight between Frank White and Pete McCarthy, for a purse of $200. Tickets of admission were sold at $10 each, and the spectators were mainly composed of Wall-street brokers and members of the Union League Club. White is 21 years old, 5 feet 4½ inches high, and weighs 114 pounds, and is a machinist by trade. He has been principal in a number of glove and ring fights. Pete McCarthy is 5 feet 5 inches high, weighs 134 pounds, and is in his twenty-second year. He is a blacksmith by trade, and hails from St. Louis, where he was formerly in the employ of Tom Allen, the noted English pugilist. In the encounter

MY WALK.

Ye gentle folks that live in town,
And on poor country wights look down,
And daily take your dainty ride
Mid courtly rank and Fashion's pride
In the Row, with Dukes and Earls,
Lofty dames and lovely girls,
God bless you all, and grant you pleasure
Up to the brim of your heart's measure,
But I have joys unknown to you,
And walks remote from London view.
Where the burnie leaps with glee,
And the ground is rough and hilly,
That's the walk that's dear to me—
Not Pall Mall or Piccadilly.

Where the torrent from the brae
Pours his strength and spreads his spray,
And, like a white-maned mountain horse,
Plunges down with headlong force,
Lashing the rocks with foamy sweep
Into the cauldron dark and deep;
Where the birch-tree nods her plume
O'er tufted wealth of heather blooms,
And cerinse fern in silver sheen
O'er the brown water's sleepless whirl,
Beside a blasted holly-tree,
With never a rose and never a lily,
That's the walk that's dear to me—
Not Pall Mall or Piccadilly.

Where from the great Ben's dewy crown
The infant rill comes trickling down,
And glances out beneath the crag
That cuts the sky with many a jag,
And creeps beneath the old gray stones.
Chips of the mountains giant bones;
Then trips adown with easy pace
Over the huge slab's slippery face,
To rest a while in mossy well,
Where starry saxifrages fall,
With never a shrub and never a tree,
Where the air is sharp and chilly,
That's the walk that's dear to me—
Not Pall Mall or Piccadilly.

When the rough scour flouts the sky,
And the ragged wrack skirs by;
Where, round the corrie's battered peak,
Wild tempests rave and wild birds shriek;
Where, down the mountain's shelvy side,
Long streaks of pounded ruin slide;
Where thick, the bare extent is sown
With blocks on blocks all rudely thrown;
And desolation, gaunt and grim,
Stalks o'er the huge Ben's leafless rim,—
I face the blast, erect and free,
And, tho' you deem my fancy silly,
This mountain walk more pleases me
Than your Pall Mall and Piccadilly.

Or where below, in peaceful glen,
'Neath the broad shoulders of the Ben,
The river winds in mazy error
From the bright loch's gleaming mirror,
Upon whose green and grassy rim,
With tower and turret quaintly trim,
Rises the house, beneath the wood,
Whose lord, true-hearted, kind and good,
Preserves—a boast that few may claim—
His crofters better than his game:
There, by the old and wide-armed tree,
A theme for Paton or for Millais,
I choose the walk most dear to me—
Not at Pall Mall or Piccadilly.

Farewell! God grant you honest pleasure
Up to the brim of your heart's measure,
Amid the dust and din and stew
Of London, with the money you:
Amid the fair and flaunting show
Of prancing Fashion in the Row:
With gartered lords and ladies fine,
Who never without candles dine,
And tone of war in Church and State,
And clash of words in stout debate:
From such high stir I would be free:
In lone green glen or pastare hilly,
A quiet ramble I'll have me,
Far from Pall Mall and Piccadilly!

THAT FRENCH GIRL.

A STORY IN THREE CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER I.

"If that French girl can't be found the fund in court may lve there till the day of judgment, but if she mt be proved d.s.p. the residue of the estate would clearly fall to the ward of the court, yr client. (Signed) Jos. Culpepper. To Mr. Spiller, Staple Inn, London, Attorney-at-law."

This upon a scrap of paper, seemingly part of an old letter, with burned edges, as if it had narrowly escaped destruction by fire, the handwriting and general appearance assigning it to the end of the last century.

"What d'ye mak' of it, Mr. Philip?" asked my client eagerly; "there's a deal hidden there, don't ye think? And the d.s.p.—eh, that's awfu' deep."

My client was one Bridget, a Scotchwoman, and confidential servant to Lady Hazlewood, a very ancient denizen of Kensington—not the fashionable part; but Hornton-street, in a dull, old-fashioned house, brightened, however, to those who visited there, by the presence of three charming young women, her granddaughters. My first acquaintance with the Hazlewoods was made, not professionally—I am junior partner with my father, Carey & Carey, solicitors—but through my sister, who attended an art-class at South Kensington, where Fanny Hazlewood was also a pupil. Lady Hazlewood was very old, nearly 90, and rarely left her room; and the girls, who were orphans, had no one to look after them but Bridget.

Bridget, who had brought up two generations of the Hazlewood family, trotted after her young mistresses with the attached fidelity of a trained sheep-dog; but she was getting old now and scant of breath, and the charge was almost too much for her. The Hazlewoods were poor, and without definite expectations, except of being poorer still in the future; for Lady Hazlewood's income died with her, and the girls had nothing of their own. Thus they were working against time to qualify themselves to earn a living. Fanny, the oldest, had a lively artistic sensibility, which found an outlet in water colors. The two younger sisters were studying to become teachers of some kind. A very poor prospect, one would say; but the girls were full of courage—bright, clever, handsome girls, who, under more favorable circumstances, would no doubt have married well, and become ornaments of society. As it was, Fanny Hazlewood's friends thought she made a great mistake when she refused your humble servant, who was certainly devotedly attached to her, and whose prospects, if not brilliant, were tolerably safe and solid. Refused I had been anyhow—kindly, but decidedly. Not that she had made any other choice, or that I was personally distasteful, Fanny was good enough to say; but—"I'm certain sure there's money waiting somewhere for my young leddies, if there were some clever, willing cailant, with a good interest in the matter"—she emphasized these last words warmly—"to look it up."

As clenching what she said, Bridget drew from her pocket a fat, battered pocket-book, and produced therefrom the scrap of writing mentioned at the commencement of this history.

"There may be a good deal hidden in it," I said, in reply to Bridget's eager question. "An awful lot, perhaps. But it's likely to remain hidden, I should think; unless you can throw some light upon it. First of all, how do you come by it; and what does it mean?"

Bridget explained that she had found the manuscript in a basketful of old papers that the hussies in the kitchen had been lighting the fires with. Combined with what she knew of Lady Hazlewood's history, it gave her the notion—so dear to the credulous mind—of some great sum of money waiting for a claimant. I had no more time to give to Bridget just then; but at her earnest request I promised to come up to Hornton-street that evening and see old Lady Hazlewood.

A good many precautions and ceremonies attended my introduction to Lady Hazlewood; I was not to say: "How do you do?" or to bow, or offer to shake hands, but just to sit in a certain chair, as if I had been sitting there all my life, and then Lady Hazlewood would be wheeled out, and brought to bear upon me, just as if she were a field-piece, and I some object to be battered.

The process was a trying one, when Lady Hazlewood—a mere shadow of a woman, dark and fragile, with a face like an old painting, and as full of crevices—brought her eyes to bear upon me. Fanny was leaning over her chair, and eyeing me in a curious, half-awakened way, something like a young lioness looking at you between the bars of her cage.

"You have been very kind to my girls, I hear," began Lady Hazlewood, after an awful pause, speaking in low, vibrating accents. "I thank you, Sir. And you wish to hear some of my family history, Sir, I will tell it you."

Lady Hazlewood was the granddaughter of one Philip Rankin, a worthy of the last century, who had made a large fortune, in the sleave trade, it was said, in the Barbadoes. He died in the year 1793 intestate, leaving a fortune of about one hundred and sixty thousand pounds, all personal property. He had married a French creole, who died, young, leaving him with two daughters, the elder of whom was Lady Hazlewood's mother, and married to a Mr. Smith. The younger sister had married a Frenchman of good family, a M. De la Motte, and taken up her abode in her husband's country. Mrs. Smith and her husband both died before Mr. Rankin, leaving an only daughter, Grace, who became Lady Hazlewood. This child and her aunt in France were thus coheiresses of this nice little fortune. News of her inheritance was despatched to Mme. De la Motte, then with her husband in Paris, but she never came home to claim it. The Reign of Terror was then in progress. The De la Mottes were living in Paris, had been seized as intending émigrés, put in prison, tried, and forthwith sent to the scaffold. They had a daughter, quite a child, who had been in prison with her parents, but who had disappeared at the time of their execution and had never been heard of since. This was the French girl spoken of in Bridget's manuscript. As for Grace Smith, the present Lady Hazlewood, she became a ward of the Court of Chancery, was duly sent to a fashionable boarding-school, spending her holidays mostly with Mrs. Spiller, the writer of the letter, whose name appears in the same manuscript. She had many suitors, for her eighty thousand pounds the half of her grandfather's fortune, was a vast inducement; but she liked best of all one Sir Randal Hazlewood, of Hazlewood Park, a baronet, a man of fashion, and gambler, who had already run through two fortunes. Her guardians were strongly opposed to such a match, but Miss Smith was obstinate, and after she came of legal age nothing could be done to stop her. She married Sir Randal, stipulating only for a settlement of a few hundreds a year upon herself as pin-money, and her confidence was rewarded in the usual way. Everything that her husband could spend he spent, and when he was finally killed in a duel for trying to run off with some other man's wife, he left behind him nothing but debts for his son, and for his widow only the small income settled upon her. Sir James, the son, however, was of a very different disposition. He was called to the Bar, obtained some legal appointment, married, and lived narrowly and uncomfortably, saved money, and lost it all in a defaulting bank, and died of the chagrin. His widow did not survive him long, and thus his three daughters fell to the charge of their grandmother, old Lady Hazlewood; which brings us to the present and existing state of things.

When Lady Hazlewood had given me this account of her family history, I should much have liked to question her on various points, but the old lady was too much fatigued to bear any more talk. Fanny followed me down stairs, and brought me to the room she called her studio. What did I think of it? Was there any chance for them? Would I help them—they were so friendless and powerless?

As a man of business, I can say that I thought the claim all moonshine. Fanny saw my opinion in my face, and her eyes filled with tears; and then Bridget came in—Bridget, with her intense faith and confidence. She had a bundle of papers in her hands.

"I've found the documents, Mr. Phillip," she said. "My lady recollected where they were put—the documents that were sent her when Mr. Spiller died."

This had been in 1839, about thirty years before, and the papers had never been opened since that date. There was nothing seemingly important about them. First, a memorandum by Mr. Spiller that from 1793 to 1815 the Continental war had prevented any inquiries as to the existing descendants of Madame De la Motte; but that, on the declaration of peace, Mr. Spiller had himself proceeded to Paris to institute inquiries. That he had obtained proofs of the death of Monsieur and Madame De la Motte, and of the existence of a daughter, but could find no traces of the latter. That he inserted advertisements in the chief Continental papers, but without result. That the matter had been mentioned to the Vice-Chancellor, who remarked that, in the absence of further evidence, there seemed to be no necessity to make any order in the case; and that, thereupon, the subject was dropped. In Mr. Spiller's investigations, he had been aided by certain letters, addressed by Madame De la Motte to her sister in England. These letters were inclosed in the packet. They were partly in English and partly in French, the latter a language evidently familiar to both, a circumstance probably due to their creole extraction. We gathered from the letters that the French husband had been of noble family, an officer in the King's Guard, but extravagant and poor; several of the letters, indeed, contained requests for help in money matters. The English wife was a good deal neglected, apparently spending most of the year in the old family château at St. Arnoult, in Normandy, while Monsieur amused himself in Paris. When the revolutionary troubles were in progress, it seemed that M. De la Motte was playing a double part of running with the Royal hare and hunting with the Jacobin hounds; his English connection even seemed to have been made use of for secret communication with the English Ministry. There was anxious inquiry after a letter that it was feared had been intercepted, and then silence; the bitter end coming close after.

"And now what do you think, Philip?" cried Fanny, laying her hand beseechingly upon my arm. It was the first time she had addressed me by my Christian name since she had refused me.

Well, the papers were not of much value, but they seemed to give reality and texture to what before had been visionary. It was quite possible, I admitted, that there might be some such unclaimed fund in the Court of Chancery; but as to getting hold of it, that was another matter. Costs would be certain, and the result most doubtful. Still, if they had money to spend over it——

Fanny looked at Bridget, and Bridget at Fanny. At last the Scotchwoman suggested:

"Could it not be done on spec., Mr. Philip?"

"Not for any pecuniary reward. There is, in the first place, the doubt as to success, and, in the event of success, a still greater doubt as to payment. That is how a shark would look upon it—and none but a shark would take it up."

"Not for money, Philip, but for love," whispered Fanny. "Could it not be done for love?"

Putting it in that way, I found it difficult to turn my back upon the affair. At all events, we would find out whether the supposed fund had any real existence. I obtained permission to make the search, and, after a tedious investigation, to which I sacrificed a whole month's holiday, I found something to the purpose. Nothing less than an order to the consultant-General, in the name of the Accountant-General, the sum of eighty thousand pounds, unclaimed residue of the estate of Philip Rankin. Further research convinced me that this sum still remained undrawn, part of that huge accumulation known as the Suitors' Fee Fund.

There was great rejoicing at the news in Hornton-street. Fanny was half wild with excitement and delight. She laughed and she cried, and looked as if she had a mind to give me a kiss; any how, I gave her the benefit of the doubt by taking one. "I don't think I quite like it, Philip," she said doubtfully, rubbing her cheek, and a little offended. But I was quite sure that I liked it.

We began operations as soon as the courts opened, with slender resources and plenty of courage. At first we applied for leave, we were mentioned, we moved for this or that, we put evidence on record, and by degrees approached the kernel of our eighty thousand pounds. But such a treasure as that has always fierce, intractable guardians. The proceedings lasted for a year, and we were no nearer success at the end; and it became evident that we should do no good till we had accounted for the French girl. Our counsel agreed in vain that lapse of time was sufficient evidence that no descendants of Jeanne de la Motte now existed. The Vice-Chancellor shook his head decisively at this, the shake was emphasized by the Lords Justices, and finally clenched by the Lord Chancellor himself. All we could get was permission to apply again when fresh evidence should be forthcoming.

This was a serious decision for both the Hazlewoods and myself. The costs had been heavy, and they had been able to pay but a small part of them. I had supplemented the deficiency out of my current income. But I was in debt all round in consequence, and creditors were beginning to be troublesome. We were not in funds to pay for expensive inquiries, and had we been, there seemed little hope of their doing any good. And then I made up my mind to go and make the search myself. Another month's holiday must be devoted to the inquiry.

The question was, where to begin. To try in Paris would be waste of time—as well look for a needle in a haystack. But the neighborhood where the girl had been brought up offered a more hopeful look-out. There would be relations possibly on the father's side, who might have retained some knowledge of the girl. Also, couples of exiled families, who had returned to the familiar spot. I must find my way to the château of St. Arnoult, in what was then Normandy, now in the Department of Seine Inférieure.

It was not till October that I could get away from London, leaving the Hazlewood girls in very low spirits. Lady Hazlewood was ailing, and they were very anxious about her. Fanny seemed somehow rather jealous of the French girl, and of my search for her. Even when I proved conclusively that the girl, if alive, would be well on the shady side of eighty, she was not altogether pacified. "Perhaps there are granddaughters, and you will be in love with one of them. They will be the heiresses then, you know, and it will break my heart."

No doubt there were serious possibilites in that view of the case. If I should succeed in ferreting out a whole tribe of descendants it would be an awkward position for all of us. The chief one in our favor was, that if there had been descendants they would probably have come forward at some time or other, especially when the first inquiries had been made; but I had not much faith in Spiller's investigations. Bridget gave me a solemn warning at parting to be sure and not to be taken in with any of the trail stopped most provokingly. Everything posted up to the date of the Revolution—even the marriage of M. De la Motte to Jeanne, daughter of Philippe Rankin, Esq. It seemed, too, as if the birth of the French girl we were in search of had been noted, for there was a distinct erasure in the space just below this last entry.

And now I felt that surely I had come to the end of my reel. I had got to the bottom of M. De Fréville's papers, and found out nothing but what I knew before. In a few days I must return, with the loss of my failure. What a nest of houses, looking over the sparkling river. But there was a great chalk cliff just behind—not one sheer cliff, but a succession of white escarpments with brushwood growing between—that seemed to give a shut-up gloomy look to the place. Inside, too, the atmosphere was chilly and vault-like, due to the narrow window-spaces and thick stone walls, except in the room where the Fréville archives were kept. This had been modernized as to light and fittings, and was altogether a warm sunny nook, with a pleasant look-out on the river and the wooded heights all round from its low French windows.

At one time, I dare say, the Fréville papers had been arranged on some system, but now they were in a complete muddle. The papers were just the kind of highly-important rubbish that a man of orderly methodical habits accumulates for the trouble of posterity. Accounts and vouchers, papers as to ancient lawsuits, the details as to M. De Fréville's three years' administration of his commune as Maire, couples of expired leases, complicated arrangements of farming partnerships. I felt quite bewildered in the maze.

It was a delightful relief to have a long letter from Hornton-street—a joint compilation by the three sisters, with illustrations from Fanny's graphic pencil. Bridget was there in her night-cap, as she alarmed the house the other night, having dreamed a dreadful dream. And grannie, too, in turn had dreamed a gruesome dream. "And Spot, poor dog, has taken to dreaming too, and cried piteously, and kicked, even; and Fanny threw a handkerchief over his dear little nose, and is going to wear it round her head when she goes to bed to-night, for they say that is the way to dream the dog's dream; and Fanny thinks that Spot was dreaming about you. The result in our next." But beneath all this nonsense there was to be seen an undercurrent of excited feeling. The nerves of the poor girls were attuned to the utmost with excitement and expectation. And then, Lady Hazlewood was getting weaker and weaker. The end was coming on that side, it was to be feared. Everything seemed dark in the future, and all the darker for the hopes that had been excited. I began to feel certain now that these hopes would come to nothing. I had set myself an impossible task. Time was running on; I should have to own myself beaten. Only some lucky accident could help me. And such things rarely come to those who have nothing else to look for.

In a kind of dull apathy, I sat looking at the wearisome papers of M. De Fréville when the bonne announced a visit from Madame Pochet, who had come to inform me that she was going to take a short tour. This was the last day of October, and the following day was All Saints, and the eve of the Fête des Morts. She proposed to visit the tomb of her husband and other relations in another department, and to return in the course of a few days. If Monsieur would consent to remain and take care of the house, she would leave with a tranquil mind. The rooms, except those I occupied, would be locked up, and the keys hung. Had Monsieur noticed the admirable arrangement of the late M. Pochet?

Yes, I had noticed the key-board, a thing like those used at hotels, with a separate hook for each key, and the description of the apartment carefully written over it.

The room had formerly been the bureau of M. Pochet, explained Madame, who had inherited the talents of his grandfather, M. De Fréville. Madame Pochet and I, by the way, had become excellent friends—a simple-minded old woman of the old-fashioned school, at once jolly and devout—and I felt sorry she was going away; especially as I was to be left alone in this somewhat dreary old friary.

Just as Madame Pochet drove off, the postman came up with a letter from Hornton-street, written in a way that showed me how sharp was the strain of all this doubt and uncertainty upon the girls' minds. Grannie was really ill—they all feared she was sinking—they longed for my presence and support, but would not ask me to leave, when so much depended on my labors. And Lucy, unknown to her sisters, had gone to a spiritual séance with Bridget. They had called for the spirit of Jeanne de la Motte, and there was a manifestation. Three letters were scrawled out. D. S. P. No one knew what they meant, but Bridget was sure they were genuine signs from the unseen world, for these very letters appeared in the scrap of paper that had fallen into Bridget's hands and first started our quest. What did they mean?

To say the truth, I hardly knew myself. What did they mean—anything like R. I. P., or S. P. Q. R., or any of those initials that people who have had a liberal education are supposed to know the meaning of? By a curious coincidence the meaning was made clear to me that very day. I had set to work anxiously but almost hopelessly, at the De Fréville archives, when I came across a little bundle of papers—pedigrees of various families—in which the initials occurred frequently: and in one place the words they represented were written at full length—Décédé sans posterité.

Well, that was good news for the Hazlewoods, if true. But why was not the spirit more explicit?

Among those pedigrees, which were in the handwriting of M. De Fréville, I found the family-tree of the De la Mottes. But here, as everywhere else, the trail stopped most provokingly. Everything posted up to the date of the Revolution—even the marriage of M. De la Motte to Jeanne, daughter of Philippe Rankin, Esq. it regiments used to be almost exclusively recruited. But perhaps the greatest alteration is in the manner in which the native army is now provided with European officers. When a youngster went out to India he used to be gazetted as ensign to a native regiment, in which he remained on the list until he obtained the rank of Major. Under the new system the only entrance to the native military service is through the English Army. An officer who wishes to serve in our Indian Army must first qualify and pass his examination, and enter as a Second Lieutenant in the cavalry or infantry of the line. After two years of regimental duty, he may apply, if the corps to which he belongs is stationed in India, and after he has passed a preliminary examination in one of the native languages, to be attached to a native regiment as "a probationer for the staff corps." Should his probation prove satisfactory, he is gazetted from the corps to which he has hitherto belonged, and entered on the rôle of the staff corps of the Presidency in which he is serving. When this change has been made, he is available for any duty in India; but, as a matter of course, the vast majority of officers belonging to the staff corps are employed with the different native regiments.—Macmillan's Magazine.

IN A PALACE.

Long lonesome corridors we wandered through,
Where the dim light made shapes of darkness grow.
As the day waned the moon glanced in and fro,
When o'er her face vague wanton cloudlets blew.
Str king through squares of glass of soft wan hue
Fair marble men;—large leaves a shadow throw
That makes their still life ghostly. Angelo
And there his Man of Twilight, doubter who
With unsolved ceaseless questions grieves alway,
And lacks fruition, and his heart grows pale.
High archways passed we, on whose hangings play
Such sunset hues as clothe far from shore.
Alone I passed beneath the shrouding veil
Of abstract years, to silent spheres of yore.

As round the walls strange pictures were unrolled,
The breath and color of romantic time
Wrapped me in glamor and a dream sublime;
Mesmerized the string was braided of old,
For the rare maid of whom the sweet tale told Longing full sore. A palace steps I climb
Seeking for her. With my rapt mood doth chime
A presences glimmering by . . . the dream's lips cold
In that dim room I kissed, as one obeys
Bidding he wots not . . . . then from spells I woke,
And knew my love there standing in amaze,
Who had passed with me with light silent feet,
And now must mock my dream! Thin phantom folk
How she outvies, whose heart hath living heat!

A BURMESE PLAY.—The first thing that will strike the visitor is the utter absence of all theatrical adjuncts. There is no curtain but a dingy wrapper which is used to screen the heroine during a single episode in the piece; there is no scenery but the plantain-tree, and no stage property but a wooden chair. Nor has the costume any compensating effects. There are barely enough tinsel and trappings to distinguish the king from the clown; the "minthami" (princess) from the maid of honor. A youth with a yellow kerchief around his head, a white linen jacket, a silk waist-cloth, and a curved stick in his hand to represent a bow, gets up from the ground where he has been squatting, and advances into the ring with slow and stately gait, and a curious waving of his arm and hand. He is a very prince for the nonce, both to himself and to the villagers around. (They all know he is only "ko hpyu," or "ko mal," that the middle-aged woman he woos with regal compliments is not the daughter of the monarch of Wethali, but a strolling player from Yemethen. There is absolutely nothing external to help the illusion.) The plot is slovenly, disjointed, and obscure; the main incidents and characters are common to every native drama. And yet they will listen to the lad with serious, almost reverential attention, while he declaims in ornate language about his ancestry, his attributes, and his exploits; they will encourage him in his courtship, sympathize with the afflicted pair during their separation, and, after sitting the whole night through, will yet at early dawn be openeyed and eager to applaud the happy denouement. The traveller will find the above by no means a common performance. At various places on his route the boatmen, after all their hard day's work, will sit up half the night at a rustic play. Fifty years ago every considerable village had a troupe of actors, who performed at all the popular junketings. In these days of free intercommunication, their place is very largely taken by strolling companies from Upper Burmah, who come down after the rains are fairly ended, and return at the close of the hot season. They penetrate everywhere in their rambles, and it is rare indeed that even the most secluded villager does not witness a "zat" or puppet show twice or thrice in the year. This passion for histrionics is, perhaps, the most striking trait in the national character. It is genuine and simple enough of its kind, and, in a great measure, results from a true dramatic instinct. A Burman playgoer adm res a clear flexible voice infinitely more than a pretty face, and graceful style and action more than a shapely form. Youth and beauty are quite minor recommendations. The prima donna, "Yendaw ma hay," who at present reigns supreme in Upper and Lower Burmah, is a lady about 45. The King sent her down to perform at Rangoon on the Imperial Proclamation Day, when I had the honor of an introduction. She could never have been pretty, even according to Burmese ideas, and yet she was courted by powerful nobles, and finally married a veritable Prince. Her attractions are best described by the vernacular word "yinthi," of which "elegant" is the nearest English equivalent. Of course, to a stranger, her voice, attitude, and gesture were more or less uncomely and extravagant. One can relish the easy laughter-moving by-play of the clown, (an invariable character in a Burmese drama,) and now and again, in the long recitative of the heroine, one can catch a few bars of the refrain which somewhat correspond with Western notions of harmony and method. But, on the whole, it requires as much education of taste to appreciate native acting as it does to enjoy the flavor of those other provincial specialities, the dorian fruit and the "ngapee."—The Cornhill Magazine.

MENTAL LIFE BELOW THE HUMAN.—Autenrieth, the celebrated German naturalist, has described for us the metamorphoses through which pass the individuals of a species of butterfly named by him Nachtpfauenauge. Its grub-life, like all of the same genus, is one of unbroken monotony and dullness. The sum-total of its experiences consists in gorging on leaf-pulp, crawling under cover when it rains, and now and then casting its skin. It has no home-life, its parents having died before it began to live. It has no companionship; it seeks none. This sluggish, solitary, gormandizing, creeping worm is at a certain set time suddenly arrested by the electric thrill of some new strange life. It stops eating, and, under a mysterious, prophetic impulse, commences to weave about its body, out of delicate threads that issue from it, a silken palace of double-roof, so ingeniously braced by innumerable supports that it both withstands violent attacks from outside, and yields to the almost spirit touch from within, of that most fragile of fairies which, out of the homely and prone body of the grub, rises erewhile, on brilliantly-tinted wings, to flutter and float like a stray bit of sunset on a Summer's evening zephyr. By this unique contrivance this little creature escapes on the one hand from a visible violence, and on the other from the sad fate of self-burial. Is it conceivable that this worm possesses such intimate acquaintance with the occult laws of mechanics as this piece of work presupposes, that it has acquired, by its own exertions, this masterful skill in architecture, or that it really discerns with clear prophetic vision approaching changes in its form, its capacities, its needs and its destiny? It has had no instructor, no personal experience, no working model. This is its first attempt, yet it bears the stamp of absolute perfection. The butterflies of other species, when the hour is ripe for them to issue from their cocoons, secrete a fluid that acts on the silk as a solvent. This grub, as if conscious from the first that such power will never be given it, constructs its case on widely different principles. To affirm that it inherits this knowledge, skill, and prescience does not, in the least, clear up the mystery; it only carries the inquiry farther back, for the first grub must have been equally able to spin a similar cocoon on first trial, or it never could have developed into a butterfly and become the progenitor of a species.—The Penn Monthly.

UTILIZATION OF ELEPHANTS IN AFRICA.—It appears that a troop of wild elephants has been observed within 50 miles of Port Elizabeth, and it is well known that they abound in Central Africa, where, indiscriminately slaughtered for the sake of their ivory, the destruction of these animals is so great, as at no very distant period to threaten their extinction. It seems worthy of consideration whether it would not be better to attempt to utilize them as beasts of burden, as is done in India, where they are of inestimable service to the Commissariat, the Public Works Department, the planters, and many others. The African differs from the Asiatic elephant in some points, but is equally well adapted for labor, and, there can be no doubt, would be as easily tamed and trained as his Indian congener. That this is the case is amply proved by the docile and submissive state into which the male and female African elephants now in the Regent's Park Gardens have been brought by Mr. Bartlett and their keeper, Scott. They appear to be just as obedient, intelligent, and free from vice as Indian elephants, and there is, I think, little doubt that the one species, under proper training and discipline, would be as useful in Africa as the other is in India. There is every reason now to hope that the wealth and resources of our South African possessions will undergo development, might it not be well to revive the suggestion that the elephant should be enlisted in the good work? The importation of one or more of the numerous officers who have been trained to the work of catching and domesticating wild elephants in India, with a fitting establishment, and perhaps a few Indian elephants to commence the work, would very soon put the value of the undertaking to the test. And probably show that a vast source of working power now unused might be made available. It is probable that in ancient times the African elephant was domesticated, and any one who has studied the two magnificent specimens in the society's collection in Regent's Park will, I think, be satisfied that they may again be so, and that in temper, docility, and working power, they would be equal, if not superior, to the Indian elephant.—J. Fayrer, in Nature.

POETICAL ICONOCLASM.—Scottish poets of inferior note constantly speak of the nightingale—as do some of the modern American versifiers, who re-echo the blemishes as well as the beauties of English song, though neither nightingale nor lark was ever heard on the American continent. Even Mr. Longfellow, who is wiser in this respect than many of his countrymen, speaks of "swallows singing down each wind that blows." Swallows may twitter or chirp, but they cannot sing any more than a sparrow. Coleridge, who lived long enough in town to forget the country, says in his beautiful poem of "Christabel:"

"'Tis a month before the month of May,
The night is chill, the forest bare,
There is not wind enough to twirl
The one red leaf, the last of its clan,
That dances as often as dance it can,
Hanging so light and hanging so high,
On the topmost twig that looks up to the sky."

"A month before the month of May" is, clearly, the month of April, at which time the forest is no longer "bare," as the poet describes, but has put forth either the tender green leaflets of the Spring or the early buds, which have pushed away all the verdure of the previous year, and left no red leaf of the long past Autumn to twirl in the breeze. Dr. Blacklock, of Edinburgh, one of the early friends of Burns, and who was conspicuously instrumental in bringing the genius of that great and unfortunate poet to the notice of the literary and aristocratic society of the Scottish capital—a man who could judge of poetry much better than he could write it, a by no means uncommon case—was the author of a once much-admired song, entitled "Absence." In this composition he says:

"Ye harvests that wave in the breeze
As far as the view can extend,
Ye mountains, umbrageous with trees,
Whose tops so majestic ascend,
You landscape what joy to survey,
Were Marg'ret with me to admire,
Then the harvest would glitter, how gay!
How majestic the mountains aspire!"

This poor gentleman was blind, or possibly he would have thought twice before he celebrated the "umbrageous trees" of the aspiring mountains of Scotland. His blindness must be pleaded in excuse for his incorrectness as a word-painter; but a very town-bred poet, the late Thomas Haynes Bailey, the author of many hundreds of mediocre songs—very popular in their day—had, at all events, his eyesight, at the control not, like Dr. Blacklock, urge in extenuation of his inaccuracies, that he could not see. One of his songs, that took the unripe fancy of our grandfathers and grandmothers in the days when they were young and foolish, expressed his desire to be a butterfly:

"I'd be a butterfly, born in a bower
Where roses and lilies and violets meet."

But butterflies are not born in bowers, whether roses and lilies meet there or not; for truth compels the admission that they are born in cabbages, and that in their youthful state as caterpillars—before they have attained to the dignity of wings—they commit very serious depredations on those useful vegetables, as every gardener knows to his sorrow. Nor is the poet, if a poet he be, more truthful, more correct when he says that the butterfly,

"Sportive and airy,
Sleeps in a rose when the nightingale sings."

Butterflies do not sleep in roses, in the petals of any other flower, or in other unsheltered places, but take refuge in nooks and crannies, instinctively afraid of the nightingale, who would be very likely to make a meal of them if they came within his sphere of vision.—All the Year Round.

BEWICK.—We trust that the present and rising generation are aware of the great excellence of the wood-cuts of Bewick. No doubt we may be told that he is "old-fashioned," but, then, so are the hills. And if we can manage to get Vicat, Cole, or Millais to paint a glimpse of them for us, even the most enlightened among us can endure their being so old. A fine, very great, and genuine genius was that of Thomas Bewick, the Newcastle engraver. Engravers have often done much greater work than scores of painters. Without an effort, we think of Dürer and Marc Antonio, of Miller and Samuel Cousins. Some such "engraver" as these was Bewick. But, apart from his artistic endowments, that were of the highest order, he was a true and earnest student of nature, a real "naturalist," in its best sense, not a great collector of birds and pinned butterflies, interesting as such a man is who does not take an undue, pedantic pride in his specialties, and his discoveries of a hair here or a line there, and, above all, not a naturalist, or, rather, an unnaturalist, who subjected the objects of his wonder to experiments and vivisections, if, happily, he might discover a remedy for those who would rather expire themselves than be healed with the salve extracted from the tortured frames of marvelous and innocent creatures; nevertheless, Bewick was a naturalist in a sense that is, perhaps, higher than any other. He was a patient and lynx-eyed observer of those by-paths of living nature—noticed but by the few—where curious realms of interest and poetry, varied by grotesquely weird and humorous elements, open themselves out to the silent watcher of the wild creatures in their native homes. And, happily, this wild witchery of nature does exist, in an endless, beautiful order, far beyond the scope of, and notwithstanding, the private speculations of the "king of the beasts" as to the doctrine of the struggle for existence, rendered more exciting by his warm, practical assistance in it with "guns," and physiological laboratories, and ovens divorced from their wholesome offices to other and unsavory ends. But this comparative impotence of the human factor in its uglier aspect is the consoling fact that makes us trust that the cruelties of mankind, though inevitable, are within control. In a man like Bewick, it is not too much to say that the vision of nature was a series of sacred tableaux.—The Spectator.

SOME LATE ROMAN EXCAVATIONS.—The excavations of the Valley of the Forum are, indeed, magnificent. The whole of the Sacra Via between the Temple of Antoninus and the Arch of Titus is now discovered, with its line of buildings. Some of them, on the east side, were already known to topographers, such as the portico in front of the Temple of Romulus, another portico of the ninth century at the north-west corner of Constantine's basilica, and so on. But nothing was known as regards the parallelogram between the Sacra Via, the foot of the Palentine, the Forum, and the Arch of Titus. Take any plan, more or less restored, of old Rome: you see 50 or more different public buildings piled up in that narrow strip of land—the temple and atrium of Vesta, the Regia, the Temple of Jupiter Stator, the house of Tarquinius, &c. This is quite a mistake. The parallelogram contains only a line of commonplace shops of brick-work, strengthened at the corners with blocks of travertine. The front of the shops recedes a little from the line of the Sacra Via, and the vacant space is filled with honorary monuments. This is their list: A pedestal for a bronze statue, raised A. D. 339 by Fabius Titianus, Consul, and Prefect of Rome; a pedestal for a statue, raised A. D. 335, to Constantius by Flavius Leontius, Prefect of Rome; a kind of small triumphal arch (or shrine) made at the expense of the inhabitants of Tarsus, TAPCεωN; the pedestal of an equestrian statue raised very likely to one of the Constantines, as shown by the letters Constantinvs cut on the frieze; some fragments of the Fornix Fabianus; a fragment of the fasti triumphales, from the year 643 to 649; the victories mentioned are those in Macedonia, in Western Spain, and in Numidia—King Jugurtha is expressly named; a fragment of the fasti consulares, from the year 655 to 608, of no special importance as the series of magistrates in that period was thoroughly known from other sources.—The Athenæum.

BOOTS IN MELODRAMA.—A strolling troupe, of whom young Hortense Schneider was one, announced "La Tour de Nesle" for their last performance. An overflow resulted. The actors were in high spirits, and full of fun. Mlle. Schneider, discovering an old pair of russet boots behind the scenes, put them, by way of a joke, into the hands of Buridan as he was going on the stage. Accepting of the awkward handful, he placed the boots on a table on the stage and quietly went through his part; when another actor, of the name of Philippe d'Aulnay, took possession, and made his exit with one under each arm. In the next act, Marguérite de Bourgogne entered carrying the mysterious boots, and passed them to Gaultier d'Aulnay; he turned them over to Orsini; in short, before the curtain fell the boots, though foreign to the piece, had been borne in succession by every personage. The audience watched for their appearance, while wondering what it all meant, and applauded the players to their hearts' content. Twelve months afterward another company set up their bills in Agen, and "La Tour de Nesle" attracted everybody to the theatre; but before the first act was over there were symptoms of displeasure, which gradually increased until the uproar was so great that the curtain fell on a half-played piece; benches were torn up, lights put out, and the Mayor at the head of a troop of soldiers put an end to the tumult. Then the Mayor turned on the poor manager, who protested his inability to understand how the riot came about. "That is all nonsense," returned the Mayor. "Your conduct is disgraceful. You have misled the people, and mutilated a masterpiece. Where are the boots?"—Chambers's Journal.

THE DESOLATION OF BABYLON.—It is usual for travelers to dwell upon the utter desolation of Babylon, and to paint its site as a strip of desert, especially woe-begone and unfertile. But the eloquent gentlemen who dwell upon this aspect of the place could not have seen it in the middle of April. The date groves and gardens along the banks of the Euphrates are then things of beauty in their fresh Spring verdure, and the plain itself is laid down with crops. Irrigation canals cross it here and there and give trouble to the horses' feet. No grass grows upon the mounds, and there are patches of the level white with the nitre which is to be found here as in other parts of Mesopotamia; but the surface of the soil is on the whole green and pleasant to the eye. The glad waters of the river flow on in the bright morning sunshine, with palm and mulberry hanging over its banks, and birds singing as only birds can. The great city which counted its population by millions, and filled the world with a renown not yet forgotten, has disappeared under the dust of 20 centuries, but nature is as fresh and jocund as when Babylon was still unbuilt. Birds sing overheard in the pleasant Spring air; butterflies flutter about in search of flowers; balmy odors regale the sense. It is difficult under the circumstances to feel as one perhaps ought to feel for the great capital which once cumbered this ground. Nature does not mourn for it, and it is hard to be sad at the bidding of sentiment when the bright Spring hides its grave.—Geary, in Through Asiatic Turkey.

AN OCTOPUS.—The monotony of life at the Ascension Observatory was relieved by walks along the sea-shore, picturesquely lined with volcanic rocks, in which the fierce waves had cut passages and left pools in which millions of shell-fish disported themselves. Mrs. Gill relates an adventure on one of these occasions: "While poking at a lovely pink coralline in one of these grottoes, trying to dislodge it, I felt my stick suddenly pulled from my grasp. Thinking it must have got fixed among the stones in some way, I was about to put down my hand to disengage it, when, to my horror, I saw some ugly slimy tentacles wind themselves round my trusty staff, which was now the prey of a cuttle-fish. There was not the slightest occasion for it, of course; nevertheless I screamed. This was no devil-fish of Victor Hugo dimensions; but so hideous was the creature that disgust, not terror, possessed me. David, who was at a little distance exploring on his own account, concluded that I had at least sprained my ankle, and ran quickly to my assistance. "Only an octopus! We have seen many of these before." "Yes; but only baby ones, who looked innocent enough to be gorged with crabs; this is a monster, a fiend." We stood watching him. Clearly, my stick was not to his liking, for by and by he gradually unwound himself from it, and sank sullenly down among the coral, looking, as before, like a tuft of harmless sea-weed. How I congratulated myself on not having trusted my hand under water! It was a fortunate escape.—Chambers's Journal.

FRENCH DIPLOMATS IN LONDON.—There was never a more striking contrast than that presented by the characters of Prince ——— and a celebrated French General, both Ambassadors to this court. One was the refined and graceful courtier in the days of the latter Bourbons, and the other the representative of Louis Philippe. When a decoration was transmitted through the Prince, the Secretaries and attachés were drawn up in full uniform, and the recipient was invested by the Ambassador in great form and state. A friend of my own connected with the Embassy had been awarded the cross of an officier of the Legion of Honor; and, having occasion to go into the cabinet where Sebastiani was writing, the latter, without taking his pen from the paper, pushed the decoration toward him, saying "Tenez." Gen. Sebastiani, once Ambassador at this court, used to declare that there was no ripe fruit in England but a roasted apple; and when he came to this country he brought two chests of oranges, which he might have bought in England for the price of a chest. St. Aulaire, the most amiable of men, once came into a room where the junior members of the embassy, not being aware that their chief was so near, were at high jinks. Instead of rebuking them for waste of time, he merely said: "Ah, messieurs, you remind me of the days when I was a young man!"—The University Magazine.

THE AFGHANS.—Some old Indian officers call them "niggers," or "demi-savages." Yet most of them have fine features and a splendid physique. They are said to call themselves "Beni-Israel," and to trace their descent from King Saul. Their Hebrew physiognomy, the division into tribes bearing the familiar appellations of Israel, Jusef, and Ibrahim, their custom of avenging blood, and of changing their possessions every fortieth year, (a possible corruption of the Jubilee,) make the hypothesis at least interesting. The hills which inhabit the borders are people whose hand is against every man, and though some of them are nominally subject to the Ameer, there is no real suzerain, and no common national feeling, unless it be the universal hostility to the "Feringhee," or foreigner. These "Pathâns," as they are usually called, speak the Pushtoo language, while the name of Afghan includes all the inhabitants. Their religion is of the kind which, after rendering to Allah the prayers, ablutions, and fasts supposed to be his due, leaves them free to indulge their natural instincts. The women, who are usually pretty, are mere household drudges. They are seen, however, on the occasion of a relentless blood-feud, the prosecution of which through long years is looked upon as a religious duty.—Macmillan's Magazine.

LONDON TRAFFIC-BOATS IN 1712.—There is a captivating little picture, by Steele, of this London boat-traffic—half-cargo, half-passenger. "I lay one night last week at Richmond," he says, writing on Aug. 11, 1712; "I rose at 4 in the morning, and took boat for London." The little jaunt cost him 3 shillings 6 pence. That is known from what has been shown before. It is not foreign to the colors of this sketch either to read—in further confutation of Boswell and Wyndham—that "the Thames itself, loaded with the product of such shore, added very much to the landscape." What is new and appropriate matter is that "when we first put off from shore, we soon fell in with a fleet of gardeners, bound for the several market ports of London;" that "we put in at Nine Elms, and took in melons, consigned by Mr. Cuffe, of that place, to Sarah Sewell & Company, at their stall in Covent Garden;" that "we landed at Strand Bridge at 6 of the clock"—so the boating was effected in two hours, spite of the stoppages—"with 10 sail of apricot-boats." That shows the busy roadway the Thames was in the matter of supplying London with fruit and vegetables.—All the Year Round.

THE PILGRIMAGE TO KEVLAAR.

From Heine.

I.

The mother stood at the window,
Her son lay in the bed;
"Look, Wilhelm, the procession
Is passing by," she said.

"So sick I am, my mother,
I can nor hear nor see;
With thinking of my Gretchen,
My heart aches bitterly."

"Get up, we'll go to Kevlaar,
With book and rosary,
And sure our Blessed Lady
Will heal thy heart for thee."

The holy banners flutter,
As onward goes the line,
The holy psalms are chanted,
At Köln, upon the Rhine.

The mother follows also,
Leading her son goes she,
Both singing with the chorus,
"Mary, all praise to thee."

II.

To-day Our Lady at Kevlaar
Her finest clothes doth wear;
So much she must be doing,
So many sick come there.

The sick folk all are bringing
To her, as offerings meet,
Limbs that of wax are fashioned,
Waxen hands and feet.

A waxen hand one offers,
And heals in his hand the wound;
A waxen foot another,—
And straight his foot is sound.

And many are now rope-dancers
Who went upon crutches there,
And many can fiddle gayly
Whose fingers useless were.

The mother took a candle,
And made of it a heart;
"Take that to our Blessed Lady,
And she will heal thy smart."

The heart he took, and sighing,
Unto the shrine did go,
And from his eyes the tears,
The words from his heart did flow.

"O thou so highly blessèd,
O purest Maid divine,
Thou who art Queen of Heaven,
Pity this grief of mine!

"At Köln, in the city,
I with my mother dwelt,
The city where so many
Churches and shrines are built.

"And close to us dwelt Gretchen,
But dead is Gretchen now,—
A waxen heart I bring thee,
My wounded heart heal thou.

"Oh, heal my heart that's wounded,
And I will fervently
Keep singing, late and early,
Mary, all praise to thee."

III.

The sick son and his mother
Within the chamber slept;
There came our Blessed Lady,
And lightly in she stept.

She bent her o'er the sick man,
And on his heart did lay
Her gentle hand quite lightly,
And smiled and passed away.

The mother, dreaming, saw it;
And something more beheld:
She woke from out her slumber,
The dogs so loudly yelled.

There lay, stretched out before her,
Her son,—and he was dead,
And on his pale cheek playing,
The morning light shone red.

Her hands the mother folded,
She felt so wondrously;
Devout she sang, and softly,
"Mary, all praise to thee."

MUSICAL COMPOSITION—CAN IT BE CRITICISED?—The composer, inasmuch as he deprives the emotional elements of music of their freedom and force of action, cannot possibly produce an effect on the emotions at all to be compared with that spontaneously afforded by nature; he can imitate the rush of waters or the sob of despair only so distantly and feebly that the effect of either is well-nigh lost, and even for such an imitation he must endanger the artistic value of his work, which is safe only when it is the artist's sole aim and object. The most that the composer can legitimately do is to suggest a given emotion by employing in his intellectual structure such among the physical elements of his art as would in a state of complete freedom awaken that given emotion; he may choose such sensuous elements as would inspire melancholy, or joy, or serenity; he may reject any contrary element or an incongruous effect, and he may thus produce what we shall call a pathetic piece, or a cheerful piece, or a solemn piece. But this pathetic, cheerful, or solemn character depends not upon the intellectual forms imagined by the composer, but upon the sensuous elements afforded by nature; and the artistic activity of the composer consists in the conception of those forms, not in the selection of those physical elements. Therefore, if a composer is said to express the words which he is setting, he does so by means not of the creation of artistic forms, but by the selection of sensuous materials; the suggestion of an emotion analogous to that conveyed by the words is due not to the piece itself, but to its physical constituents; wherefore the artistic value of the composition in no way depends upon its adaptation to the words with which it is linked. There is no more common mistake, nor one which more degrades artistic criticism, than the supposition that the merit of "He was despised and rejected of men," or of "Fin ch'an del vino," depends upon their respective suitableness to the words; the most inferior musician would perceive that such and such physical elements were required to suggest a mental condition in harmony with either of these verbal expressions of feeling; the most inferior musician could have given us a piece as melancholy as "He was despised," or as cheerful as "Fin ch'an del vino," but—and here lies the unique test of artistic worth—only Handel could have given us so beautiful a melancholy piece as the one, and only Mozart so beautiful a cheerful piece as the other. As it is with the praise, so likewise is it with the blame; a composer who sets a cheerful piece to dismal words, or a dismal piece to cheerful words, may be reprehensible for not reflecting that the mind thus receives together two contrary impressions, and he may be condemned for want of logic and good sense; but not a word can be said against his artistic merit, any more than we could say a word against the artistic merit of the great ironworker of the Renaissance, who closed the holy place where lies the Virgin's sacred girdle with a screen of passion flowers, in whose petals ride goats and ducks, on whose tendrils are balanced pecking oranges, and in the curling leaves of which little naked children are dressing their bows and sharpening their arrows ever, in the bas-reliefs of a pagan sarcophagus. In the free and spontaneous activity of musical conception, the composer may forget the words he is setting, as the painter may forget the subject he is painting in the fervor of plastic imagination; for the musician conceives not emotions, but modulations; and the painter conceives not actions, but gestures and attitudes. Thence it comes that Mozart has made regicide Romans storm and weep as he would have made Zerlina and Cherubino laugh, just as Titian made Magdalen smite her breast in the wilderness with the smile of Flora on her feast-day; hence that confusion in all save form, that indifference to all save beauty, which characterizes all the great epochs of art, that sublime jumble of times and peoples, of tragic and comic, that motley crowding together of satyrs and anchorites, of Saracens and ancient Romans, of antique warriors and mediæval burghers, of gothic tracery and grecian mouldings, of Theseus and Titania, of Puck and Bottom, that great masquerade of art which we, poor critics, would fain reduce to law and rule, to chronological and ethnological propriety!—Fraser's Magazine.

MOTLEY AND BISMARCK.—I met Motley at Göttingen, in 1832, I am not sure if at the beginning of Easter term or Michaelmas term. He kept company with German students, though more addicted to study than we members of the fighting clubs (corps.) Although not having mastered yet the German language, he exercised a marked attraction by a conversation sparkling with wit, humor, and originality. In Autumn of 1833, having both of us migrated from Göttingen to Berlin for the prosecution of our studies, we became fellow-lodgers in the house No. 161 Friedrich-strasse. There we lived in the closest intimacy, sharing meals and out-door exercise. Motley by that time had arrived at talking German fluently; he occupied himself not only in translating Goethe's poem, "Faust," but tried his hand even in composing German verses. Enthusiastic admirer of Shakespeare, Byron, Goethe, he used to spice his conversation abundantly with quotations from these his favorite authors. A pertinacious arguer, so much so that sometimes he watched my awaking in order to continue a discussion on some topic of science, poetry, or practical life, cut short by the chime of the small hours, he never lost his mild and amiable temper.—John Lothrop Motley, a Memoir—Holmes.

PANTOMIME.—Our pantomime characters are borrowed from the Italians, but, with the exception of Pantaloon and Columbine, have been greatly altered in their migration. Arlecchino was a stupid servant, whose ragged dress was patched with cloths of different colors to denote his poverty; Brighella, whom we transformed to Clown, was a knavish valet in attendance on Pantaloon. These were stock characters in every Italian comedy until Goldoni's time. Arlecchino, however, was not a mere dumb, posturing Jumping Jack, but a witty fellow, who had a quip and a crank for everybody. From Italy he passed into France, where he became a kind of "abstract and brief chronicle of the time," shooting "folly as it flies." In 1717 a French troupe introduced him into England. Three years later the first true English pantomime was produced at the theatre in Lincoln's Inn Fields. It was entitled "Harlequin Executed," and was advertised as "a new Italian mimic scene between a Scaramouche, a Harlequin, a country farmer, his wife, and others." The creator of the dumb Harlequin was Christopher Rich, the lessee of the theatre, who made him dumb because he could not deliver dialogue; but in pantomimic expression, whether the emotion be depicted was comic or pathetic, he was a genius, and could equally convulse an audience with laughter or melt them to tears. The success of this new species of entertainment was immense, and from its first introduction took a firm hold upon English tastes. What we call "the opening" and "the Harlequinade" were blended. Some old fable, illustrated with handsome scenery, dresses, and musical and dancing, formed the plot, which was varied by comic scenes between Harlequin, Pantaloon, and Columbine. Rich's most famous successor, Harry Woodward, was not dumb, but imitated the Arlecchino in his ready wit. Harlequin was the hero of pantomime, and every other character was subordinate to him until past the middle of the present century, and indeed until a much later period, for the clown never entirely usurped his place until the appearance of that genius of pantomime, Joe Grimaldi. His father, Giuseppe Grimaldi, who arrived in England in 1758, was a celebrated clown before him, and a famous dancer. From the year above named until his death he was ballet master and principal pantomimist at Drury Lane, and during the Summer months for several years he was employed in the same capacity at Drury Lane. De Castro, in his Memoirs, tells several curious anecdotes of him, and of his curious superstitious dread of the 14th day of the month. When it was passed he used to exclaim joyfully, "Ah, now I am safe for another month." And the presentment was verified; he died on the 14th of March, and he had been born, christened, and married on the same date in different years. Angelo, in his Reminiscences, tells the following good story of him: "At the time of the (Gordon) riots, in June, 1780, he resided in a front room on the second floor in Holborn, on the same side of the way near to Red Lion Square, when the mob passing by the house, and Grimaldi being a foreigner, they thought he must be a Papist. On hearing he lived there they all stopped, and there was a general shouting. A cry of "No Popery!" was raised, and they were about to assail the house, when Grimaldi put his head out of the window from the second story, and, making comical grimaces, called out, "Gentlemen, in dis house dere be no religion at all." Laughing at the mistake, the mob proceeded on, first giving him three huzzas, though his house, unlike all the others, had not written on the door "No Popery."—Temple Bar.

SCOTCH INDIFFERENCE TO THE DEAD.—We had been idly looking at—in fact overlooking—a large, long packing-case, which lay in the forepart of the boat, all alone. Now, as we stopped at a little wooden pier, four men came forward and carried it, rather unsteadily, for it seemed heavy, across the gangway on shore. There they left it, laying on the top of it two baskets filled with eatables and drinkables, and stood loafing about, watching the cable slipped and our boat steam on across the Sound. What a shudder it would have given to the young English bride and bridegroom, had they known that in that packing-case we had landed one silent passenger, probably once belonging to these regions, and now brought home, from Oban, or Glasgow, or still further off, his life's work done, to sleep, as is the craving of the Highlander, under the shadow of the native mountains. To those who know the depth of tenderness in the Scottish heart, it is a perpetual marvel, the extreme indifference and apparent want of respect shown to the dead in Scotland. Not merely in such instances as this, only too common; but at funerals, and especially in the utter neglect of burying-places. Exceptions there are—newly-made cemeteries and a few country church-yards, where the minister happens to be of "advanced" opinions; but, as a general rule, you may go from end to end of Scotland and scarcely find a burial ground which is in the least cared for, which is not one mass of briars, nettles, and weeds. Possibly this springs from the utilitarian horror of Popery, as instanced in the silent committing of earth to earth. "Gin we pray ower the deid we'll sune be praying for them," said one amateur Mause Headrigg to an English clergyman. If a modern Old Mortality should arise and put in order—even into such decent order as a farmer puts his fields—these gardens of the Lord—"God's Acre," as the Germans call them—in which we shall all be one day planted, it would be a great boon to Scotland.—Good Words.

FRENCH PETTY EMPLOYES.—There is a peculiarly French class, the army of small Government employes, who discharge their infinitely insignificant, but infinitely diversified functions, throughout the land, on salaries which stretch between £32 and the vast, envied, and rare immensity of £160. Of the 600,000 civil servants required by the complicated and inquisitorial administration of France, one-half, at least, are obliged by their occupations to inhabit the villages. The gardes champêtres, the forest keepers, the various foremen of the national, departmental, and communal roads, the multiform agents of the tax-collectors, the overlookers of navigation on the rivers and canals, the inspectors, surveyors, and overseers of every possible process, thing or deed that can anyhow be inspected, surveyed, or overseen, and crowds of other diminutive officials with a line of gold or silver braid on their képis, are all, by the essentially local nature of their callings, rooted to the country. How they manage to lodge, nourish, clothe, and educate their families on an average pay of about £60 a year is a mystery worthy to be classed among the great enigmas of life; but they do it; and furthermore, they constitute a society. In certain villages, indeed, their group composes a recognized aristocracy; they are the grandees of the place; they possess the advantages of rank: the Sunday bonnets of their wives and daughters arouse emotion among cap-wearing spectators. And all this is paid for by about 25 shillings a week! Very wonderful. But the people of this curious category are rendered more remarkable still by a peculiarity which is proper to themselves, which saturates and permeates them—by an unimaginable servility to their superiors, and by an equally unimaginable arrogance to everybody else. They cringe and they bully with a skill which is the most productive and the most evident of their professional endowments, and which sets the beholder wondering what hidden grace there can be in the service of the French Government to develop so wonderful a capacity of alternate obsequiousness and insolence in its lower retainers. It is all over France; it sprouts in every wearer of a gold-laced cap; but it is more striking in the country than in the towns, for the double reason that there is more space for it in the former than in the latter, and that people have more time to contemplate it.—Fraser's Magazine.

SOME BISMARCKIAN PLEASANTRIES.—It was during the siege of Paris, while Bismarck und seine Leute were established in the house of Mme. Jaffé, that Herr Busch was able most easily to gather up the Chancellor's table-talk. On the 29th October, at dinner, the Chancellor tells how Napoleon has asked of him that Marshals Bazaine, Lebœuf, and Canrobert should be allowed to join him at Wilhelmshöhe. "I see no harm in it," said he; "I will recommend the thing to the Fr'an. There will be four of them—just enough for a game of whist. So many extraordinary things happen in these days that it may come to pass that Napoleon will assemble the Legislative Chamber and the Senate at Cassel, to deliberate on peace. Then I will call together the Reichstag at Versailles. The various parties will all come, except the Fortschrittspartei. These are like the Russians, who want to eat cherries in Winter and oysters in Summer. When a Russian goes into a shop he asks for kak nje bud, that is to say, What they have not got." * * * On Monday, the 23d of January, M. Jules Favre comes to Versailles to treat. The Chancellor conducts him to the King in the evening, and then returns to take tea. He seems delivered from all his troubles. He whistles a hunting song—a song telling how the stag is down. "Do you know the tune?" he says to his cousin Bismarck Bohlen. "Surely," answers the other; "has the chase been good?" "Yes," replies the Chancellor; "it is all over." This hunting air at such a moment makes one shudder. It is like a touch in Shakespeare.—The Fortnightly Review.

DISQUALIFYING GIFTS.—There are some gifts which do actually disqualify their possessors for particular kinds of success. These are the qualities which depend not upon practice, but on what may be called the actual form of the mind. The convex surface of one mind and the concave shape of another may both be admirable; they may be in the highest degree mutually attractive; but it is needless to say that they cannot be combined. They may, no doubt, be successively assumed, and may even be displayed at the same moment to different observers. The man or woman who is domineering in one relation is often yielding in another. And our minds seem to be made of a strangely elastic material, which is capable of a very Protean diversity of forms. Yet each has its own normal attitude, and an habitual tendency in any one direction is, of course, a disqualification for assuming the opposite attitude. We cannot, for instance, cultivate a habit of energetic and vigilant superintendence without increasing the difficulty of simple unquestioning reliance upon others. A habit of communicativeness makes reticence doubly difficult as well as distasteful. Great sensitiveness to the feelings of others is a direct disqualification for the practice of any severe moral surgery. Perhaps one of the forms in which the necessity of choosing between incompatible acquirements is most commonly brought home to us, is the embarrassing effect of too high or too minute a standard of perfection. How many artists are cramped and weighted by an undue development of the critical faculty, which yet is indispensable to any high attainment. Those who are wanting in this gift will never reach so high as its possessors may do, but they have a far better chance of attaining the utmost limits allowed to them by nature. A due proportion and balance of gifts is wonderfully important in enhancing their practical availableness. And yet proportion and balance are themselves a disqualification in some directions

A GLANCE AT THE SITUATION.

FOREIGN RELATIONS OF FRANCE—BISMARCK'S BOTHER WITH TAXATION—CONDITION OF GERMANY—ITALY'S AGITATIONS—PROGRAMME OF FRENCH RADICALS—GAMBETTA'S DESIGNS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Saturday, Dec. 28, 1878.

The London correspondent of the Tablettes d'un Spectateur telegraphs that all difficulties between Russia and Turkey will be arranged, and that the Ottoman territory will be evacuated before April, provided M. Waddington's meddling with the question of the Greek frontier's rectification does not mix the cards. Otherwise, the horizon seems to be pretty clear of black specks, and we may take it for granted that the New Year will dawn upon us under brighter auspices than its predecessor. There is a little difficulty with Tunis, but this tempest in a teapot will blow over, and will only have served to show that the chief of our Foreign Office is capable of energy when the circumstances warrant its display. The Ministerial Council on Saturday approved his threatening note to the Bey, who will cashier his officers, apologise to the French Government, salute the French flag, and pay a small indemnity to Count de Sancy for the attempted eviction of the stud establishment under his direction, as soon as the two French iron-clads appear in the basin of the Tunisian harbor. Only in one case might complications grow out of this pettiest of incidents: if some foreign power were acting as a backer to the Viceroy, and this, notwithstanding the reported presence of the Austrian Consul-General as adviser to Gen. Barouch, when this worthy tried to turn Count de Sancy out of the property of which he had a 99 years' concession, is far from probable. Austria has no interest in Africa, and has quite enough to do at home, and the only nationality whence trouble might come is Italy, whose prodigious amount of domestic dirty linen will keep her out of any out-door quarrels. M. Waddington has been so ridiculed for his Platonism at Berlin, where his enemies pretend that he sacrificed French interests in the Mediterranean to his wish to stand well with Bismarck, that he has possibly nursed up the whole business, so that he may close his Ministerial career by some act which will add another jewel to his crown of glory in the shape of a vindication of French vanity. Lords Salisbury and Beaconsfield had urged him at the great pow-wow to assume the protectorate of the regency as a sort of compensation for the annexation of Cyprus. France would have thus secured the flanks of her African colony in virtue of a European mandate, but this would have prevented her plenipotentiary's boast that Gallia alone had come home with clean hands from the congress, so he has bided his time, well knowing that his countrymen will forget as well as forgive all other shortcomings, provided they can read a pompous dispatch, with a gunpowder accompaniment, and will be ready to vote him a mural crown, if a few poor devils have been killed or wounded in honor of the insulted tricolor. There is not much chance of his ever having another opportunity to show that he unites the suaviter in modo to the fortiter in re, for his doom is sealed as soon as the Chambers meet again, whether their composition be Conservative or Radical, as there is to be an "interpellation," on the subject of the Burman Embassy, sent on to conclude a special treaty with France, remarkably advantageous to the commercial interests of her settlements in Cochin China, but which, having vainly awaited for six months an official interview with the Minister of Foreign Affairs, now proposes to go to London, where the offered monopoly will be examined and accepted in four and twenty hours. Is it in order to be again patted on the back by Disraeli that the great numismatist has been so strangely deaf to the solicitations of French colonists in Asia, or is their welfare less interesting than the amelioration of the social status of Roumanian Jews and Greek banditti?

The anxiety concerning home politics and the approach of the January elections prevent the French giving sufficient attention to foreign affairs. Perhaps they have become blasés by the sudden and unlooked-for incidents of great importance, in which our century has been so fertile. In Asia, the Afghan war, mysterious in its origin, uncertain in its results, appears to be near its end. The Ameer flies to Tashkend with the Russian mission, and, at the same time, his son, Yakoub Khán, arrives at Jalalabad. This young Prince, whose whole life is enveloped in a romantic prestige, expiated by a long captivity his avowed sympathy for England, and never better than now will he find a field for personal action in defending his country against the exigencies of British ambition, founded upon the necessity of insuring the safety of the north-western frontier of India. Nearer home, in Germany, that great statesman, the diplomatic conqueror of Europe, M. De Bismarck, has suffered a signal defeat for his imprudence in attacking those most dangerous of all enemies, the tax-payers. He did not understand that a modification of the form of taxation was a luxury only permissable to a perfect financial administration, and this is not the case now in Germany. The smaller States of the Empire submitted to their political servitude, but awoke when threatened with a financial despotism. M. De Bismark has weathered so many storms already that he may possibly come through safely once more, but his check is serious, and there is little doubt that his influence at court is gravely compromised. The religious controversy and his persecutions of the Catholics greatly weakened his hold upon the Emperor, who is not so blind a partisan of the Kulturkampf as his Chancellor, and although no letters have been really exchanged between Berlin and the Vatican, as has been asserted, the Berlin correspondence of the Gazette de Cologne maintains that the sovereign and his immediate surroundings are most anxious to find a modus vivendi with Rome, provided this can be accomplished without violation of the imperial prerogatives. The German reviews and newspapers give some interesting details of the financial situation of the Berlinese, which become more significant when coupled with the fact that Socialism is on the increase in the capital. According to the last report of the Government Inspector, M. Stilpnagel, the number of factories at Berlin, in 1877, amounted to 2,213, employing 44,023 men, 12,750 women, 995 boys, and 493 girls between 12 and 16 years of age, that is to say, a total of 58,261 persons. Compared with those of 1876, these figures show a decrease of 400 factories and of 3,393 workmen, which are also considerably inferior to those of the preceding years. M. Richard Michels' article in the Recherches de Sciences Politiques et Sociale, edited by the Rector of the Strasburg University, M. Schnoller, adds some other curious statistics to the above. A large proportion of the population of Berlin dwells in cellars; this proportion was about 11 per cent. in 1871, and has largely increased since then. In 1875, only one-half of the inhabitants occupied lodgings provided with a fire-place; in 1871 the number of lodgings of this description amounted to 4,597. Crime has increased in proportions equal to the misery of the people. The Gazette Nationale estimates the judicial acts indicative of crimes and misdemeanors at Berlin only in 1873 at 104,878, and at 145,587 in 1877; for all Prussia these were 652,402 in 1873, and 808,716 in 1877. The same newspaper pretends that from all appearances the catalogue of crime will show a terrible increase for the present year. The Volks Zeitung warns the public to be on its guard against the interested and pessimist judgments at party spirit, but everything indicates that the moral condition of the Empire is not less a legitimate subject for anxiety that its economical and financial situation.

From Italy we learn that the Depretis Cabinet confines itself to justify its pretensions of being simply a "Ministry of business," and, therefore, the most fit to be in power at the moment of the general election, when anything strongly colored, either black or red, might furnish a pretext for trouble. The only noteworthy symptom in this coming appeal to the national voice is the avowed intention of the Clerical Party to go to the polls, whence they have abstained generally since the commencement of the era of annexation; in this policy it is supposed they are encouraged, if not directly inspired, from the Vatican, as seems to be the case with their fellow-sympathizers in France, who at last take in that they will serve their interests much better by supporting Conservative candidates with their votes than by pouting in the corner like so many whipped school-boys. M. Gambetta's announcement at the bagmen's banquet, given in his honor at the Grand Hotel, that the Republican majority in the Senate would be at least seven and twenty, has set the sons of the Crusader to think over the possible consequences to themselves should the Marseilles platform be carried out in its entirety. M. Gambetta has never been in favor of extreme measures, but has a perfect knowledge of opportunism, and fling out boldly their programme, which the Marseilles Senator is pledged to defend in the Senate, to wit:

First—Abolition of the Senate.
Second—Separation of Church and State.
Third—Suppression of the irremovability of the magistracy.
Fourth—Abolition of the Presidency of the Republic.
Fifth—Abnegation of the liberty of high-school education.
Sixth—Expulsion of the Jesuits.
Seventh—Expulsion of all the Princes belonging to royal or imperial families.
Eighth—Reduction of military service to three years, and suppression of the one-year's volunteers.
Ninth—Suppression Prefects and Sous-Prefects.
Tenth—Suppression of all religious movements belonging to any and every creed.
Eleventh—Return of the Chamber to Paris.
Twelfth—Free and full amnesty to all political exiles and prisoners.

How far this contemplated overthrow of the Constitution will be successful in making champions no one can tell until after the votes have been counted.

The Paris Municipal Council has just reduced the salaries of all religious school masters and mistresses from 250 francs, as fixed by the law of 1875, to 150 francs per annum, avowing that "this measure was adopted with a full knowledge of the insufficiency of these emoluments for the subsistence of the teachers in the congregational schools and asylums." At the same time, the City Fathers voted an appropriation in aid of the families of the insurgents who were shot or transported in 1871. M. Ferdinand Duval's refusal to sanction either of these measures has induced the Council to petition the Minister of the Interior for his dismissal from the office of Prefect of the Seine. The address of M. Gambetta to the commercial travelers has made considerable sensation, its most salient point being the decided efforts to disarm European distrust of the Republic. He disclaims all idea of making a Republican propaganda outside of France, but his homage to foreign institutions has scarcely awakened an echo of praise except from the British press, which is not considered here to be a perfectly disinterested and impartial critic. Germany has not deigned to notice the manifesto at all, and in Austria and Russia the only sentiment expressed is one of curiosity as to how long the revolutionist disguise of a statesman can keep on the mask of moderation.

I am given to understand that a surprise is in store for the beginning of the year. M. Gambetta has been working very patiently for the next Presidency, but will be obliged to change his tactics in order to preserve his influence with the Radicals, who demand a new Ministry, with the ex-Dictator as Keeper of the Seals and President of the Council, his colleagues to be taken from the group Leon Renault, who joined the Republican Party after the 16th May to revenge himself for the selection of M. Fourtou in place of himself in that disastrous Cabinet. He finds small favor with Gambetta are not at present on speaking terms, but this is of no consequence. MacMahon is impecunious, and will agree pretty much to anything in exchange for plenty of loaves and fishes; and as he will be a docile instrument in the hands of the wily "leader" of the Opposition, he will be proposed and elected for a second term.

The latest news from Bosnia shows that the so-called insurrection there is not by any means at an end. Austria will have to conquer every foot of her new provinces in the Spring, a circumstance which has probably decided the Porte to sign the convention. Turkey knows perfectly well the temper of her natures of her subjects, and is well pleased that some other nation should have the trouble and expense of keeping them in order, knowing, also, that a second campaign will oblige a call for more money, and that, with Klapka's influence working upon his countrymen, the Hungarians will not vote another florin for extraordinary war expenses. Rest assured," he added, "we are at two or three months' distance, and as all parties need a rest, we may look for awhile on the bright side, and neglect the many misunderstandings and complications still to be discovered in Turkey. Roumania has settled her part of her engagements, and the Greek question has been specially confided to France," who has been requested to keep the Hellenes quiet, but the Albanian League has begun to show signs of returning vitality, and may yet set fire to the inflammable elements of the Balkan Peninsula, where the powers are already asking how they will preserve order when the Russians shall have gone home.

SCOTLAND AGAINST AMERICA.

ANNUAL SCOTTISH-AMERICAN CURLING MATCH AT CENTRAL PARK—VICTORY FOR THE "YANKEES."

The curling lake in Central Park was crowded yesterday afternoon with people who were attracted to the spot by the annual curling match between American and Scotch members of the various curling clubs in this City and neighborhood. The match has been played annually for several years, when the ice permitted, and is one of the most interesting of all the curling events. There were 23 contestants on each side in yesterday's match, who played in six rinks, and so equally were they matched that when time was called by the umpire, after nearly four hours' play, the game was a tie, each side having scored 104 points. When Mr. William Elliott, the umpire, announced the result, a lively discussion arose as to how the tie should be disposed of, which finally resulted in an arrangement for Rink No. 1 to play "an end," the score of which should decide the contest. The latter rink was played in the dark, and was very exciting. The "skips" were George Grieve for the Americans, and John Paterson for the Scotchmen, they having been the "chief skips" for their respective sides during the afternoon. When Mr. Grieve picked up the last stone for the Americans and the game, the Scotchmen were almost certain of winning the rink and the match by two points. But the American "skip" made a very pretty and skillful stroke, sent the Scotchmen's two points flying out of the circle, and won the match for the Americans by a single point. The following is a summary of the players and scores:

The final result of the game was announced amid loud cheering, and as the tired curlers left the ice the last man stepped on shore with a ringing shout of "Hurrah for Yankee Doodle!"

Three interesting curling matches are to be played this week. On Tuesday afternoon the Jersey City Curling Club plays the Empire City Club, of New-York. Three rinks will be formed. On Wednesday afternoon the Caledonian and Jersey City Clubs will contest, and on Thursday, at noon, the grand inter-State match is to begin, with 10 rinks on each side. The Jersey City Club is now making preparations for an expected contest with the Yonkers Club, for the grand national curling medal, the time for which has not yet been decided.

KILLED WHILE COASTING.

On Friday evening last Thomas Maran, aged 18 years, while coasting at Glen Cove, Long Island, was instantly killed by striking his head against the abutment of a bridge.

UNCLE JOHN'S EXPERIENCE

HOW HE WENT TO THE HERMITAGE.

REMINISCENCES OF AN OLD NEW-YORK COUNCILMAN—TAKING A FIRE ENGINE TO ENGLAND AND GETTING ANDREW JACKSON'S SNUFF-BOX FOR GARRY DYKEMAN.

A few days ago a jolly party was gathered around the glowing stove in Uncle John Van Tine's place in Fair Haven, N. J., on the banks of the Shrewsbury. Through the windows they looked out on the wide expanse of snow-covered river to the far-distant Highlands, but could discover nothing of interest to relieve the monotony of the scene. They had exhausted the amusements of spearing eels and dredging for oysters through holes in the ice, and the time was beginning to hang heavily on their hands. While they questioned as to what they should do next, Uncle John appeared with a quantity of lucious frozen "Shrewbury" that he had just opened; and while they ate them he was persuaded to relate some of his experiences of years ago when he was a member of the Common Council of this City.

"Well, boys," he began, "it's an old story, and the papers had a good deal to say about it at the time, but, perhaps, you might like to hear how we took the old steamer Manhattan No. 8 over to London to show the Britishers a specimen of New-York's Fire Department. You see 'twas in '60, and I was in the Council, and we'd just been to a big expense fitting up a dock for the reception of the Great Eastern on her first trip across the ocean. I was Chairman of the committee for her reception—they always put me on the reception committee for foreigners, Japanese Tommies, Turks, and the like—and her agent in this City was so pleased with what I did for 'em that he said to me: 'Councilman, whenever you want to take a trip across, there's your ship, and it shan't cost you a cent.' Well, I was busy in the City Hall, you know, and didn't think much of going till one morning Chief Decker—he lived right opposite my place, the Chief did—came to me with a letter from Chief Shaw, of London, and, says he, 'Councilman, read that.' 'Twas an invitation to the Fire Department of New-York to participate in a grand international fire-engine tournament at the Crystal Palace, at Sydenham, and when I'd finished reading it the Chief says, says he: 'By gracious! Councilman, how I'd like to go.' I says to him, 'Chief,' says I, 'you shall go, and I'll go with you.' Then I took the Chief down to the agent of the Great Eastern, and we showed him Chief Shaw's letter, and he said, 'All right; how many was there of us?' and I said, 'Six,' as a venture, and he said he'd fix us, and then we went down to Aspinwall's, and he said that there shouldn't be any freight charges on the machine, and, by gracious! there it was all fixed. When the time came for the ship to sail the Chief couldn't go because his mother was sick, but there was Foreman Charley Nichols and me and three others, and the machine was stowed snug enough down below, and we had just a beautiful passage over, you better believe. Smooth? Smooth as a mill-pond all the time, and she never rolled no more than this house does now. Yes, Sir, it was a grand passage, and we had a big reception in Liverpool. But we didn't get it; there wasn't a soul to receive us, and we were left to look out for ourselves. We went ashore, and Nichols says to me, 'What shall we do now, Councilman?' says, 'I don't know; I guess you're sorry of this game?' Well, we got the machine ashore and put her in a stable, and I telegraphed to Shaw that we were there. It seems that he didn't really expect us to go over with the machine, and only sent us the invite out of courtesy; but when he heard that we were really there he telegraphed for us to come on to London. There he had some of the best fun of his life, and then we took the machine up to one of their houses. We didn't like to leave it there because, you know, they was awfully cut up at our going over, but there wasn't any other place for her. The Admiral and Mr. Cubbitt came down to see her. They examined her all over, and we was afraid they might fool with her some way and put in a job on us that way, so nothing else would watch 'em close. By gracious! it was an anxious time, I tell you, for us, for they saw that she was a better machine than any of theirs, and we was dead sure that they'd try her some way.

"When the day came for the tournament we couldn't run her out alone to the Crystal Palace, at Sydenham, you know, and we had to trust her to a dozen of the Britishers that had been got for the purpose. Just before we got to the place there was a steep hill leading down to the lake that we was going to get the water from. Well, they got all their own machines down safe enough; but when they come to take the old Manhattan down, by gracious! if they didn't let her run off the bank. There she lay on her side, and we thought at first that 'the game was up; but we got her on her feet, and though one of the hose-pipes was broke we took some hose down to the lake and set her to going. She worked after a fashion, but she wasn't herself, and we didn't do any more than just come up to them, and they wouldn't give us any prize. There was an awful big crowd to see her play, all the lords and Dukes, and the Prince of Wales and other honorary members; but they didn't give us no reception nor nothing, and the first time they had a chance to New-York; she Prince didn't even shake hands with me, and say 'How are you, Councilman?' but we was left pretty much to ourselves. We wanted them to let us fix her up and give 'em another trial, but they wouldn't do it, and so we brought her home again the same way we went. You just oughter have seen the storm we had coming back; I tell you boys a storm on the ocean is an awful thing. I was down in the engine-room most of it, holding on for dear life; but Nicholls he came down, and says he, 'Councilman, if it's the last thing you do in life, you want to get up on deck and see her roll.' Well, I got up, by gracious! on my hands and knees, you know, and, by gracious! I never thought to see anything like it. Roll? Well, you can just bet she rolled. Down below was all the trunks and surplus baggage, and we could hear them going; her smash over to one side, and then her smash back again to the other. There was three horses down there, too, and she rolled so that their stalls broke loose, and we could hear 'em going; her smash from one side to the other with the trunks. Nobody could help 'em, and next day when she got a bit more steady like, and we could get down and estimate the damage, the horses and the trunks was so mixed up together in little pieces that you couldn't tell which was which. Well, we got the old machine home, and we got a big reception, too, from the boys, which was more than they got on the other side. After that the old Manhattan was put up in Harlem, and they called her Undine 52, and she was the first steamer that ever crossed the ocean, and by gracious! she'd a beat them Britishers, too, if they hadn't a run her off the bank.

"After all, boys, that trip wasn't a circumstance to one that I took in this country about a score of years before that, as I'll tell you about it, if you like. You see when Gen. Jackson got through with the war of 1812 folks couldn't do enough for him for giving the Britishers ballyhoo, as he did. Every city presented him with some testimonial, and New-York's was a snuff-box—gold and diamonds; cost $350; fine, you better believe. Well, when the old man died, his will said that all these testimonials was to go back to the cities they come from, and be presented over again from one to who should prove bravest in the next war. Well, the next war was the Mexican War, and after it was all over the question came up in the Board of Council who should have the New-York snuff-box. I was Chairman of the committee in the Council, and we investigated the claims of everybody, from Scott and Taylor down, and finally we decided that the first man from this State was Garry Dykeman, and that the snuff-box was to go to him. Now, Garry didn't have no more use for a snuff-box than I did, and there was a lot of remonstrances from the big-bugs that wanted it theirselves came into the City Hall all over the country; but we didn't pay no attention to them, and I was appointed a committee of one to go down South to the Hermitage, and get the snuff-box and bring it home. Money was appropriated for my expenses, and, by gracious! I spent it, like a sailor, in 19 days—every cent of it. I took steamer from New-York to Savannah, and then the cars to Augusta, Atlanta, and Nashville, you see, I didn't know when I'd have another chance, and I was bound to see as much of the South as I could while I was there. When I got to Nashville I put up at the hotel, and told the landlord who I was, and that I wanted him to get me just the finest turnout in the City and never mind the expense. By gracious, Sir! you should have seen the style in which I rode out to the General's place, and you may just imagine that I didn't disgrace New-York. When we drove up to the house who should I see on the veranda but the General himself. Dumbfounded, I didn't say a word, but just handed him my credentials signed by the Mayor of New-York, and waited for him to speak. He didn't more than look at the name when he made me a bow and said, 'Councilman, I've been looking for your arrival, and welcome you, walk in;' but not a word did he say of the snuff-box. I spent the day with him, and he treated me like a prince; introduced me to his folks, took me all over the farm, dined me and wined me, but never a word of the box. You see, all the New-York Custom-house fellows had been sending him remonstrances, till he really didn't know whether he ought to get it or not. Finally, he says to me: 'Councilman, you have had a long journey, and must be tired; perhaps you'd like to retire?' I said, 'Perhaps I would,' and he showed me up stairs to Gen. Jackson's own room, and said that up to that time no one had occupied it since the General's death; but that as the representative of the great City of New-York he couldn't think of putting me in any room but that of the great man whom New-York had delighted to honor. He said good night, but never a word of the snuff-box, and I began to think that I hadn't got so easy a job on hand after all.

"In the morning he came to see how I had rested, and, said he, 'Councilman, I had a consultation with my family last night, and we decided that you were entitled to the box, and here it is.' With that he put it in my hand, and, by gracious! I was relieved. When I went down stairs he began to ask me about New-York, and to say how much he should like to visit the City, and run up to West Point and see his son who was there, for all them Southerners used to educate their sons at West Point at Government expense before the war. A hint was good enough for me, and quick as I could I says to him, 'Sir, I come back to New-York with me, and present the box to his Honor the Mayor of our great City yourself; it shan't cost you a cent.' He says, 'Done,' and we shook hands on it then and there. While we was at breakfast I happened to look out of the window and saw some mighty pretty things, like big icicles, hanging to a tree on the lawn. I asked what they was, and he said they was 'stalactites' from the Mammoth Cave. I said, where is this cave? And he said, about 75 miles from there; and I said let's go home that way. He said it would cost a good deal more to go that way, and I said never mind the expense, the City of New-York was wealthy and she wasn't often represented in that part of the country. So we went to the Mammoth Cave, and to Louisville, and Chicago, and Buffalo, and Niagara Falls, and Canada, and the White Mountains, and Portland, and Boston, and Newport, and by the time we reached New-York I had just 10 shilling left of that $1,000. By gracious, boys, didn't we have a reception? You see I had telegraphed to the Hall when we might be expected, and the military was out, and the Board and the Council in carriages, and bands, and we had a dinner and speeches, and I rather guess it cost the city another $1,000 before that snuff-box was handed to Garry Dykeman.

"How would I have come home if the appropriation had been $2,000 instead of $1,000? Why, by way of California or Europe, I don't know which; anyway, I wouldn't have let 'em appropriate all that money for nothing, by gracious!"

ARE CUSTOMS RECORDS PUBLIC?

IMPORTANCE OF THE QUESTION IN THE BENKARD & HUTTON CASE—PEDRICK'S TRANSACTIONS IN COURT.

A motion involving a very important question as to the rights and relations of the commercial community in respect to the Customs officials in this City was argued before Judge Choate, in the United States District Court yesterday, in the case of the United States against Messrs. Benkard & Hutton. The action is brought to recover about $121,000 for unpaid duties on importations made by the defendants during the years 1877 and 1878. The latter say they gave the money to pay all their duties to a clerk in their employ named Pedrick, and always believed the duties were duly paid. Pedrick is now under indictment for forgery of the initial-letter check of the Cashier to the warehouse receipts and certificates of entry. By this device he was enabled to pocket the money given him by his employers to pay the duties, and at the same time secure the withdrawal for them of their goods from the warehouses. The Government, however, recently began a civil suit against the firm for the recovery of this large accumulation of unpaid duties, and the defendants have not yet prepared their answer to the complaint. In order to do so they desire the privilege of examining the books, records, entries, and vouchers in the Collector's Office respecting these alleged unpaid sums. The Collector refused to permit the inspection, and, as the time in which the defendants are required to answer is fast expiring, the firm moved before the court for a temporary stay of proceedings on the part of the Government and for a writ of mandamus against the Collector, to compel him to grant the examination they seek. Messrs. Roger M. Sherman and John N. Whiting appeared for the defendants, and the motion was opposed by Assistant United States Attorney Jones.

Mr. Sherman presented the facts in the motion by affidavit, showing that he had applied to Collector Merritt for the inspection as counsel and attorney for the defendants; that the Collector referred him to Deputy Collector Balch, and that the latter gentleman refused the inspection in the Collector's hearing and presence. The reason given for this refusal was that such inspection was contrary to the usages of the office, as well as to the instructions contained in circular No. 636 of the Treasury regulations. This circular, however, seems to have been drawn with reference to checking the burrowing proclivities of claim agents and similar persons, and provides that a search or examination of the records shall be allowed only on application and upon writing and setting forth the objects sought to be obtained by such inspection. This circular was issued by the Secretary of the Treasury during Collector Murphy's term of office, and has never been rescinded. The question of the jurisdiction of this court to issue a mandamus having been raised, Mr. Sherman argued that the court could not, as a matter of original jurisdiction, issue the writ, but the application would have to be made to the Supreme Court of the United States. He insisted that the records in the Custom-house which the officials refused to exhibit would show that every cent of the duties claimed had been paid, and that they might possibly disclose collusion on the part of some of the officials of the department. Mr. Sherman denounced what he termed "this outrage" against the personal and substantial right of a party to the examination of public records, and maintained that the powers of the Collector being quasi-judicial in respect to the determination of the rate and amount of duties to be paid on goods, and in reference to his decision as to the liability of the importer to pay the duties imposed, the records were legally as open and public as the judgment record of this or any other court.

Mr. Jones, in opposing the motion, cited many authorities bearing on his position in the case, but was interrupted by Judge Choate, who said he would like to hear the counsel on the question whether the Secretary of the Treasury had any power to make such a regulation as was contained in Circular No. 636 of the department against a party litigant.

Mr. Whiting called attention to the fact that while the Treasury regulations were perhaps wise and prudent, as well as necessary, it did not follow that a party was to be cut off from obtaining evidence from the records where a substantial right was involved and was given by law.

Mr. Jones contended that the Secretary had discretionary power in the matter, but Judge Choate said he did not see how that could be held as to an examination of the records. The Secretary might prescribe reasonable rules directed toward the safety and proper use to be made of the records at such examinations.

Mr. Whiting said that all the defendants desired was a reasonable opportunity to protect themselves and prepare their defense. They desired to inspect the record of their own acts—the only record allowed to be kept of those acts. It was a peculiar fact in this case that the receipts for payments of duties by importers are kept by the payee, and not by the payor, as is customary in ordinary business transactions. It might be evidence for the Government, perhaps, but it was, nevertheless, a public record of a compliance with law by the citizen, and the question was fraught with grave import to the business men of this City. He further called the attention of the court to the fact that the defendants constituted one of the few strictly importing firms of native American origin which were left under the present system of this Government; that they held the highest rank in the community for integrity, and had been conspicuous for their loyalty to the Government and for upholding the inviolability of the Customs laws, and that they had already placed in court, to await the result of this action, a bond in the sum of $121,000, the amount claimed to be due by them under these very extraordinary circumstances.

Judge Choate took the papers, reserving his decision.

WHAT POSTPONED A WEDDING.

The steam-ship Labrador arrived from Havre on Sunday last several days overdue. She carried three magnificent dresses intended as the wedding outfit of Miss Eveline Bailey, of Petersburg, Va. The marriage was set for Tuesday. The Labrador was not entered until Monday, and did not begin to discharge cargo until Tuesday. Meantime, there was great consternation in Petersburg, and telegrams in rapid succession poured into this City making inquiries. The young lady's broker flew about the wharf and the Custom-house like a crazy man. At length the goods were landed, and the appraisers went to work at them. They decided that the invoice showed undervaluations of from 40 to 50 per cent. Tableau! The broker flew to the Custom-house and told his piteous tale, but the authorities were adamantine. Finally, on payment, under protest, additional duties of 130 francs on each dress and a penalty which brought the entire sum up to 946 francs, the Collector consented to release the goods, and they went to Petersburg by fast express on Tuesday night. They were received on Wednesday, and the wedding, which had been postponed, took place at the residence of Mrs. Judge Joynes. The groom was Dr. McLean Tiffany, of Baltimore, a relative of the Tiffanys of this City. The officiating clergyman was Rev. Dr. C. B. Haines, of Paul's Church, Petersburg. Among the guests were Gen. Joseph E. Johnston and wife. During the ceremony the chime of bells presented to St. Paul's by the bride's sister rung a merry peal.

JAY GOULD'S BROKERS.

A return was made yesterday, before Judge Joseph F. Daly, in the Court of Common Pleas, to the order directing William Belden, Henry Belden, Jr., Charles D. Belden, and Jay Gould to show cause why a Receiver should not be appointed of the assets of the firm of William Belden & Co. at the request of W. E. Conner, a member of the firm. The counsel for Mr. Conner applied for an adjournment until Tuesday next to give time for the preparation of a formal decree of dissolution of partnership. He also informed Judge Daly that amicable relations had been resumed by Mr. Conner and his partners, and the lawsuit would be settled. The members of the firm yesterday signed an agreement for a dissolution of partnership, appointing William Belden and Washington E. Conner Joint Receivers of the assets of the firm, and designating the Fourth National Bank as the depository of the money under the control of the Receivers until a final accounting and settlement are made.

THE CHARGE AGAINST "DR." WHITEHEAD.

A writ of habeas corpus was granted yesterday in the Supreme Court, Chambers, by Judge Barrett, upon the application of "Dr." Newton Whitehead, who is charged with malpractice, and who is under $5,000 bail to await examination before Police Justice Murray. Whitehead desires to have the bail-bond vacated on the ground that it is a restraint upon his liberty, and that such a restraint, or detention, is illegal because imposed by Justice Murray without authority. The writ is made returnable before Judge Barrett to-morrow morning. Annie Platt, Whitehead's alleged victim, was surrendered yesterday to the District Attorney's office by the Brooklyn authorities, through Capt. Kealy, of the Central Office. Assistant District Attorney Lyon and the woman committed to the House of

THE PILOT ON THE FERRY.

A CHAPTER OF HIS EXPERIENCES.

HOW HE MANAGES HIS BOAT WITHIN THREE FEET OF DISASTER—A NIGHT TRIP ON THE NORTH RIVER.

It is not for any beauty of line or symmetry of proportion that the Jersey City ferry-boats may be commended. They are constructed adaptably to the nature of their service, on a rather unwieldy model, not unlike the oval water-batteries of modern navies, and very similar to the turtle. They have no knife-like prows with a modulated sweep to a curvilinear stern, and their speed is never quite apparent to an outside observer. They are prosaic and ungraceful, possessing none of the majesty of a sailing-ship; none of the briskness of a tow-boat, and none of the easy, from-wave-to-wave motion of a sloop or schooner. But they adequately answer all the uses required of them; in tonnage, length, breadth, engine-power, and cost of construction they compare with some of the transatlantic steamers moored at adjacent wharves; their cabins are comfortable, and as ferry-boats they are the best in the world.

The most notable thing about them, however, is the skill with which they are handled in the most variable currents and unpropitious winds, through the fleets of large and small vessels, at anchor and in motion, which continually beset their course. Big and apparently unwieldy as they are, they leave one dock and enter the other opposite with astonishing certitude, no matter how strongly the tide may be rushing nor how many times they may have to alter the course to avoid other vessels. It becomes an affair of thrilling sensations to watch them occasionally. When it appears certain that they are going to go out the stern off a sloop, or crash into a wharf, the seemingly imminent disaster is averted by a few feet, and small as the margin is, the pilot's calculations are never wrong—in clear weather, at least—but are made with the admirable mathematical nicety which finds as much safety in three feet of space, with care, as in furlongs, with carelessness. The docks are little wider than the beams of the boats, and in an ebb-tide the current immediately outside of them is exceedingly strong—so strong, in fact, that the boats are compelled to run some distance above them, when it catches them and bears them down. Here is another illustration of the pilot's accuracy of judgment. If he should attempt to run his boat in a bee-line for the slip, the current would bear him much further down the river. In making for, say, the New-York shore, he consequently has to steer well up stream and estimate precisely the number of seconds it will take to drift down. A miscalculation of five seconds would be ruinous, but it never occurs, and this success is in despite of the additional embarrassment caused by the movements of boats from adjoining docks. We are reciting experiences familiar to all who use the ferries, and who seldom find occasion to complain of their mismanagement. But few in this multitude ever see the pilot, except in glancing at the little round wheel-house upon the upper deck, where his head and shoulders are visible. After dark he is out of sight, as no lights are allowed to burn in the house, and he might as well be in the hold, as his watch lasts, he is confined in that turret, guiding his boat with the same certainty in the midnight obscurity as in the broad day. Perhaps the reader would expect to find in him a garrulous willingness to rehearse his experiences; but he has scarcely a word to say about them, which is often the way with men who have seen and thought much. His answers to questions are laconic, and he seems to be constantly in search of some invisible object in the distance. If he were loquacious he might tell of the wonderful changes effected in the appearance of the City by the warm-colored lights of the signals and chimneys, the lovely colors fall upon it through the haze of Autumn mornings; what a blaze of splendor all the western windows and the weather-vanes become when a stormy sunset is passing away, and what lugubrious transformations take place in the Winter moonlight. But these things are a part of "the incommunicable luxury of thought" with him, and he cannot express them.

The other night the writer went on board one of the boats on the Cortlandt-Street Ferry, and having a proper authorization, passed from the lower deck by a stairway to the upper deck. The pilot remained here during the trip. The tread of the passengers, the rumble of the vehicles, and the voices of the deck hands are audible to him, but he can see nothing that occurs below. He is completely insulated from the engine-room, however, except a beam of the engine and the straight black funnel throw heavy shadows upon the light color of the deck. At either side there is a horizontal tank filled with water, and between the other end there is one of the turret-like wheel-houses previously mentioned. The constructors of the boat have been merciful, and on this bleak January night, when the temperature out of doors was edged by a fierce north-easter, the air within the pilot-house was comfortably heated by steam from below. "A cold night, Sir," said Capt. Price, to whom we had been guided by the glow of a cigar, and his cordial welcome of the stranger showed that any company is acceptable in breaking the monotony of a night's watch. The darkness did not allow us to see the details of the interior, and for these we must depend on the observation of a previous visit. There was an arm-chair, seated in which we could see with the twinkling lights of the Jersey shore, with the occasional broad flashes from the locomotives, and close by the helm was a speaking-tube, a signal-bell, and a compass. The United States regulations for the government of pilots were conspicuously framed in front of the wheel, and as these are admirable, and yet little understood by the masses, it may be worth while to call attention to a few of them. Had a similar code been in use among navigators of the Thames last Summer, it is probable that the ill-fated Princess Alice would still be carrying loads of happy passengers to Gravesend. The first rule is as follows:

When steamers are approaching each other "head to head," or nearly so, each steamer shall pass to the right of the other. Each steamer shall give as an indication of the pilot's intention one short, distinct blast of the steam whistle, which shall be immediately answered by a similar blast. But if the course of the steamer is so far starboard that the pilots do not consider they are meeting "head on," or if they cannot safely pass to the right, the pilot first deciding on this shall immediately give two short, distinct blasts of his steam whistle, and they shall pass to the left. Second—When steamers are approaching each other in an oblique direction, they shall pass to the right of each other, as if meeting head to head, and the whistle signals shall be the same as under the preceding rule. Third—When steamers are approaching each other, the pilot of either fails to understand the intention of the other, the one in doubt shall immediately indicate his uncertainty by giving several short, quick blasts of the whistle. Fourth—When vessels are within half a mile of each other, both shall be slowed to a speed barely sufficient for steerage way until the proper signals have been given, answered, and understood, or until the vessels shall have passed each other. Fourth—Whenever a steamer is nearing a short bend or curve in the channel, when, from the height of the banks or other causes, a steamer approaching from the opposite direction cannot be seen half a mile off, the pilot, when within that distance of the curve or bend, shall sound one long blast of the whistle, to be answered by any approaching steamer within hearing. Should the signal be answered from the further side of the bend, the usual signals for meeting shall be given and answered, but if the first signal is not responded to, the pilot sounding it shall consider the channel clear and govern himself accordingly. Fifth—All signals shall be given at all times when vessels pass within a mile of each other to starboard or port. Sixth—When two steamers are approa

The Times Up-town Office—No. 1,253 Broadway.
Paris Office of The Times—No. 39 Rue de Lafayette.
The Times is on sale in London at No. 449 Strand, W. C., from Henry F. Gillig & Co., and at Mr. Stevens', No. 4 Trafalgar-square.

This morning The Daily Times consists of Twelve Pages. Every news-dealer is bound to deliver the paper in its complete form, and any failure to do so should be reported at the publication office.

The Signal Service Bureau reports for this region indicate for to-day rising barometer, northerly followed by easterly winds, warmer, cloudy weather, with rain or snow, and falling barometer.

THE RATE OF INTEREST.

Does the absorption of Four per cent. Government bonds indicate that this rate of interest is hereafter to be the measure of the value of money in this country? It is understood, of course, that in ordinary circumstances national credit ranks higher than corporate or individual credit, and the Four per cent. standard can therefore be used only approximately. But, keeping this distinction in view, does the progress of funding indicate a large and lasting reduction in the general rates of interest, or is it indicative merely of continued distrust and the consequent accumulations of idle capital?

Referring to former remarks of The Times upon this subject, the Springfield Republican hails the Four per cent. investments as implying "a great reduction in all interest"—as a "great cheapening of all capital," with attendant relief to industries and enterprises. If the condition of things was generally healthy, the inference would be correct. If, with an average demand for capital, its loanable value declined, it would be safe to assume that the lower rate of interest is the result of causes on which prudent business men may base their calculations. But this hypothesis is at variance with facts. The cheapness of money represents, not its wholesome abundance, but the absence of desirable opportunities for its investment. Whether in London or New-York, the position is susceptible of this construction and this only. Ordinary channels for the employment of capital are closed. Industries are depressed and enterprises suspended. When business loans are effected, the rate charged for accommodation bears no proportion to the rate allowed on deposits or to the prices of consols and United States bonds. The value of both of these securities has, then, a double significance. So far as it expresses public confidence in the credit of the two Governments, it is satisfactory. So far as it exemplifies the absence of a legitimate business demand, and the prevalence of a distrust whose ramifications may be traced everywhere, it is not a fit subject of congratulation. England and the United States would both be better off if the tendency to invest in $3\frac{1}{2}$ consols and 4 per cent. bonds were not so pronounced as it is.

We are reminded that "an enterprise is now highly prosperous which pays 8 per cent. on a fair valuation, while capital used to demand 12." Undoubtedly. During the last five years there have been enterprises of all kinds, previously prosperous, whose proprietors have been glad to make ends meet. The fact, however, cannot be accepted as evidence of that "great cheapening of all capital" which precedes a permanent lessening of the rate of interest. It has more significance as in part an explanation of that withholding of capital from business projects which produced a financial plethora, and in turn renders possible the sale of Four per cents on a large scale. Nor is the general argument affected by the negotiation of choice corporate loans at rates below those formerly paid. The Chicago and Rock Island Railroad provided for the retirement of a 7 per cent. bond by the issue of a 6 per cent., which to-day yields the buyer not more than $5\frac{1}{2}$ net. The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Road, which was content to pay 8 per cent., issues a 7 per cent. consolidated, which at present prices does not yield more than 6 per cent. net. In either case, the transaction on the part of the company has a more direct bearing on its improved credit than on the question of interest. The companies are able to obtain money on better terms than formerly because their financial condition is stronger. Railroads whose condition is less favorable are obliged to pay the old rates. Yet if "the great cheapening of all capital" were a wholesome reality instead of an unhealthy symptom, the effect would be visible, in a greater or less degree, in all directions.

The change from depression to activity, from hard times to prosperity, will be gradual. In this country, at least, it has begun with a fair prospect of continuance. For a time, the process will not appreciably affect the prices of securities or check the flow of capital into the Four per cents. But it is unreasonable to suppose that these prices can be maintained, or that Four per cent. will satisfy the average investor, after confidence shall have been restored and ordinary outlets for capital reopened. The requirements of industry and business will give rise to a demand to which capitalists will respond. A real estate movement will affect the holding of Four per cent. bonds. These are not contingencies to be regretted. They will stop the talk about "the great cheapening of all capital," and they will explode the notion that a Four per cent. bond expresses the future normal rate of interest in this country. They may even suggest a revision of the opinion that the return of bonds from Europe is a blessing. But the country will have substantial reasons for being satisfied. It will recognize in the higher value of money, consequent upon an increased demand, one of the signs of industrial and business prosperity.

What is not unlikely to occur is a nearer approach to equalization, as between East and West, in the prevailing rates of interest. The attempt to make 4 per cent. a measure of values will not succeed, but it may be possible to lessen the difference in the rates obtaining in Illinois and New-York respectively. The Governor of Michigan, in his Message to the Legislature, speaks of "a demand for the repeal of the provision authorizing contracts to be made at rates as high as 10 per cent." If this be accomplished, the uniform rate in the State will be 7 per cent., at which rate, the Governor says, "an abundance of money can now be obtained" on real estate security. It is possible that the Michigan farmers are misled by circumstances as accidental as those which deceive some Eastern people. At any rate, we know that one of the results of the inability to find profitable employment for capital here has been the sending of large amounts westward for investment in farm mortgages. Lenders have gone on their knees to borrowers, and the latter have no doubt, in some localities, obtained loans at the rate mentioned by Gov. Croswell. But it would be premature to infer from an exceptional fact that the Western rate on mortgages has declined from 10 to 7 per cent. The Illinois farmers ask their creditors to revise existing contracts on an 8 per cent. basis. Leaving details out of account, the West will have only itself to blame if the wide difference between its borrowing rate and that of the East be not reduced. And in the natural tendency of capital to flow where it finds the best channels of employment, we have an influence that will gradually equalize the value of money and prevent that "great cheapening" in the older States which the adoption of a 4 per cent. standard would imply.

THE FRENCH REPUBLICAN PROGRAMME.

On Tuesday next the Legislative Chambers of France begin their regular session for the first time with a Republican majority in the Senate. While this is an event of extraordinary significance and a new point of departure in the process of settling the Republic on a secure and permanent basis, it is not likely to be followed by any sudden or radical propositions of change. More and more, as the time has drawn near, and the Republican triumph has become more fully assured, first by the election of Municipal Delegates on the 27th of October, and then by the Senatorial election itself on the 5th of the present month, has there appeared a disposition to avoid agitation and a disquieting policy, which would hinder rather than help the Republicans. Conscious of their strength and of the impotence of their enemies, they have become content to proceed slowly, that their progress might be the more sure. In his last public utterance of importance prior to the recent election of Senators, M. Gambetta, the all-powerful leader of his party, counseled patience above all. "The Republic," he said, "will enter into a new existence with an unprecedented freedom, and by prudence, wisdom, and patience the country will overcome all her difficulties, and once more be happy and contented." With "prudence, wisdom, and patience" for their watchword and Gambetta in the moderate mood which has characterized him of late as a controlling power, the French Republicans are in no danger of giving their enemies the opportunity for which they are watching with sinister vigilance. Months ago it was assumed, as an inevitable consequence of a marked triumph of the Republicans in securing the control of the Senate, that Marshal MacMahon would resign, but no one has of late seemed to anticipate any such event. In his famous speech at Romans, last September, in which the Republican programme was distinctly foreshadowed, Gambetta declared that it would be the President's duty to remain at his post, and it would not be for the interest of the Republican Party to have him resign.

Another change that was some time ago anticipated as a result of the Senatorial election concerned the present Ministry, but even the prospect of any serious modification there has perceptibly waned. There is little doubt that M. Dufaure will remain in power, and if changes occur in the composition of the Cabinet, they will be of minor importance and of no political significance. Much has been said at one time and another about Gambetta himself taking office, but there is no immediate likelihood of that. In his address at the banquet of Commercial Travelers, on Christmas Eve, already alluded to, he said: "I am not ambitious of power." That may have been meant as a disclaimer of any intention to take office or it may not, but he has little ground for being ambitious of power at the present stage of affairs, for he could hardly increase that which he already wields, so far as influence in molding the destinies of the Republic are concerned. The Ministry, in its present form or any that it is likely soon to take, receives its inspiration from him, while the executive head of the nation is utterly powerless to influence its course. He has a controlling power over the Administration without the responsibility that would make it perilous. As Chairman of the Budget Committee of the Chamber of Deputies he has a firm hold on the purse-strings of the nation. It is altogether natural, that with the work in hand of gradually bringing the institutions of the country into harmony with themselves and with Republican principles, through the action of the Legislature, sustained by the nation at large, Gambetta should prefer his present position of a parliamentary and popular leader and the directing genius of the perfecting process, to the doubtful glory and embarrassing responsibilities of the official head of the Cabinet. When the work of completing the establishment of free institutions according to the ideal that he cherishes is completed, and the royalist factions shall lay down their arms or subside into a harmless minority, if that juncture should happily be reached, the situation would be different and he might find satisfaction in identifying himself nominally as well as really with the administration of the Government.

An ambition of which Gambetta has been suspected is that of succeeding Marshal MacMahon, as President, but that aspiration, if it exists, does not take definite form yet. It is, indeed, among the possibilities of the future, but not until changes occur that are not yet initiated. MacMahon's term expires in 1880, and that is probably too soon for the ripening of any ambition of the kind that the great Tribune may cherish. Another septennate would postpone his hopes too long to make such an ambition a present incentive. But there are other and greater changes in the seed which may already give color to his dreams. Gambetta will not be ready to be President in 1880; and it is doubtful if he thinks of waiting for 1887, and it is still more unlikely that he would rejoice to see another man step into the fangless old soldier's place before him. But what is the Presidency of France under the Constitution as it stands, that an ambiti us and active man should aspire to it? Let MacMahon's lack of power and influence answer the question. The political institutions of the country were virtually framed in 1872-3 by the Orleanists, who regarded the Republic as a temporary scaffolding to a throne. They made a constitutional monarchy without a monarch, but they prepared a place that could be easily converted to a seat of royalty. With the hedge of divinity and the pageantry and splendor of royal state, it could be made an imposing eminence, but as the seat of a mere civil officer, a nominal chief magistrate, it was devoid alike of grandeur and of power. It is neither a throne nor a chair of state, but a mere pedestal of a figure-head. But Gambetta no doubt remembers that with the expiration of the first septennate the Constitution becomes subject to revision. Much may be done in a year to strengthen the Republic. The promises of the September speech at Romans, in regard to bringing the magistracy and the Army into sympathy with the Republic and the power of the clergy into subjection to civil law, may be put far on the way to fulfillment. Then, in the fullness of time, when 1880 has come and the humbled and compliant Duke of Magenta is ready to step down or to await the pleasure of his masters of the Republic, the question of revision may be brought up. Then, possibly, the office of President may be made something more than the waiting-stool of a sovereign that is never to come. It may be clothed with the power, the dignity, and importance of the highest station in a free Republic, and may be capable of exciting ambition in the mind of Gambetta.

A PSYCHOLOGICAL STUDY.

It is the opinion of some philosophers that there is a certain average of well-developed mental and moral character, which is seldom greatly exceeded, and those men who are extraordinary are in a certain sense monstrosities. Occasionally there may be a many-sided genius, whose intellect appears to be highly developed in all directions, but he is generally wanting in fullness of moral qualities, often almost devoid of lofty purpose, and of those genial sentiments which are the basis of what we call humanity. As a rule, however, the man who devotes himself to a special line of activity and achievement and far outstrips others who may be occupied in a similar way, does so by dint of an abnormal development of certain faculties, which is accompanied by corresponding deficiencies in other directions. He may be credited with remarkable ambition or tireless perseverance, but these are with him scarcely a matter of volition. They are merely the consequence of a despotic impulse that drives him on, because his whole mental activity takes a certain direction with an eagerness that is irresistible. Attempt to turn it in other directions and it chafes against rigid limitations and can do nothing. He may be less than a common man in the faculties that have no relation to that which dominates his nature. In his absorption in a pursuit which is practically a passion, an uncontrolled, if not an uncontrollable, appetite for action of a certain kind, he is likely to permit his feelings to become callous, to disregard moral considerations, to forget obligations to those about him and to society and the world at large, and present a nature vastly elongated in a single direction, but lacking in breadth, in depth, and in fullness.

Take the example of the remarkable lawyer lately deceased at Newburyport. He was little more than an embodied memory, attended by a power for continuous application without exhaustion or physical derangement which was as wonderful as it is rare. With a brain that grasped and retained whatever was presented to it in books or by men with whom he came in contact, he become a cyclopedia of knowledge, which he applied to a singular use. It was only a matter of time with him to accumulate in the store-house of his memory all the law laid down in the books, so that he could apply himself to any task that presented itself, fully equipped and ready, where others would have to make a special preparation. Whatever the emergency, he had to his hand the statutes, the precedents, the principles as laid down by jurists, the provisions of treaties, which were to fortify his position and overwhelm that of his adversary. Had he been in the place of the adversary, he could with equal readiness have summoned up those which bore upon his side of the case. His success as a lawyer was due almost entirely to his resources as a master of the lore by which legal questions are decided, and as a diplomatist he succeeded only where the requirements were those of international law. Of the principles of abstract justice, the presumed ideal purpose of all law, the demands of strict equity, he took little heed. These involved the use of faculties in which he was absolutely deficient. His aim was success with such weapons as his peculiar nature armed him with, and not the doing of justice among men. Hence, in politics he was an anomaly; of statesmanship he could have no conception. He could take a position in the controversies which involved the interests of the nation with the same facility and indifference to ultimate considerations of right, as he could devote himself to the cause of a client without predilections for or against his suit; and he could maintain that position skillfully by a similar use of whatever would avail to support it. All controversies have two sides, and there is more or less to be said in behalf of any position that may be taken. He could take his side as though there was nothing to determine him but present expediency, and having taken it, could employ in its advocacy whatever arguments were to be drawn from recorded experience or the dicta of authority. His apparent motive in taking one side rather than the other at any particular juncture, was that in his view, at the moment, it promised to be successful and to bring certain advantages and rewards.

The life of a man thus dominated by certain faculties, and in consequence intensely absorbed in certain narrow pursuits, while it may result in wonderful achievements and appear to be crowned with extraordinary success, is singularly barren of those richer results which it is the instinct of humanity to value highly. The man uses the world, his fellow-beings, his friends, and his family merely to promote his intense purpose, or as furnishing instruments and opportunities for his special work. Kindly human sentiments become as nothing to him; relationships in which affection and a sense of reciprocal duties are involved have no hold upon him; religion, morality, patriotism, and fireside virtues and amenities lie outside the domain of his activity. He pursues and achieves with untiring persistency, and makes a reputation before the world, but when his way of life falls into the sere, the yellow leaf, that which should accompany old age, "as honor, love, obedience, troops of friends," he cannot look to have. He may be admired and eulogized, but the world feels no sense of loss when his brilliant career ends, no breaking of bonds of sympathy and tender regard which makes the heart to mourn. How far such a man may be subject to criticism for the cold selfishness that marks his busy days, for the lack of benefit bequeathed by him to the world beyond the incidental results of professional and paid-for service, for the absence of any direct effort to elevate, to purify and make better, those about him and the human society of which he was a member, is a question that brings up subtle metaphysical considerations that we do not care to go into. Whether the limitations of his nature were impassable and the tendency of his life irresistible, so that he was merely what he had to be, is a question in the old problem of fate and free will upon which the human race will probably cipher without reaching a solution as long as the world exists. We speak of the man now merely as a phenomenon, interesting to study and possibly instructive to those who are young and plastic, and disposed to regard intellectual achievement as the one means of making life sublime.

WHY GET INDIGNANT?

A few of our "Irish fellow-citizens" are trying to lash themselves into a state of excitement over the alleged affront to Gen. Grant, offered by that sapient and pious body, the Town Council of Cork. They even propose to hold an indignation meeting for the purpose of giving vent to such excitement as they may be able to work up; and to make a protest against what they regard as an insult to our distinguished fellow-citizen who is so successfully trying to enjoy himself abroad. Doubtless, Gen. Grant would appreciate their feelings and the motives by which they are actuated, but he would probably thank them not to make themselves ridiculous merely because they have the example of some of their friends "at home" for it. If the demonstration is meant to be a protest in his behalf or that of his friends, it would much better be abandoned as altogether unnecessary. If it is gotten up in behalf of the people of Cork, to soothe their feelings and relieve them from the humiliation brought upon them by the conduct of their official representatives, that is another matter, and one in which we take no special interest. If it is persisted in, it should be purely a Cork affair and not a Gen. Grant affair; but it seems as though the people of Cork might make their own protest, if they feel that there is occasion for it, and if they do not, it is sheer impertinence for any one else to interfere.

Our Consul at Queenstown saw fit to notify the aforesaid Town Council of an intended visit to their picturesque city of a distinguished American citizen, and if he had not done so he would probably have been accused of an intentional slight. He thought he was doing an act of courtesy, and so he was, but there are people who do not understand acts of courtesy or know how to deal with civility. Wherever he had been before, Gen. Grant found that the people took pleasure in meeting him and showing him some attention, and had good-naturedly given them the opportunity. No doubt he rather liked it, as who that is human would not? He is somewhat known as a tolerably successful soldier, and has held a civil position that may still be regarded as distinguished, and that he could not wander over the earth unnoticed, like a common or obscure man, is not to be wondered at. No one had ever imagined a reason why he should not be received and treated everywhere with the consideration due to an unusually eminent American, associated conspicuously with a most important episode in his country's history. It remained for Cork to take a stand against his triumphal progress over Europe and to disregard his claims to attention or even to respectful treatment. The communication of our Consul was merely marked "read," and filed away with the musty papers of the Town Council. This was not done, however, without a lively discussion, in which the motive for the extraordinary conduct was revealed. It was said that Gen. Grant was an enemy to the Holy Catholic Church, and had, at some undesignated time, and in a manner unexplained, insulted that sacred body. This was rather a surprising statement, as the ex-President was never specially known for his zeal either for or against any religious organization. He was supposed to be one of the most tolerant of men. Strictly speaking, he is, doubtless, a Protestant; but if our distinguished men are generally to be classed in that category, it may, from the Cork point of view, be unfortunate, but we cannot regard it as positively disgraceful. That good Catholic, Marshal MacMahon, probably knew that Gen. Grant was a Protestant when he was at so much pains to show him civilities and honors in Paris. The damning fact may have been suspected in Madrid. Possibly the Pope was aware of it. In Dublin surely it must have been known. But everywhere this enemy of the Church, this pernicious heretic, was treated with consideration, until the Town Council of Cork heard that he was coming. It remained for them to stand faithful among the faithless and vindicate the Mother Church from the insults of this redoubtable foe.

We have been casting about for the ground of the charge that Gen. Grant has specially distinguished himself as an enemy of the Catholic Church, and we are reminded of a famous little speech at Des Moines, in the Fall of 1875. It was at a reunion of the Army of the Tennessee. "Let us labor," he said, "for security of free thought, free speech, free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and equal rights and the privileges of all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion; encourage free schools; resolve that not one dollar appropriated to them shall go to the support of any sectarian school; resolve that neither State nor nation shall support any institution save those where every child may get common school education, unmixed with any atheistic, pagan, or sectarian teaching: leave the matter of religious teaching to the family altar, and keep Church and State forever separate." Now, it strikes us that these are very good things to labor for, and we were not quite prepared to learn that to advocate freedom of thought, freedom of speech, freedom of schools, and freedom of religion, was to insult the Church of Rome and incur the anathemas of the congregation of little popes at Cork. But so it seems, and the malediction has been pronounced. Against such a performance there can be no protest. It is not to be regarded as an affront to Gen. Grant, or a slight to a distinguished citizen of the United States, worthy of resentment. It would be undignified to treat it as such. It is merely an exhibition of the Town Council of Cork, and if that body chooses to present itself before the world in such an unseemly attitude, expostulation should be made, if at all, in its own behalf or that of the city that is put to shame thereby.

TELEGRAMS IN THE COURT-ROOM.

A committee who should engage in an endeavor to investigate a basketful of cipher telegrams according to rules of legal evidence would soon find themselves confronted with questions quite as abstruse and difficult, though not so obvious, as the one of translating the cipher. Similarly, whenever business engagements are made by telegraph, and are afterward brought into courts for settlement, there is much embarrassment about proving the facts which the telegrams show. To apply the old-fashioned rules of evidence to telegraphic dispatches is quite impracticable without some modifications, and the courts are not yet through with the task of determining what modifications shall be allowed. A telegram is produced offering a bribe of "best United States documents," or ordering six boxes common and two extra shipped at once, or saying, "sell my maize and buy rye." Assume you have ascertained beyond mistake that "documents" means greenbacks, what goods are meant by "common" and "extra," or that "maize" and "rye" are stock-brokers' private signals for Maine Central and Rock Island shares; there is still much to be done before courts will accept the dispatch as a proper foundation of any decision. The little strip of paper may convince nine out of ten of men who see it, yet fail entirely of satisfying a court. How bring it home to defendant? The handwriting does not aid, since the telegraph, as the old lady lucidly explained, does not forward "the letters themselves, but only the writing in a fluid state." You call upon the company for the original of the dispatch, but perhaps it is lost, or the operator says it is confidential and he will not produce it, or when it is produced, it is not in defendant's handwriting, and no one can tell whether he authorized it to be sent or not. You ask him, and he declines to testify against himself or—lies. If it bears his name, perhaps it was forged; if another one, perhaps that is fictitious. Or, if defendant was the receiver, you trace the message to the house where the boy left it for defendant, but no one can be found to say that it was ever given to the man himself.

Some of these difficulties and embarrassments have been passed upon in the courts. Three or four cases have arisen in which operators or secretaries have refused to produce the original dispatch on the ground that it is confidential business and they are bound to secrecy; but the decisions have been that there is no privilege; the courts have discretionary power to require operators to testify if the ends of justice render it necessary. In an English case and in a Pennsylvania case, the lawyer who objected to the question put to the operator relied upon a statute which forbade in very explicit terms any telegraph officer or operator to disclose the contents of dispatches; but the Judges said that made no difference. The statute was not meant to interfere with examinations in courts of justice, but only to protect persons employing the telegraph from having their communications wantonly or maliciously or corruptly revealed by the employes.

Taking it, then, to be the law that in all proper cases a telegraph operator may be called upon to produce the dispatch as written by the sender, there is yet a perplexing question peculiar to telegraph business: Which is the original—the dispatch which A wrote and handed in at the office at one end, or the one which the operator at the other wrote out and delivered to B? They will often differ by mistake in transmission; but suppose they do not differ, which one is the original which must be obtained and produced? This question is answered in the courts differently in different cases, according to whether the sender or the recipient is the person selecting the telegraph as the means of communication. For one who, to save time, chooses the telegraph instead of writing, ought to be considered as taking the risk of mistakes, rather than the one who, having had no choice in the matter, receives the message.

Also, the decision may depend on whether the recipient is suing the sender to charge him upon the message he sent, or is endeavoring to justify himself by showing that he acted according to the message he received. In a majority of cases, the message as the sender wrote it is the original, and this is the one which must be hunted up and exhibited, to satisfy a court. In special cases, the paper delivered is the original. Where a person telegraphed directions to a Sheriff as to what he should do about a sale of certain property, and sued the Sheriff for not obeying the directions, the court held that the message which was handed to the Sheriff was the legal original, for the sender made the telegraph people his agents and was responsible for any changes they made in his message, just as much as a merchant who should dictate a letter would be responsible for any errors of his clerk in writing it. The Sheriff was only bound by the message as it reached him. If the suit were to recover damages from the company for a mistake in transmission, both transcripts of the message might be needed.

A great variety of questions arise in respect to whether messages were, in fact, sent and delivered as they appear to have been, or must every little fact about the transmission be proved by calling witnesses. And the courts are, upon the whole, coming to the rule that they will act in part on the probability that telegraphic business is conducted with regularity, accuracy, and success, and will call upon whoever disputes the transmission of a message which appears all right, to prove his objection. If it has been proved that a telegraphic message was sent, there is as good reason, so the court held in one case, for presuming that it was received as there would be in the case of a letter sent by mail; if it was not received, let somebody be called to show that. There was a case where a provision-dealer wanted to send a drove of hogs to St. Louis, and he telegraphed to a steam-boat by her name to ask if they could be carried. He got an answer back, "Will take your hogs," signed in the name of the Captain of the boat. But when the time came, the boat would not take the hogs, and he sued for breach of contract. On the trial he had no witness to prove that the dispatch was signed by authority of the master or owners. But the court said it was an answer to a question which was telegraphed to the boat, and, therefore, it was probably sent by authority from the boat. The court would presume that it was authorized; if it was not, the boat-owners might show the negative. And on the trial of Gen. Babcock, the court received telegrams in evidence that were addressed to him, and traced by witnesses as far as to the door-keepers of the White House, where he attended as private secretary of the President, without any proof that they were actually handed to him. That was so probable that it might be taken for granted until some one denied it.

SOME WRONGS OF HOUSEHOLDERS.

Among the many annoyances and the various modes of fleecing to which the New-York householder is subject, there is one of no inconsiderable moment the constant success of which is due partly to the imperfect provisions of our laws, but partly, also, to the householder's own supineness. The trouble to which we refer may be defined in general terms as the utter indifference to obligation of all employes in minor matters. Artisans who are employed in the various kinds of household "jobbing," whether upon the house itself or its furniture, dealers who supply articles for household consumption, and household servants, do, as a general rule, pretty much as they like; and what they generally like is to do their work just well enough to pass a cursory and superficial examination and justify, in seeming, the presentation of a bill and the demand of payment. In many cases a few weeks, or in some a few days, show that there is serious defect in the work done or the article furnished, not unfrequently actual injury to the article repaired or to the house; but the bill is paid, the artisan has "got his money," which was all that he cared about, and he is quite indifferent to the dissatisfaction of his employer. It might be reasonably supposed that he would fear to lose custom by this shiftless and incompetent way of doing his work; but, in the first place, he knows that there are employers in plenty, and that workmen better and more conscientious than he is are very rare; and, in the next place, being shiftless about his work, he is shiftless about himself, and trusts to getting along "somehow;" getting by that somehow what he needs for this week, and letting next week take care of itself. The number of artisans who take pride in turning out thoroughly good work and in working conscientiously seems to be steadily diminishing in proportion to the number engaged in the various trades. Of this, one reason is that now comparatively few artisans are thoroughly taught. Of the mass of them in New-York, a very considerable proportion—indeed, the majority of the younger men among them—have never really learned their trades. They have gone into the trade that they have adopted at hap-hazard, and have picked up what they know about it, again, in that dreadful somehow or other. The influences now felt in the various trades all tend to produce this state of things. Apprenticeship is discouraged; and where there is apprenticeship, the time is rarely served out, and the trade is not really learned under the master-workman's eye. A thriving German artisan, well known in New-York as a skilled workman, recently sent his son, a lad of 18 or 19, to Germany to learn his trade, giving as his reason that the influences in New-York were all against the acquisition of habits of thorough workmanship, and that the social habits of young men in his condition of life were such that he wished to remove his son beyond their contamination.

But to leave general considerations and to come to particulars, we will illustrate the trouble to which we refer by examples of actual occurrence which have recently come within our knowledge. A gentleman wished the shelving of his library altered and repaired, and placed the work in the hands of a person recommended to him, who came with an assistant to perform it. The whole job proved to be clumsily and unintelligently done—in fact, a "botch"; the shelves were left in such a condition that the bindings of the books were scraped and torn as they were taken out and put back, and one of the shelves actually split away from the nailing and fell out of its groove, and the books on it, of course, all tumbled into confusion. A lady wishing to have a set of furniture re-upholstered and repaired, employed a neighboring upholsterer and gave him special instructions as to what he was to do and what he was not to do. The furniture was returned apparently in good condition and the bill was paid; and it was not until after some time had passed that she found that the workman had done exactly what he had been told not to do, and had done it in such a bungling manner that her furniture was damaged in four times the amount of the upholsterer's bill.

These are characteristic examples of a sort of annoyance and injury with which our house-holding readers must be familiar, and we have set them forth with some particularity that they may call to mind parallel instances, and serve as the text for cautionary advice. For against such wrongs there is in New-York, and generally in this country, practically no remedy when a bill has been paid. An artisan can, if he choses to, insist upon the immediate payment of his bill, and if his demand is not complied with, bring suit in a District Court and have judgment in a few days: but once paid, if his work proves worthless, or even injurious, his employer has practically no redress. As well sue the north-west wind in hope of getting damages. The only security is in a thorough examination of work done, and a rigid refusal of payment if it is not done as it should be. This, however, is rare among our easy-going people; and, moreover, how many men and women are there who know whether work is well or ill done, except by trial, when it is too late?

Housekeepers, particularly those who live out of the city, often suffer sorely from another wrong of a somewhat similar sort. A lady needs a servant, and, after much trouble, she engages one. The servant does not come at the appointed time—does not come at all—and the lady has not only had her trouble for nothing, but she has lost the opportunity of obtaining from among those who offered others who would have come and with whom she might have been satisfied. Or a lady will come into town from a distant suburb and spend a day or two of time and from ten to thirty dollars in traveling expenses and hotel bills, engage her servant, and be left in the lurch—her time, her trouble, and her money gone for nothing. No reason is given, no excuse made; and, indeed, there is none, but that the woman either took a freak not to go, or, after making an engagement to go to one place, had another offer which she liked better. Now, this is a condition of things that shows our social organization very incomplete; our civilization very defective. These things could not be in England, in Germany, and above all in France. There they have prompt and efficient remedy against artisans who do their work neglectfully, or even incompetently, (for if a man professes a trade, he is held bound to know it, his inability is no excuse,) and against those who make agreements to perform service and fail to keep their engagements. No man or woman would dare to behave in London, in Berlin, or in Paris, as thousands are constantly behaving in such matters in New-York. Until, either by law, or rigid social discipline, we make it impossible, or at least unprofitable, for them to do so here, we are behindhand in one department of social science, and we must suffer the consequences of our supineness and our neglect.

In accounting for the sudden appearance and rapid spread of Nihilism in Russia, there is one circumstance which, though it goes far to explain the phenomenon, is generally overlooked, viz.: the influence of Tolstoi's reforms in the system of higher education. His idea was, in the course of a few years to raise the Russian people to the same level of education, learning, literary sense, and artistic taste as that occupied by the German people; and the method by which he proposed to realize this idea was to establish in Russia the same standard of university education as that prevailing in Germany. The same quantity of instruction should be given in the Russian gymnasiums and colleges, and the same guarantees of proper preparation should be demanded for admission to the Russian universities. The whole miracle would cost only a stroke of the pen. In 1865 the reform began working admirably. In 1870 the result began to show; three-fourths of the young men who wanted to enter the universities were rejected. In 1873 came the climax: nine-tenths were rejected. Without any great power of prevision, this result could have been foretold, for Russia has educated and learned men enough to form the necessary commission of examination, but it has by no means educated and learned men enough to form the necessary staff of teachers. But what became of all those young men who were rejected? They became Nihilists. The acts of the monster process last year against the Nihilists show that nearly all the leaders and most zealous members of the party were young men between 16 and 25 years, who, without any fault of their own, had been excluded from a regular university career by Tolstoi's reform. Nor is it in any way unnatural that the affair should take this course. Most of these young men were sons of poor officials in far-off towns and villages. With great sacrifices the parents had succeeded in placing their sons on the royal road to greatness and happiness, and what keen ambitions must have been kindled in the hearts of the sons when they were transplanted from the home in the poor, miserable village to the school in the large and splendid city. Now that all these bright ambitions were crushed with one blow, and the heavy sacrifices had brought in nothing but dire disappointment, what should the young man do? Return to the village—the village, where the cattle are fed during the latter part of the Winter with the thatch over the shed in which they are herded; where a sheet with some miserable colored prints is handed from man to man, and admired as one of the wonders of the world; where the yells of the drunken peasants are the only notes of gladness ever sounded? no; return to the village he could not. But stay in the city? For any industrial or commercial pursuit he was nearly completely unsuited. The only road open to him was that of the magazine, the newspaper, the cheap literature, the political or religious agitation, &c., and on this road he enters with no knowledge but a few misty and incorrect pictures of heroism and misery, with no experience but that of a crushing disappointment, with no sentiment swelling his heart but that of revenge.

It has often been remarked that scarcely one of the great lights of Queen Anne's reign had a lineal male representative living in that of Victoria. Marlborough's only boy died a youth at Cambridge. Swift never married. Addison had one daughter, of disordered intellect. Steele, Prior, Bolingbroke, Sir Cloudesley Shovel are all without any male lineal representative to-day. There is still a Viscount Bolingbroke, but he is only collateral to the stock of the great Henry St. John, and there are still Harleys—in fact, the marriage of the head of the house lately has suggested these remarks—but they are not descendants of Anne's celebrated Secretary, although they hold to the property of Brampton Brian, in Herefordshire, where the family has been seated for centuries. Up to the time of Charles II., the Harleys had been simply great Herefordshire Squires; but the Merrie Monarch, in recognition of loyal services during "the troubles," offered the then Squire a Viscounty, which he declined, "lest his zeal and services for the restoration of the ancient Government should be reproached as proceeding from ambition and not conscience." And when Mr. Harley was made a Knight of the Bath, even this dignity was conferred without his knowledge. The Minister was this worthy Squire's son. He in turn had one son, who formed the finest library of his time, the Harleian collection, now in the British Museum. He married the greatest heiress of the day, the only child of the Duke of Newcastle. Lord and Lady Oxford had an only child, a greater heiress even than her mother, who carried her mother's wealth to the grandson of Bentinck, the Dutch favorite of William III., but the Harley estates went in the male line to her father's family. Thus the direct lineal representative of Queen Anne's Minister is the Duke of Portland, who, in this way, became possessed of the vast estate surrounding the Langham Hotel, in London. The surrounding streets all reflect in their names the family history—Wigmore, from Wigmore Castle, an appanage of the Harleys, in Herefordshire; Wimpole, from Lord Oxford's, (now Lord Hardwick's,) estate in Cambridgeshire. Harley-street and Queen Anne-street tell their own story. Wellbeck-street is from Wellbeck Abbey, which also the Harley heiress carried to the Bentincks. Lord Oxford's daughter, afterward Duchess of Portland, was worthy of the intellect and accomplishments of her ancestry, and was conspicuous for talent and attainments at a period when English high life was intellectually at a very low ebb. His Grace was one of the first English collectors of objets d'art.

RECORD OF AMUSEMENTS.

MUSICAL.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The programme of the concert last night by this time-honored society was as follows:

Symphony in E flat.....Schumann
Aria, from Fidelio.....Beethoven
Mrs. Anna Granger Dow.
Concerto in E flat, No. 1, for piano.....Liszt
Mr. Franz Kummel.
a. Aria, from "Cosi fan tutti".....Mozart
b. Spring Song.....Mendelssohn
Mrs. Anna Granger Dow.
Overture, "Prometheus".....Bargiel

A more varied and interesting programme it would be difficult to arrange, containing as it did Schumann's noblest symphony and the character istic and powerful concerto of Liszt. In these two grand works the interest in the concert was centred, and they were of themselves a sufficient programme for an evening of the highest musical character. The orchestra of the Philharmonic Society is without doubt complete, and is capable of any work that may be assigned to it. Under adequate leadership, there is no orchestra in the world which can be brought to interpret the compositions of the great masters with better finish and style, and in the true spirit of the musician. Mr. Neuendorff's conducting seems to lack the delicacy which is requisite at times. He is earnest and capable, and if the problem before him was to gather together hastily a band of players, and drill them into something like perfection, he would be successful in the undertaking. But the Philharmonic Society does not need this form of talent. Mr. Nuendorff's rough vigor interferes with their possible achievements, and in the symphony last night it was noticeable that the society did not do the work or themselves the justice which was to be expected. Schumann's symphony in E flat, No. 3, is by many judges considered the grandest work of that master. It was composed in 1850, just after the author had received his appointment at Düsseldorf, when he was in the best of spirits and physical health, and shows none of the morbid characteristics which had been apparent in his writings just previous to this era in his life. It has been known in the record of his works as the "Rheinish Symphony." The first movement is a reminder of the "Eroica" in its key, time, character, and treatment of the subject, without being an imitation in any respect, and is in the loftiest vein of the composer. The second movement tends toward the old minuet form, being constructed on one theme throughout, without the change supplied by a trio. The third movement is peculiarly characteristic, as delicate, tender, and full of poetry as some of the author's minor piano compositions. The fourth movement is said to have been suggested by the ceremony of the consecration of the Archbishop of Cologne, and is of a serious and religious character. The last movement is somewhat of a disappointment, as if the composer had wearied of the work and could not supply the climax to be expected. But the work is undeniably a monument of the genius of Schumann. The society last night gave a performance of it which, if not always as refined and elegant as it might have been, was highly enjoyable, the first movement being exceptionally good. Mr. Franz Kummel's performance of the concerto was in every sense, however, the gem of the concert. Too much praise cannot be awarded this gentleman for his rendering of this exacting composition. His technique was wonderful, and he exhibited a spirit and vigor the like of which has not been shown since Rubinstein was in New-York. In many respects he reminds one of that artist. The only criticism on his playing is that he is perhaps somewhat excessive. He does not reserve himself from the moment he sits down to the piano, but his power seems to be equal to any demands, and he compels the attention and enthusiasm of a critical and musically educated audience. His success last evening, as well as at the rehearsal of Friday afternoon, was pronounced and unmistakable. In response to an encore, he played with much grace and elegance Chopin's Nocturne in D flat, op 27, No. 2, which he gave with sentiment and feeling, though he was perfectly manly and did not degenerate into sentimentality. Mrs. Anna Granger Dow's contributions to the programme do not call for commendation. She, indeed, seemed out of place in the concert, being a singer of mediocre talent. Her voice is not of particularly pleasing quality and her method does not indicate that she can claim rank as an artist. Last night she substituted Schubert's song "Dein ist mein Herz" for the Mendelssohn "Spring Song," which latter she sang not very acceptably at the rehearsal on Friday. There was a good audience in attendance, containing many of the best-known musicians and amateurs of the City.

THE STRAKOSCH OPERA SEASON.

It may be fairly assumed that the coming week of opera at Booth's will be of unusual interest. It will, no doubt, be chiefly valuable for the fact that the name of the distinguished prima donna, Miss Kellogg, is no longer absent from the announcements, and fortunately, also, that no indisposition interferes with the reliable and most desirable services of our great contralto, Miss Annie Louise Cary. For to-morrow night the opera is "Il Trovatore," and it is a matter of interest to the musical public to know that Miss Kellogg and Miss Cary are cast for the parts of Leonora and Azusena. The Manrico is Signor Rosnati, who makes his first appearance in the rôle, and the part of the Count di Luna is intrusted to Signor Fantaleoni, a baritone of recognized excellent powers and cultured methods. Tuesday evening will be given to "La Traviata," and the performance of that well-known work will be principally remarkable for the introduction of Miss Giulia Mario as Violetta. "Les Huguenots" is set down for Wednesday evening. Thursday night will be given to a performance of "Rigoletto." "Carmen" is the opera for Friday, and a matinée, the details of which are not yet given to the public, will close what should prove a very successful week.

MR. MAPLESON'S BOSTON SEASON.

Mr. Mapleson's artists in Boston have been successful beyond measure, and if their worth were already not well understood, it might be said even beyond anticipation. Their path has not, however, been one of roses. The inclement New-England climate, and the consequent indisposition of some of the artists, have borne rather heavily against them, but the great resources of the company have enabled them to triumph over all difficulties. Notice has been already taken of the favor with which "I Puritani" was received on Monday last, and of the successful repetition of "Carmen" on Tuesday. "Rigoletto," which was given on Wednesday to an overflowing house, has been pronounced by the Boston critics a magnificent success. Mme. Gerster's Gilda received the most ample praise, and some of the Boston journals uphold her against the greatest of the dramatic soprani. Signor Galassi's Rigoletto is also the subject of the warmest laudation. It was in the representation of "Faust," on Thursday, that the greatest difficulties were encountered, but the result was triumphant. Miss Minnie Hauk filled the rôle of the heroine, and due deference having been paid to the memories of Lucca and Nilsson, it was admitted on all hands that her Marguerite was a most admirable performance, and that the fire and intensity of Signor Campanini's methods were most superbly displayed, while his singing of "Salve, dimora" is especially mentioned for its exquisite beauty and tenderness of expression. Signor Foli, who was to have filled the rôle of Mephistopheles, was ill, but in his stead Signor Del Puente supplied an excellent representation of the part. Signor Galassi was also ill, but it appears that Mr. W. T. Carleton took the rôle of Valentine at a very short notice, and gave general satisfaction. The appearance of Mme. Marie Rôze in "Il Flauto Magico," on Friday, was another success, and the season was brought to a most satisfactory termination yesterday by a superb matinée performance of "Lucia di Lammermoor." The anxiety to listen to Mme. Gerster at this last performance was something unprecedented in the annals of operatic representations, and the receipts were over $6,000, notwithstanding the fact that hundreds were turned away.

HARTFORD, Conn., Jan. 12.—Col. Mapleson's opera company, consisting of nearly 300 persons, left Boston to-night at 8 o'clock, en route for Chicago, under the supervision of Samuel Carpenter, of the Pennsylvania Railroad. The train consists of eight special cars, and will be transferred from Harlem to Jersey City by the steamer Maryland. The train is expected to reach Chicago at 9 o'clock Monday morning.

MUSICAL NOTES.

Mr. Jerome Hopkins comes forward on Tuesday evening at Steinway Hall with an Orchestral festival concert, in aid of the Orpheon fund. With his customary indefatigability, he has secured the assistance of a large corps of artists.

A symphony concert is announced by Mr. O. B. Bloss to take place at Chickering Hall on the evening of Jan. 30. Mr. Bloss is self-reliant, and so his programme will consist entirely of his original works. It will be under distinguished patronage.

The latest concert of the Staten Island Philharmonic Society, (the second of the season,) has been uncommonly successful. It had the advantage of the artistic services of M. Reményi, the great Hungarian violinist, and Mr. Richard Hoffman's pianoforte performance was especially commended for its delicacy and refinement.

The next entertainments in the Chickering Hall series of symphony concerts are announced for the afternoon of Jan. 23 and the evening of Jan. 25. The first will be a public rehearsal and the second a concert proper. Mrs. J. K. Barton, soprano, and Mr. Richard Hoffman, pianist, are the soloists, and there is an excellent orchestra under the direction of Mr. Gotthold Carlberg.

The concert this evening at Booth's Theatre, of which Mr. Max Strakosch has undertaken the management, and by which Miss Marie Tuck is to benefit, should be of unusual interest. Several of the artists of Mr. Strakosch's opera company will co-operate, and M. Edouard Reményi will furnish some of his choicest selections. The general programme has a decidedly popular complexion.

DRAMATIC.

A TYPICAL PLAY.

There is a play now being performed at Niblo's which, although it has been a long time before the public, is still such an exception to the run of current dramas that a few observations upon it at this moment will not be found out of place. We refer to "Davy Crockett," not inaptly styled an "idyl of the backwoods," for the use of the literary term "idyl" with reference to the late Mr. Murdock's play is in this case, strange to say, consistent. It is the fashion now to call every theatrical entertainment suggestive of cows, vagabonds, and ingenuous countrymen idyllic, much in the same way as the French poets of the eighteenth century labeled their poems "pastorals." Such characters as Uncle Dan'l and Joshua Whitcomb are not outgrowths of poetry, it would be well to have understood, but wholly of the sensational drama. In "Davy Crockett" we are presented with a type of humanity which frequently reappears in American history during Colonial and Revolutionary periods, and which may not be altogether out of date in our own time. He is a child of the backwoods, born and bred amid the primeval forest, inspired by a life full of a high and passionate significance, learning from the brooks and the birds and the wandering breezes their simple but wonderful language. The speech of men falls awkwardly from his lips, and the dreams and thoughts that belong naturally to his imaginative mind are ill-expressed in his ungrammatical phrases; nevertheless, this man, with the soul of an Achilles and the spirit of a child, has his moment of di ine utterance, when his feelings shape themselves into eloquence. He draws his metaphors from the trickling streams and the companionable trees, and, with a burst of poetry which seems to most persons foreign to such a nature, he pictures the eyes of the woman he worships as entering within the heaven of his life by the same law whish set the polar star in its eternal restingplace. It is because Davy is such a perfectly consistent and natural character, and withal such a simple one, that we regard it as a type worthy of attention and study. It is a character in which truth predominates, and which appeals to the sympathies, not by force of sentimentality and exaggerated emotion, but through that tender humanity which is the loftiest and sweetest quality of fine manhood. We have followed this character with a deep and healthful interest, probably because it contrasts in so striking a way with the conventional man whose sufferings form the staple of contemporary playwrights. This remark is not meant to convey an impression disadvantageous to the dramatic methods now popular, for those methods have many high and notable qualities, and the works that grow out of them are often vital and original; but their tendency to uncommon emotion, to the expression of feelings that tax the heart and the imagination to their utmost, in short, to a prevailing sentimentality, is unquestionable. So true is this that genuine comedy is no longer possible in our days, since the most ludicrous situations are naturally wrought up to climaxes. The Tartuffes of old comedy are now tragical hypocrites, and our Lady Teazles are women over whom lowers a dark and threatening destiny. It is not without a certain refreshment, therefore, that we turn to a play like "Davy Crockett," which, although it suggests but the rudiments of theatrical construction, and which as a whole is merely a succession of five unpretentious scenes, is throughout wholly charming and interesting. Let it be further remarked that Davy is not purely an ideal personage: he is neither a Yuba Bill nor an Oakhurst, and the objections that are urged against the characters made popular by Bret Harte do not in any way apply to him. In everything save externals, he is a wholly civilized being. Elevated under the fostering love of a pure and honorable mother, taught from his infancy to regard faith and duty above life, it is not singular that his career, endowed as he also is, with the lofty spirit of that Nature with which he holds daily communion as with an invisible angel, becomes in a large sense heroic. Yet he is always a man, nothing more, as he himself touchingly says in one of his impassioned confessions to Miss Vaughan. Fundamentally, his story is a purely conventional one, if the imperishable part of human nature can really be called conventional. Davy and Miss Vaughan are new embodiments of the ingenuous lovers of epic poetry, chivalry, and romance. But they belong essentially to our American world; their surroundings are different from those of traditional literature; they are types, and therefore original, in their own manner. It seems to us clear enough that future dramatists will pay considerable attention to that portion of our past life and history which produced such men as Davy Crockett and Daniel Boone, and there is certainly a wide field open to those who are willing to investigate it in the spirit that actuated poor Murdock. It is true, as those who have gone through the confused and scattered records of the American stage know, that many plays upon romantic subjects of native origin have been written and wisely condemned. But all these were poor and valueless works. The true dramatist who is endowed with a strong heart and a poetic imagination will be able to accomplish much better things than "Davy Crocket" in the same line pursued by Murdock. Very little can be expected, certainly, from those men who obstinately believe that a mechanical knowledge of plays and the stage is the great stock in trade of the playwright. We have plenty of this sort among us; but all their efforts are sadly inadequate. The success of "Davy Crockett," moreover, teaches us that a pure and elevated purpose in the drama is akin to all human sympathies.

It may be said, in conclusion, that the play is intelligently performed at Niblo's, Mr. Frank Mayo assuming, as heretofore, the chief rôle. Mr. Mayo's acting is graceful and winning; but it is lacking in fervor, a fault which is probably due to his frequent repetition of the part. As we have previously expressed a decided opinion of "one-part" actors, nothing need be added to this statement.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Miss Adelaide Cherie is about to join Messrs. Ward and Barrymore's "Diplomacy" company.

Tom Thumb and his coadjutors will make their final appearances this week at Masonic Hall.

A programme comprising several novelties will be interpreted at the Theatre Comique this week.

According to a foreign authority, Mr. Barry Sullivan will play an engagement in this country next season.

Miss Anna Dickinson will deliver a lecture on "Platform and Stage," at Chickering Hall next Friday evening.

The most recent features of the entertainment given by the San Francisco Minstrels will be retained for the present, and several novelties will also be made known.

At the Globe Theatre, the Foy sisters, who are exceedingly amusing in their way, may be seen nightly in "Mischief." The supporting cast includes Mr. Harry Allen and Mr. J. A. Alliger.

Arrangements are now in progress for the appearance of the Criterion Comedy Company at Fifth-Avenue Hall, when Mr. Stanley McKenna's comedy, "Our Colonel," taken from the German,) will be brought out. The name of the theatre will be changed to that of the Criterion.

The performances at the Aquarium are now varied enough to suit all tastes. What with trained horses, ingenious jesters, transformation scenes, and the spectacle of "Cinderella," the entertainments are wholly enjoyable.

There will be no performance at the Standard Theatre for a few nights to come. The famous musical travesty "H. M. S. Pinafore" is now in active preparation, and will be produced at this house on Wednesday evening.

It is expected that one of the great attractions for next season will be "Le Chevalier de Lamolière," a historical drama in five acts, by Adolphe D'Ennery, author of "Don Cæsar de Bazan," and principal author of "The Two Orphans."

To-morrow evening Robertson's interesting comedy, "Ours," will be revived at Wallack's, with Mr. Wallack, Mr. Coghlan, and Mr. Beckett in the cast. It is now four years since this popular military drama was performed in this City.

The last opportunities to see the Colville company at the Park Theatre will be afforded this week. "Robinson Crusoe" is still the attraction. On the 20th will be produced "The Cricket on the Hearth," with Mr. John E. Owens as Caleb Plummer.

The acting in "The Banker's Daughter," still running successfully at the Union-Square Theatre, has greatly improved of late. Nothing finer than the work done by Miss Jewett and, Mr. Thorne, in the strong scene of the fourth act, has yet been seen at this theatre. The entire cast is, indeed, an unusually well-balanced one.

At the Broadway Theatre to-morrow night Emile Augier's celebrated play, "Les Fourchambault," adapted by M. D. Dalziel, will be made known for the first time in this City, with a cast including William Horace Lingard. Miss Alice Dunning, Miss Dickie Lingard, and Mr. Joseph Wheelock. The engagement of the Lingards is for two weeks only.

Mr. W. C. Coup and a gentleman not named, are negotiating with the proprietor of a large lot on the corner of Thirty-ninth-street and Broadway, whereon they intend to erect a colossal building, one probably partaking of the character of Gilmore's Garden and the Aquarium. As yet, however, the purposes for which this building is designed are a secret. The locality, for a place of amusement, seems to be an excellent one.

MME. ANDERSON'S LONG WALK.

WATCHED WITH THE GREATEST ANXIETY—THE STURDY ENGLISHWOMAN STILL ON THE TRACK.

As Mme. Anderson's walk draws near its close she is watched with the greatest anxiety by her immediate friends, and attendants and with ever-increasing interest by the Brooklyn public. It is curious to note at what unseasonable hours spectators are to be found in Mozart Garden, watching the movements of the sturdy Englishwoman, or waiting for her appearance during her short rests. The earliest morning risers who drop in long before sunrise to see if she really walks at that uncomfortable time find lingerers who have made a night of it, and who drowsily sit in the chairs that they had intended to vacate hours before, impelled to stay by the undefinable fascination of waiting "to see her do just one quarter more." All through the early morning hours men of business hurrying over to New-York find time to look in for a few minutes to see how she is "getting on," and by noon the hall is crowded, and will be until midnight. During the afternoon the spectators are mostly women and children, and in the evening are to be seen numbers of sporting men. After midnight and during the small hours of the morning gay parties, on their way home from balls and parties, are apt to finish the night's fun with a visit to the garden, and it is then that the hall rings with the merriest laughter, and is perhaps a more interesting place than at any other time during the 24 hours. It is somewhat curious, too, to note the eagerness with which many women avail themselves of the privilege of making rounds with the Madame, apparently forgetful or careless of the fact that they thus make themselves objects of curious observation and comment to the crowds of spectators, who regard them as part of the show that they have paid their money to witness. Yesterday afternoon two little girls, aged 8 and 9 years, walked around for half a dozen laps with Mme. Anderson, to the great delight of the spectators and the evident gratification of the pedestrian herself. She sent out and caused a pretty doll to be bought for each of them, to be kept as mementoes of their experience.

Last evening, about 9 o'clock, the Madame was seized with a terrible fit of drowsiness, from which it was for a long time impossible to arouse her. For a number of successive quarters, when called to the track, she appeared with closed eyes, and made her rounds slowly and with uncertain steps. During this time either her husband or trainer accompanied her as she walked, watching her with the closest attention, and either holding her by the hand or having an arm extended behind her back to guide and steady her. It was painful to watch her under such circumstances, and many expressions of sympathy were heard among the spectators. Her doctor watched her during this fit with the greatest anxiety, and said that at no time during her prolonged walk had he seen her appear so thoroughly exhausted. He gave her lavender water and valerian, and finally, at her own request, a glass of brandy. This revived her wonderfully, and when she started on the next quarter-mile she appeared as fresh as at any time during the walk, and made the distance in 3:47½, wonderfully quick time, considering her condition. The distance from the track to the bed on which she rests when not walking is 28 feet, and it has been calculated that when she shall have completed her task of making 2,700 quarter-miles she will, in addition, have walked 144 miles in traversing this distance as many thousand times as she necessarily must. Mme. Anderson's face looks worn and haggard, and gives evidence of the terrible strain that her constitution is now undergoing. She has not once left the hall in which she walks since she begun, on the 16th of December; and in itself this confinement is very wearing upon one as fond as she of fresh air and out-of-do r exercise. Although smoking is strictly prohibited within the inclosure where the walk is in progress, the air becomes very foul and oppressive from the constant presence of crowds of human beings, and at times the plucky woman is seriously affected by it.

As is her custom, she sang a song yesterday afternoon, and afterward one of the little girls who had walked with her appeared on the stage and also sang. During the daytime the monotony of the walk is relieved by the music of a piano that is not bad; but in the evening the audience is obliged to submit to the infliction of listening to one of the very worst bands that was ever allowed to work its will upon an innocent and unoffending public. The anathemas hurled at these would-be musicians by the long-suffering audiences are frequent and forcible, but the torture is continued, and probably will be until the end of Mme. Anderson's walk, though it is sufficient to cause many of her patrons to remain away from the garden at times when they would otherwise gladly be there. At 12 o'clock last night the Madame had completed her two thousand five hundred and twelfth quarter of a mile.

A QUESTION OF JURISDICTION DECIDED.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 11.—The question whether a foreign corporation which has no office in this city, and does not transact business here, can be required to answer in a suit brought against it in this jurisdiction, was decided affirmatively by President-Judge Thayer, in the Common Pleas Court, today, in the case of Eby against the Northern Pacific Railroad. The corporation defendant he says, is a corporation which has a lawful existence in Pennsylvania. It is liable to be sued in every part of the sovereignty from which its corporate charter is derived, if service can be made upon the proper officer. The service was accordingly made in this city upon the President of the corporation, who is the proper officer to be served.

RUMORED CHANGES AT NEW-ORLEANS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—It is stated here to-night, upon the authority of persons who are believed to be well informed, that a change will soon be made in the Collectorship of the Port of New-Orleans. Collector Smith, the present incumbent, is to be removed, and will be succeeded, it is said, by ex-Gov. Warmoth. Upon the same authority it is further stated that the removal of United States Marshal Wharton has also been decided upon, but ex-Marshal Pitkin will not, it is thought, succeed him.

THE BURIAL OF HUNTER'S BODY.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 11.—There was a rumor to-night that Hunter had been buried from his late residence, but such is not the case. There were many curious people about the vicinity of the house to-day, and the services of a body of Police were required to keep the street clear. The arrangements for the burial are completed, but they are kept exceedingly quiet. Only the family will follow the body to the grave, and the funeral is not likely to take place before Monday.

FUNDING MEMPHIS CITY BONDS.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Jan. 11.—During the present week $200,000 in city bonds have been funded, under the compromise act of the city, at 50 cents on the dollar.

MAKING GOOD HIS THEFT.

MONTREAL, Jan. 11.—Hull, the defaulting New-York clerk, having paid over to the order of his employers the money he had, has been dismissed, no charge being preferred against him.

ALBANY FACTS AND RUMORS

THE CALL FOR THE SENATORIAL CAUCUS.

OFFICIAL NOTICE BY THE COMMITTEE OF THE SENATE AND ASSEMBLY—GOSSIP ABOUT THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEES—BILLS SIGNED BY GOV. ROBINSON.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—The caucus committees of the Assembly and Senate have decided upon a day for holding the caucus for nominating a United States Senator, and will convene the two houses earlier than announced a few days ago. The official call for the caucus was issued to-day, and is as follows:

"A caucus of the Republican members of the Legislature will be held on Monday evening, Jan. 20, 1879, at 8 o'clock, in the Assembly Chamber, for the purpose of nominating a candidate for the office of United States Senator." It is signed by Senators William B. Rockwell, Webster Wagner, and Hamilton Harris, committee of the Senate, and by James W. Husted, George B. Sloan, I. I. Hayes, A. B. Hepburn, W. W. Braman, the caucus committee of the Assembly. The election will probably be held on the Tuesday or Thursday following.

Speaker Alvord has not as yet authorized any announcements about the make-up of his committees. The gossip about them still continues, but nothing appears to be unanimously believed except the report that Mr. Sloan will have the Ways and Means, which it is understood Mr. Husted has declined to receive. It is also believed that Mr. Husted has refused the Insurance Committee, and that Mr. Knowles, of Albany, has been urged for that place. Notwithstanding the reports circulated here a day or two ago, to the effect that Gen. George H. Sharpe was to be Chairman of the Committee on Cities, the friends of that gentleman now admit that he will not obtain it, but that it will be given to Dr. I. I. Hayes. Mr. Strahan's place on the Judiciary seems to be unshaken. Mr. Hepburn will probably be appointed to that committee, and Mr. Terry is also spoken of as likely to be one of the Republicans to serve. Gen. Sharpe's name has been mentioned for the Railroads Committee, but to-night the rumor is that Mr. Braman, of Albany, will receive it. This is doubtful, as it is not considered probable that the heads of two important committees will be selected from this city when there is so much good material in the Assembly to select from without showing such partiality to Albany. There seems to be some uncertainty as to which of the Kings County members will receive the Commerce and Navigation Committee, the choice lying between Steegman and Trowbridge. A delegation of Buffalo members united upon Speaker Alvord on Friday, and it is understood that they were assured that a Buffalo Assemblyman would be given the Chairmanship of the Canal Committee. This report strengthens the belief that Mr. Hurd, who has heretofore been alluded to as the probable Chairman, will be selected for the first place on the committee. Among the surprising reports is one that Mr. Husted, perhaps with the purpose of making Speaker Alvord's way easier to the settlement of the committees in a satisfactory manner, has absolutely refused to take anything higher or more important than the Committee on Rules.

Gov. Robinson has signed the following bills, passed last Thursday: Extending the time for collecting taxes in Saratoga Springs, and extending the time for collecting taxes in the Town of New-Berlin, Chenango County. The first bills passed by the Assembly of 1879.

GENERAL NOTES.

Street thieves in Montreal snatch fur caps from the heads of ladies.

The library of Harvard College now contains 236,890 volumes and 177,325 pamphlets.

Lee Ling, a Chinaman, has taken out a license in Boston to marry a young white woman of that city.

The Syracuse friends of Mr. Alvord were so delighted by his election as Speaker, that they fired a hundred guns.

St. Louis is vaccinating the tramps who seek lodgings in its station-houses. The choice is given, vaccination or no lodging.

Five butchers' drivers have been arrested and fined in San Francisco for carrying meat on their delivery wagons exposed to public view and dust.

A Mrs. Cameron and her six children were suffocated by the fumes of burning coke, in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, on Christmas night.

The Toronto Globe protests against the proposal to exclude Chinamen from British Columbia. It says they are a quiet, industrious, and handy people.

The late Hon. Robert W. Mackey, of Pennsylvania, left an estate of $150,000 or $200,000, no debts, and no will. His brother and three sisters are his heirs.

An Illinois man, writing to the Clerk of the Supreme Court of the State for a license to practice law, said: "If you have two sizes, send me the largest one."

It is expected that all the Greenback men elected to the next Congress will be present at the conference in Washington on the 22d of February and following days.

Gov. McCreary and others of Kentucky, have formed a State Historical Society, and have elected George W. Ranck, of Lexington, Curator and Corresponding Secretary.

Col. W. S. Clark has resigned the Presidency of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, at Amherst, and the institution will try to get along without a President for a while.

Hon. Erastus Wells and Mrs. Bell, widow of the late Daniel Bell, were married very quietly in St. Louis on Tuesday evening, Rev. E. F. Berkley, of St. Peter's, performing the ceremony.

Misses Ida D. and Ada D. Colby, twin sisters, were married in New-Hampshire on Christmas Eve, and it is asserted that they looked so exactly alike that nobody but the grooms could tell them apart.

A fastidious Connecticut woman, who went to a New-Haven lawyer to take steps to procure a divorce, admitted that her husband treated her well enough, but complained that he "had no style about him."

About 15 Vermont Greenbackers met in Montpelier, one day last week, to take measures to start a Greenback newspaper; but, as they found they hadn't greenbacks enough to do it, the project fell through.

A Middletown man advertises that he has lost a terrier dog which he values highly "because it once saved his life when he was attacked by a mad bull." And he offers a reward of $2 for the return of that prized dog.

A Pittsburg critic, speaking of an actress, says: "When a little sentiment becomes necessary she slips into the vein much as she would put on her overshoes, and when she gets over the place kicks it off unceremoniously."

Gen. R. L. T. Beale has announced that he is in the field as a candidate for Congress in the First District of Virginia for the remainder of the term of the late Beverly B. Douglas. Gen. Beale has already been elected for the next term.

In a recent letter, Gen. Basil W. Duke, of Kentucky, says that he always forbade the use of drink by the troops he commanded, especially when on active service, and as far as practicable saw personally to the enforcement of such orders.

San Francisco papers say that owing to the depreciation of real estate during the delay caused by the refusal of the Academy of Sciences to consent to a compromise, the Trustees of the James Lick deed find themselves unable to carry out to the full his intentions.

A South Carolina paper is generous enough to say that recently the Court-house at Yorkville, that State, was saved from burning by the brave conduct of Isaac Wright, a colored fireman, who climbed a ladder which did not reach the roof, clambered up on the eaves, and extinguished the flames.

The Prohibitionists in Maine are talking about holding "a world's temperance meeting" at Old Orchard Beach, that State, next Summer, to be presided over by President and Mrs. Hayes. It is said one of them suggested the project to the President, and he replied that he was Mrs. Hayes' lieutenant on all such occasions.

In a pleasant note to a Boston paper Capt. R. B. Forbes recalls an incident connected with the sailing of one of his vessels many years ago. He says: "The men went to the ship as usual in those days pretty full of grog and fight; two of them in particular were very noisy and disposed to be troublesome. I had my horse and chaise on the wharf, and invited them to take a drive. They willingly accepted, and off I went sitting on their knees, drove [illegible] humor and then took them alongside, where they thanked me and tumbled on board, ready to fight for the chap who gave them a ride, in lieu of fighting with him for ordering them on board."

A School Commissioner in Oswego has astonished the community by asking, while addressing the scholars, "Have any of these boys any tobacco about them? I sometimes chew tobacco; can any of you boys give me a chew of tobacco?" and soon afterward turning to the girls and saying: "Do any of these girls take snuff? I sometimes use snuff."

A newspaper correspondent asserts that a silver maple has been growing for nearly nine years from the side of one of the stone towers on the Courthouse in Greensburg, Ind., and that it is now more than 12 feet high, and three inches in diameter. The top is quite bushy, and, in the summer season, the leaves are numerous and luxuriant. The growth of the tree is forcing the stones apart, and ere long the ambitious maple will have to be brought low, or damage to the building will follow.

Speaking of the debt of Tennessee, Hon. Dorsey B. Thomas lately said to a representative of the Nashville Banner, that he believes the question will be thoroughly discussed at the present session of the Legislature, but that no definite action will be taken. He said that the people, in their present impoverished condition, would not be satisfied with any compromise that the bondholders may present, and that he thinks that the Legislature will levy no tax, directly or indirectly, for the purpose of paying the debt.

The Boston Advertiser says: "The color perception of about 8,000 pupils in the grammar schools and those of all the higher schools have been tested by Dr. B. Joy Jeffries lately. Nearly two-thirds of this number were males, of whom about 5 per cent. were found color-blind, and one-third females, of whom less than one-third of 1 per cent. proved to be affected. A part of the number of males were adults, professors, tutors, and students in the local colleges and other educational institutions."

Prof. Alpheus S. Packard, of Bowdoin College, Maine, a most genial and scholarly man, has just completed his eightieth year. He has been connected with the college more than 60 years, is still very active, and not only conducts the chapel exercises and has the care of the library, but also has his daily recitations, and often preaches in Brunswick and in other places on the Sabbath. No man was ever more warmly loved by the students than he, and none ever merited more strongly their confidence and respect.

Somebody has written a somewhat extraordinary obituary notice for a Boston paper, in which it is said: "He had made arrangements to come to this city and witness the drama with a company of friends and neighbors, but a few days since he went to his barn and suddenly died. The letter announcing his death concludes as follows: 'He died as honestly and quietly as he had lived, with no bustle, fuss, or confusion. He had carried a bag of meal into his barn, and, having placed it on the floor, laid quietly down by its side and died.'"

Even the Cincinnati Enquirer scoffs at the 8th of January "Democratic" nonsense. It says: "One-tenth part of the money that was yesterday dumped into bad drink and worse buncombe would build a monument to Andrew Jackson lasting and attesting in a worthy manner the love and regard Ohio Democrats bear his memory; but then the designing, cunning, plotting man, greedy of political fame, would not have been afforded occasion to bellow his ideas and receive the applause of hungry and greedy guests assembled at the festive board."

THE SARATOGA COUNTY DEFALCATION.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—A committee of the Board of Supervisors is examining the accounts of the defaulting Treasurer of Saratoga County. Justice Bockes has ordered the Clerk of Albany County to transmit to Saratoga the returns of the court funds held by the Saratoga County Treasurer and made to the General Term for several years.

Sudden Deaths.

You eat a moderate supper of fried oysters, and some hours after, experience intense pain in the bowels. The doctor treats you with injections of morphia; in twelve or twenty-four hours you are dead. This is the rule. Half a dozen BRANDRETH'S PILLS would have saved this life. Even if the pain was caused by a piece of oyster shell BRANDRETH'S PILLS would have removed the trouble and which saves life, by taking out from the bowels and the blood the cause of sickness of any kind. Saving life as a rule. Let these pills be used in sickness, and Paralysis, Apoplexy, and Rheumatism will be most certainly prevented. The host of bilious affections, colds, coughs, influenza, skin diseases, and diphtheria are certainly cured. This simple medicine is safe as bread, and causes only so much commotion in the system as is needed to make the blood and fluids yield up its poisonous matters.

QUICK CURE OF FLORIDA FEVER AND AGUE.
NORWALK, Putnam County, Fla.

Dr. B. Brandreth:

DEAR SIR: I came to this place from New-York some three weeks since. On my arrival I became very sick; I had either a bad attack of yellow fever or fever and ague, I don't know which. My symptoms were loss of appetite, acute pains in my bones, ringing in my ears, severe headache and backache, and entire prostration, and the worst of it was, no doctor and no medicine within fifty miles.

I was in despair, when I remembered that in my trunk were two boxes of BRANDRETH'S PILLS that I had put in a private pocket when voyaging to the West Indies in 1862. I immediately swallowed twelve and some hot lemonade, and went to bed. In four hours they purged me profusely and I slept well; next day I took ten more, and after they operated I was almost myself. I took seven pills more the third day and was completely cured.

Yours truly, RICHARD M. LOCHE.

A CAREFUL EYE-WITNESS.

GOUVERNEUR MORRIS IN PARIS.

THE CORROBORATION OF HISTORY—AN INTERESTING DIARY — THE MURDER OF FOULON AND BERTHIER—AN OLD LETTER.

M. Taine, in that series of works which he proposes writing, "Les Origines de la France Contemporaine," has already given us, in his French Revolution, a most brilliant installment. It may be but a précis of history, but the author, with infinite industry in collecting all the facts bearing on this disturbed period, has been able, with consummate talent, to group these facts in the most interesting manner. In a preface to The French Revolution, M. Taine writes as follows, descriptive of his peculiar method, or the rule of compilation he has observed: "The most trustworthy testimony is that of the eye-witness, especially when this witness is an honorable, attentive, and intelligent man, writing on the spot, at the moment, and under the dictation of the facts themselves—if it is manifest that his sole object is to preserve or furnish information, if his work is not a piece of polemics planned for the needs of the case, or a passage of eloquence arranged for popular effect, but a legal deposition, a secret report, a confidential dispatch, a private letter, or a personal memento. The nearer a document approaches this type, the more it merits confidence and supplies superior materials. * * * For greater certainty I have transcribed as often as possible their own words. * * * As for allusions, if the reader finds any, he himself will have introduced them, and if he applies them, he is alone responsible for them."

Among the miscellaneous testimony furnished by M. Taine—military commanders, magistrates, Ministers, intendants, delegates, administrators, and persons in private life, men of every rank, profession, education, party, and country—it would have been exceedingly interesting for us in the United States to have found among this mass of authorities the expressions of some of those distinguished men who represented the young Republic in France at this period. M. Taine's thorough acquaintance with our own history, no doubt, has made him familiar with the names of such statesmen, who, after our liberties were achieved, were present at Paris. Perhaps the exact status of one of them, most distinguished for his ability, Gouverneur Morris, has not been well understood.

The rôle to be played by the American representative abroad at the period of the French revolution was a difficult one, and has, we think, never been as carefully studied as it deserved. It is not very certain but that some of the Americans were rather held in dread than otherwise by the latter. In a diary published in Sparks' Life and Memoirs of Gouverneur Morris, Morris himself rather guardedly expresses the uncomfortable feeling he unwittingly engendered by his presence. Morris is not satisfied with Lafayette, "who appears to be too republican for the genius of his country," and says "he liked moderate reform and deprecated revolutionary projects and principles," and adds, "it is not by high-sounding words that revolutions are made." Understanding the language very thoroughly, writing and speaking French with ease, Morris seems to have had very early forebodings of the terrible storm. On the 12th of July, 1789, he dines with the Marechal de Castries. There is an abbé there, Bertrand by name. The dinner is a gay one; but in the evening the poor abbé is afraid to go home, and Morris offers to escort the abbé to his lodgings, which Bertrand accepts. "His terror as we go along is truly diverting. As we approach the Rue St. Honoré his imagination figures a vast mob, and I can scarcely persuade him to trust to his eyes instead of his fears."

On the 13th of July Morris goes the Louvre. "he has previously ornamented my hat with a green bough in honor of the Tiers, for this is the f shion of the day, which everybody is obliged to comply with who means to march in peace."

Amid all these mutterings of the coming storm Gouverneur Morris still amuses himself in a certain way. As charming a picture as was ever drawn is that of a dinner where Morris is invited. It is the Countess de B. (Morris carefully gives but the initials) who is the hostess. The American gentleman, unfortunately, comes too early. In the drawing-room there is some dirty linen and no fire. A waiting woman removes the one, while a valet lights the other. The fire smokes, and the windows are opened. The dinner is execrable, though the hostess, a femme de lettres, and the guests are clever. But Morris' dinner makes him uncomfortable. The cook has put rancid butter in the ragoûts, and Morris hates bad butter. Let it be hoped that as th re was no lack of graceful conversation, that made up for the want of good food.

The writer of this, haunting among some old papers, found a letter of Gouverneur Morris which bears so directly on one of the most horrible episodes of the revolution—the first draught of blood, which seems to have maddened the excited people for more—that it has been thought worth while to reproduce it in full.

M. Taine, in the second volume, page 47, of Mr. Durand's excellent translation of The French Revolution, tells of the murder of Foulon, who was Councilor of State. "M. Foulon, a strict master, but intelligent and useful, expended 60,000 francs the previous Winter on his estate in giving employment to the poor. M. Berthier, an industrious and capable man, had officially surveyed and valued Ile-de-France to equalize the taxes. * * * The old man of 70 is brought to Paris, with a truss of hay on his head, a collar of thistles around his neck, and his mouth stuffed with hay. * * * He is carried off, dragged across the square, and hanged to a lantern; the cord breaks twice, and twice he falls on the pavement; rehanged with a fresh cord, and then cut down, his head is severed and placed on the end of a pike."

Sparks reprints some short notice of this terrible murder, taken from Morris' diary, but an error occurs, not of Morris, as Foulon is printed de Toulon.

For Morris' misfortune, it seems that he must have seen this gory head paraded right under his eyes. The letter, now not quite 90 years old, is before us, and has never been published before. Its handwriting is as clear and distinct as if it had been penned but yesterday.

PARIS 23 July 1789

My dear Madam

It is now almost five in the morning and I have been up all night writing, I will not however omit so good an opportunity of saying one word to you, to assure you that I live and love my friends. If I could take to you the Scene which I have lately witnessed you would from that Picture alone without further assurance be convinced of the ardent Desire I feel to return to my native Country. I was never till now fully apprised of the Mildness of American Character. A Scene was seen my Country-men enraged and threatening. It has even happened that in an Affray some Lives were lost. But we know not what it is to slay the defenceless Victim who is in our Power. We cannot parade the Heads of our fellow Citizens and drag their mangled Carcasses thro' our Streets. We cannot tear out Eyes on such Spectacles. The bare Idea excites Horror. What then will you think of Yesterdays Exhibition. An old man of seventy five a monsr. Foulon who has long been in the Kings Council and who lately accepted the office of Minister of Marine which contiserins all Circumstances was undoubtedly wrong and merited Marks of Resentment: but for this offence he was beheaded by the Populace his Head carried about the Town and his corse dragged after it thro the Streets. These mangled mutilated wrecks of human Nature were presented to his Son in Law who was brought to Town a Prisinor having been taken as he made his Escape thro France. That these People were bad vicious tyrannical I shall agree tho I do not Know it. But to be executed without Trial without being heard and then such horrid Spectacles. For the Innocent part of my Sex I suppose or rather of my Indescretion I saw this Head. There have been several others carried about but knowing it I avoided a Sight which I knew to be disagreable. on this occasion seeing a number of People running I turned round to know what was the Matter and then first Thing which presented itself was a Head stuck on a Pike pale and bloody. But it is time to quit this Scene. The next time I write to you I hope it will be in a more agreable Style. At present I am exhausted and yet I have not finished all which have to de Adieu Remember me affectionately to all your Family particularly to the little Captain and believe me with sincere affection yours GOUV MORRIS

THE EARTHQUAKE IN NOVEMBER.

From the St. Louis Republican.

In a special bulletin issued by the Missouri weather service the following interesting facts are given in regard to the earthquake, the shock of which was felt lightly in Missouri on the night of Nov. 18:

The shock of this earthquake was felt over an area of fully 150,000 square miles. The region disturbed forms an ellipsis, the major axis of which extends from Leavenworth, Kan., to Tuscaloosa, Ala., a distance of over 600 miles. The minor axis extends from near Clarksville, Ark., to a point midway between Cairo, Ill., and St. Louis, a distance of 300 miles. The southern boundary of this region has not been determined with as great accuracy as is desired. The region of greatest disturbance lies along the Mississippi from Cairo to Memphis. Here the shocks were universally felt. The walls of buildings could be seen to move and strong frame buildings creaked, as when every joint is strained by a heavy wind. At Trenton the shock was also so severe as to alarm some who lived in brick houses. Along the Missouri, from Glasgow to Lexington, the shock was also severe, awakening many families, who thought a heavy wind-storm was in progress. It appears that the shock was first felt at Glasgow at 11.37 P. M., St. Louis time. The shocks traveled rapidly down the axis of the ellipsis, reaching Cairo at 11.48 and Memphis at 11.50. The velocity of transmission is a matter yet under consideration, and will receive attention in a future bulletin. At Little Rock, Ark., the shock was also distinctly felt, although not observed at Clarksville, 85 miles further up the river. Earthquakes are to be expected over this region, and it is hoped that all interested in scientific work will hold themselves ready to make accurate observations on them, and report to this office.
